We have set up a mental health strategy steering group, with task group strategies examining various aspects. That involves representatives of the major stakeholders in the area. There has been full participation by the voluntary sector, the community health council and, most important, people who use the mental health services. Eight implementation task groups have been set up, commissioned through the mental health strategy steering group, to work towards implementing the strategy.

That cross-agency membership involving the users has produced some successful ideas to take the provision of mental health services in my constituency further forward. I am pleased to say that the group has also identified weaknesses in the structure, and is considering how we can reconfigure around those weaknesses. The partnership approach, which is what is happening in my area and also in the general thrust of the White Paper published earlier in the week, is the way forward. I shall give some examples.

Let us examine out-patient provision through community mental health teams for the under-65s. We are setting up locally based multi-disciplinary teams which are being implemented progressively. They are operating 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, and are working closely with GPs and their teams to improve services across the borough.

Boundary issues will need to be resolved, but the White Paper on the overall health strategy will get to grips with what has been one of the main problems in the health service over the years—the peculiar boundaries that do not reflect people's needs or where people live. I may say a word or two about Edgware hospital in that context. Had there been a proper configuration of health service boundaries, some of the problems brought about by the previous Government might not have occurred.

The facility for the community mental health teams for the under-65s based in the west of the borough has been agreed, and is to be sited within the area of the Edgware community hospital. It is a new facility that we are creating out of the wreckage left us by the previous Government. The time scale for the permanent site is being determined as part of the Edgware hospital review, which we promised and which we have delivered, to sort out what community facilities we can now provide on that site.

The strategy for the under-65s out-patient treatment has been agreed, and will work with the provision of GP link workers. That will enable communication between primary and secondary care. It will not act as a referral pathway for GPs, but it will provide a necessary service.

Another aspect of out-patient care covers the over-65s and the development of community health teams for them. Before the election and shortly afterwards, very little planning work had been carried out.

Mr. Spring: On the question of mental health facilities, is there a psychiatric ward at Edgware hospital? I should be very interested to know the answer to that question.

Mr. Dismore: I am coming to the provision of psychiatric facilities; it is a couple of pages further on. All will be revealed in time.

Mr. Bercow: I am especially pleased to listen to the hon. Gentleman's speech, because my mother is one of his constituents—although, sadly for him, not one of his supporters. In view of the importance of the findings of the Mental Health Act commissioners, following their visit to facilities in psychiatric units in November 1996, would the hon. Gentleman care to remind the House exactly what those findings were? Does he believe that they are valid, and might they cause him to support the Bill?

Mr. Dismore: I thank the hon. Gentleman for contributing,, and for doing so at such length. I am pleased that his mother is one of my constituents. I hope that, by the end of my speech, I might have persuaded her to my way of thinking, and might have her vote at the next election. I shall come in a moment or two to the issue of in-patient treatment in the area, but I now return to what I was saying before I was interrupted.

I was talking about the community mental health teams for the over-65s, and saying that, before the election and, indeed, shortly afterwards, very little planning work had been done. However, I am pleased that a great deal more has been achieved in the past few months. The multi-disciplinary planning group meets regularly in that context. We are looking at one of the models based on local facilities and expect that the community-focused CMHT will be sited with other aspects of mental health care—in-patient care, day hospital services and others—on the Finchley Memorial hospital site.

I deal now with in-patient services, and I was glad to receive a prompt in this connection. There has been a substantial and vigorous debate in the local community about how and where such facilities should be provided. One particular issue was whether they should be concentrated on one site at Edgware community hospital or whether there should be provision both at Edgware, in the west of Barnet, with a spread of facilities in the east of the borough.

As I have said, there has been a vigorous debate within the local community. I am pleased to say that it has resulted in a sensible suggestion by the local health authority, which originally wanted to concentrate facilities at Edgware community hospital, in the west of the borough. It has now decided to ensure that we have provision on both sides of the borough. There will be facilities at Barnet hospital for those who need services from the east of the borough.

The facilities that are being developed at Edgware community hospital will be second to none. This provision meets some of the points that stem from the second part of the Bill. At Edgware community hospital and at the rebuilt psychiatric unit at Barnet, on the Barnet general hospital site, patients will not have to worry about the issues which have been raised through the Bill. In the main, they will have individual rooms. There will be women-only areas. The design of the facilities will ensure that that happens.

There will be gardens that will reflect the multicultural nature of the Barnet community. That is the way forward. There are arguments about whether there is enough space left at Edgware community hospital to provide what is needed in the open area, but these are matters of detail that we are working through in the Edgware community hospital review process.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I know of a specific case involving someone who suffered an acute mental breakdown in recent times in the area covered by the acute psychiatric unit in Barnet. The person concerned was told by the general practitioner that, although a bed was available in the acute psychiatric unit at Barnet, she would not advise him to take it up, because he would be surrounded there by seriously disturbed people. It is that very case that first interested me in this issue.

Mr. Dismore: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. That is precisely why, in my area, we are reviewing facilities with a view to improving them. Day hospital services are being investigated so as to achieve the most effective way of meeting the needs of people with acute mental health problems who might otherwise need in-patient care, but who do not need the long-term support of day services. These are of a drop-in, therapeutic, community or employment-focused variety.

The Barnet day services are comprehensive, and include, for example, a work scheme. It is important, as we know from the Government's welfare-to-work programme, that we do not write off people who are disabled, whether their disabilities are physical or mental. We must try to ensure that these people are integrated by being brought back into society. They should be enabled to fulfil their full potential. One of the main failings of the previous Government was that they wrote them off. They left them on the scrap heap on benefit.

We must try to find ways of helping disabled people, both physically and mentally, and the welfare-to-work strategy will achieve that. We are helping with that process in Barnet through the work scheme and the job search service, which is run on a partnership basis with the Richmond fellowship.

I return to my point: that the way forward in mental health services is through partnership and not by placing the entire burden, as the Bill would do, on local health authorities. That is not the way forward for the provision of mental health services.

I take up the point made by the hon. Member for Macclesfield and others about the problems posed by the old Victorian hospitals. An issue that has been troubling those concerned in my constituency for some time is the re-provision from the Napsbury hospital, which is scheduled to close. Napsbury is an example of the large Victorian institutions. The facilities there are provided in huge wards. That is not the way to go into the next century caring for people who are especially in need of long-stay residential care. The assessment, planning, re-provision and support of people at Napsbury is much to the fore within the thinking of the health authority.

There was a real problem earlier in the year, before the election, when transfers began of people from Napsbury hospital to the alternative facility at Elmstead nursing home. The transfers were handled extremely badly when the previous Government were in office. Eight elderly people died because the transfer was extremely badly handled by the health authority and other agencies working under the previous Government.

It might be helpful if I lay before the House some of the conclusions of the very full review that was undertaken as a result of that very serious tragedy. We have to learn from the review, which concluded:

"The responsibility for ensuring the safe transfer of frail, elderly patients suffering from dementia . . . remains shared" between the health authority, the local health care trust and the private provider of the nursing home—again, the partnership approach. That is the way forward.

The report accepted that the patients who died were elderly, extremely frail and had severe dementia, and that their transfer

"did not adequately take into account all the risks associated with transfer."

Although there was no evidence of malpractice at the home, there were serious shortcomings. The report says:

"The planning, implementation and monitoring of the transfer was not carried out to the level of detail necessary to protect individual frail, elderly patients suffering with dementia.

The planning of primary care provision was not sufficiently addressed.

Insufficient consideration was given to the specific risks involved in this transfer and how these could be reduced or managed.

Inadequate time was given for new staff to become familiar with the frail, elderly patients who would be transferring from Napsbury . . . to Elmstead . . . and with their individual needs and care plans.

Mrs. Browning: I should be grateful if the hon. Gentleman would clarify something. Is he saying that he believes that the elderly frail are also mentally ill?

Mr. Dismore: I am referring to the elderly frail who are suffering from severe dementia, and who require mental health support. I said that. The detailed report, which I am sure the hon. Lady would like to read when she has time, gives examples of the problems.

I do not want to be accused of taking up too much time in the debate, because many of my hon. Friends wish to speak, and I want to ensure that they have time to say what they wish to say.

The review also concluded that the "appointment of the GP to provide primary care service on 1 April 1997"— only a week or two before the transfer—

"gave insufficient time to allow" the GP service to be adequately involved in the planning process.

"Communications across the organisations did not fully address individual responsibilities, programming, monitoring of progress

Communications between clinicians was inadequate.

The decision to alter at short notice the planned transfer timetable to Elmstead House was insupportable.

The knowledge of the general risk of mortality following transfer had not been adequately disseminated to those involved in the resettlement of patients from Napsbury Hospital"; and—this is where central Government have a role to play—

"There was a need for detailed central guidance from the Department of Health on the resettlement of patients from long stay settings."

I am pleased to say that, when this extremely critical report was published, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary agreed to meet me the day after. I had a very full and long discussion with him about the conclusions—

Mr. Nicholls: Did he get a word in edgeways?

Mr. Dismore: The hon. Gentleman asks from a sedentary position whether I got a word in edgeways—[HON. MEMBERS: "Did he get a word in edgeways?"] Well, I certainly did a lot of talking at that meeting, because I wanted to get home to the Minister the seriousness with which my constituents view the tragedy that happened in the local community.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his considerable courtesy in giving way yet again. Could the fact that the Minister has now left the Chamber have something to do with his experience in that earlier meeting with the hon. Gentleman?

Mr. Dismore: The hon. Gentleman makes an interesting point. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister has read the report and considered its recommendations extremely thoroughly, so, obviously, there is no need for him to hear me read them out again.

My hon. Friend the Minister was extremely concerned about what had happened. He expressed his view that there had been "insupportable and unacceptable management failures. Decisions were taken in the course of the transfer that were driven by bureaucracy and the market rather than the requirements of patient care. The result was a completely inadequate response to the needs of elderly, frail people."

In responding to the report on Elmstead nursing home, I am pleased to say that he gave the assurance:

"This new Labour Government is absolutely determined that lessons are learned across health and social services. We have already begun work on new guidance"— which, he promised me, will be published later in the year. The guidance will spell out safeguards for the transfer of elderly people from hospital—not only in my local area but nationally, for which the report called. I hope that he will be able to give me a progress report today on how far the guidance on national standards has developed.

We know from the experiences that we gained in that process the importance of ensuring that, yes, we consider closing down Victorian institutions, but that we do so in a properly co-ordinated way that recognises the need for national guidelines and continues to follow the partnership approach, which has been the theme of my speech.

Turning to other aspects of the re-provision from Napsbury, the Richmond Fellowship, in conjunction with MIND [illegible] working with the borough, successfully tendered for the provision of services for younger functionally mentally ill people resident in Barnet. The arrangement is that Warden housing association provides the accommodation, Richmond Fellowship provides the care services and MIND in Barnet provides the day services and other associated support, including advocacy. The scheme will be constructed from the start of the new year.

I return to the partnership approach, which is simply not recognised in the Bill. At the same time as the needs of the group of people who I have just identified have increased and the original service configuration has had to be re-examined, it is now agreed that very few of the group will be able to cope in any independent living arrangements. That is why such services are so important.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Will the hon. Gentleman comment on the views expressed a few years ago by Mrs. Major—not the wife of the previous Prime Minister—of the National Schizophrenia Fellowship? She said:

"As a magistrate, I am distressed to have to send somebody to prison from time to time because there is no secure accommodation elsewhere."

Such situations persist today. In talking about partnership, how would the hon. Gentleman respond?

Mr. Dismore: There is more than the one remedy of locking people up in psychiatric institutions. In fact, I was about to make a point on the way in which we are looking at the problem of mentally disordered offenders in my health authority area.

Since the beginning of this year, we have had a fully functioning mentally disordered offenders team. Its operational policies have been accepted by all agencies. As is to be expected, the team is frequently expected to interpret guidelines in respect of referrals and so forth, because we still have the boundary problem which I identified earlier and which I am sure this week's White Paper will address in due course.

The team for mentally disordered offenders has an ambitious programme of development, including a new court diversion service, improved liaison and communications structures, and the development of effective performance indicators and evaluation methods. It is expected that those will include self-reports by service users.

I am pleased to say that the team is working on a partnership basis with the police and the local probation service. It is located with the probation service and is working closely with the police as a consequence. That is the way forward—or one of them—in dealing with the problem which the hon. Member for Macclesfield identified. I shall return to what I was saying about Napsbury re-provision, having diverted myself to answer the hon. Gentleman's intervention.

The MIND development at Bunns Lane in the west of the borough—the part in my constituency—has been agreed, and the service will, to a large extent, complement that provided in Finchley. That represents a net gain in day services for the borough, as well as providing support for people resettled from Napsbury. It will result in a more balanced day service across the borough for those who need drop-in support, as the number of places [illegible] fully taken up by the resettled population. The development is due to open in October 1998, in new buildings that will be purpose-built. That takes us back to the Government's investment in mental health services. We must get rid of Victorian institutions, and provide the best possible buildings, as well as the best possible services, to ensure that people are looked after properly.

Communication is also important. As I said earlier, Members of Parliament and those outside need to bring home the problems of mental illness, and to try to improve public knowledge and understanding. We need to break down the hostility and fear. We are working hard locally to do that. At an early stage, the group recognised the need for a comprehensive and accessible guide to mental health services in Barnet, and subsequently supported a joint finance bid to enable MIND in Barnet to carry out research and publish such a guide.

I am pleased to say that the bid was successful: a guide was published recently, and has been praised as a clear and reasonable document making clear what facilities are available. That is a far more constructive approach than the Bill's narrow focusing on a small part of the whole. A further joint finance bid has been submitted for the employment of a short-term communications officer, whose post will be managed by the local trust. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to give us some encouragement about that bid.

The trust is employing a training development manager to work in the context of the joint mental health strategy. A commissioning programme has been set up; trainees join the commission when that is appropriate and practical, and there is potential for inter-agency cross-fertilisation in the course of seminars.

Three areas have been highlighted for next year: team development for community mental health trusts, working with people with dual diagnosis—the need for a co-ordinated approach to the problem of alcohol and drug addiction in conjunction with mental illness, which an Opposition Member mentioned—and the mental health needs of members of Barnet's Jewish community and ethnic minorities. It is important that we recognise the special needs of certain groups.

Dr. Whitehead: Are the examples of good practice that my hon. Friend has given being disseminated on more widely? Are other health authorities taking stock of what is being done in his constituency, and will they be taking some of those ideas up?

Mr. Dismore: That is an important theme in the White Paper, which was also highlighted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health when he presented the White Paper, and in subsequent press coverage. It is important for examples of good practice to be spread throughout the health service. I hope that, as the White Paper's policies develop, the examples that I have given will be disseminated more widely. The training programme in my local health authority involves a partnership approach, and a recognition of special needs in the community.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for New Forest, East for giving me the opportunity to raise the issues that I have raised, and to explain what the new Labour Government are doing, certainly in my area. I am glad to have been able to flag up the problems that can arise, and to tell the House how our Government are addressing them, vigorously, by producing new guidelines. I think that the partnership approach adopted by the Government, and a rounder view of mental health, represent the way forward; but they are not the way forward suggested in the Bill.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): We have been treated to a tour d'horizon longer than the introductory speech of my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis). The kindest thing I can say—I say it as one solicitor to another—is to remind the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) that Dr. Johnson said on a similar occasion that he would not speak ill of any man but he believed the gentleman was an attorney.

I shall curtail my remarks as much as I can to give the Minister the opportunity to say either that this Bill, like any private Member's Bill or any Government Bill, is not perfect but that it should go to Standing Committee to be improved, or to give Labour Members the opportunity to talk it out, which appears to be their intention.

Less contentiously, I echo Government and Opposition Members in complimenting my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East on the way in which he introduced the Bill. Introducing a Bill, whether as a Minister or private Member, is daunting. Those of us with experience of government, who have had help in assembling the material necessary for these occasions, can only marvel at what it must be like to do so without such assistance. The manner and style of his performance were remarkable.

One thing that has come across from the debate is that the people who get the worst deal as regards mental health treatment are often those whose background or propensities would give them no cause to think that they could ever get into such circumstances. Several instances have been cited of how the ordinary man in the street—the Minister or myself—could undergo an event so shattering that, perhaps for the first and only time in our lives, we need assistance.

The devastating effect that redundancy or job loss can have has already rightly been mentioned. I did matrimonial law almost exclusively when I was in private practice. Seeing the devastation that matrimonial breakdown can wreak on people who one would have thought were absolutely stable and capable of taking it makes one realise that we must ensure that such people, and everyone who needs the system, get appropriate treatment. The tragedy is that some 20 per cent. of those who suffer from acute reactive depression—I think that is the correct expression—take their own lives. The cruellest thing of all is that the statistics also show that such people, if they receive the right help, have the best prognosis.

Incredibly, one criticism of the Bill was that it is not ambitious enough. It is extraordinary for a legislature to say that, unless we can cure all the ills to which society is heir, we must not make any attempt at all. The point is at best naive and at worst bogus. If my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East had brought in a more ambitious Bill, he would have been criticised for trying to do things inappropriate for a private Member's Bill. We would have been told that it was far too difficult for a private Member to embark on such a radical piece of legislation, and that, if only he had come up with just one or two ideas that were capable of being handled, things would have been different. We can treat that idea with the contempt that it deserves.

We have already heard several times about the Bill's contents, so I shall be brief. The purpose of clause 1—the idea that a health authority should have a strategy and be required to report on it to the Secretary of State—strikes me as unexceptionable. The fact that the best may do it already is no argument for objecting to the requirement appearing in the Bill.

However, I freely concede that if, in due course, the House takes the view that that argument is not sustainable, the answer is simple: we either amend the provision in an acceptable way in Committee or delete it. It is the skill of my hon. Friend's Bill, as he said in a phrase that I felt I recognised, that the Bill enables the Government to dine à la carte. They can take the bits that they want and discard the ones that they do not want. Without making free with my hon. Friend's Bill, I think that it is possible to remove clause 1 and still have something eminently worth while.

I make it plain for the record that the Opposition believe that the Bill should be accepted and go into Committee, where it can be improved, as can any Bill. It is inconceivable that anyone could seriously argue that clauses 2 and 3 should not pass into law. The idea that there should be single-sex ward areas—not wards but areas—in all existing psychiatric units has to be right. The idea that there should be security devices to prevent unauthorised intrusion also strikes me as entirely right. To refer to the speech of the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones), I find incredible the idea that, because one favours less hospitalisation, women should not be entitled to the protection that they need from indecent assault and rape in those hospitals that have to exist.

Some two weeks ago, of the 101 female Labour Members of Parliament—I compliment the Labour party on having so many female Members—92 turned up to vote against the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, yet today, of the tiny number of female Labour Members who have come to the House, none can bring herself enthusiastically to stand by her sisters and say that the two anti-rape provisions in the Bill deserve to be passed into the law of the country. I find that shameful.

Mr. Boateng: There is a touch of nauseating hypocrisy about the hon. Gentleman's approach. If the Bill is such as to commend itself with such obvious force and vehemence to Her Majesty's Opposition, why did they not introduce a similar measure when they were in government?

Mr. Nicholls: One always knows when the hon. Gentleman is on a losing wicket, because he leaves behind his usual genial persona. As brick walls go, one has never seen better. Outside the House and sometimes inside the House, he is most genial. But it is my experience that when he knows that he has no case, he resorts to gratuitous abuse. Let me remind him of the point that has clearly escaped him so far. He is now in government.

I will tell the House in a moment the steps that the previous Conservative Administration took, of which Conservatives can rightly be proud. For the time being, the hon. Gentleman should accept that he is now in government. He has the good grace to smile. What he should be doing, in ways that I shall explain in a moment, is building on the good steps that the previous Administration took.

My hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East indicated the level of support that he had received. He has received the support of a consultant psychiatrist, Dr. Harris, the sub-dean of the Royal College of Psychiatrists. He referred to two other distinguished psychiatrists, Dr. Yonace and Dr. Tannock. Organisations up and down the land have said that they support the legislation.

It is worth quoting MIND. I do so not just because its views, of all views, ought to be taken seriously, but to make the point, as my hon. Friend was fair enough to do, that the organisation does not support every provision in the Bill. It says of the proposals in clauses 2 and 3:

"Mind's Stress on Women campaign which ran between 1992 and 1994 heard from women all over the country that they did not feel safe in services. Some talked of constant fear. Others chose not to use services because of the abuse that they, or women they knew, had experienced."

MIND gives two examples. A woman who wishes to remain anonymous—one can see why—said:

"I and a number of other women I know have had very bad experiences on mixed wards. A friend of mine was raped and I was harassed to death by men and the staff never intervened . . . The situation in the hospital was so awful I'd never go back there—you can't be ill in peace."

Another woman, whom MIND called "Carol"

"was raped while in a psychiatric hospital. The man had simply walked through the adjoining mixed ward into Carol's unattended dormitory and into her cubicle."

The Mental Health Act commissioners' national visit in 1996 has already been referred to, so I will not go into it at great length. It found that

"sexual harassment of female patients in psychiatric hospitals is rife. In just over half the wards visited it was discovered that women patients were being harassed by male patients. Problems included" indecent exposure,

"physical assaults and verbal harassment."

As the seventh biennial report of the Mental Health Act Commission identified:

"Safety for women on psychiatric wards is a major issue."

During the course of its visit it found that

"just over . . . (35 per cent.) of women have access to women-only sleeping areas . . . a quarter (27 per cent.) have to pass male parts of the ward to reach women-only toilets, baths or showers . . . a third (32 per cent.) have access only to mixed sex toilets, bath or shower facilities. A small number (3 per cent.) use sleeping areas also used by men."

As a result of those findings, in January 1997—the date will be significant because it was before the election—the NHS chief executive, Alan Langlands, set health authorities in England the objective of providing safe facilities for mentally ill patients in hospital that preserved their privacy and dignity. As I understand it—doubtless the Minister will say something about it in due course—the report that he produced in August 1997 showed that that objective had been met by less than half the health authorities—some 43 per cent.

The answer to the Minister's intervention about what the previous Government did is that we drew attention to the problems in the patients charter. It was that charter that told the public out there, not those of us who know about such things because of our particular interests, what was going on. It was drawn up in January 1995 and the progress made since then has meant that the agenda has been taken forward to protect some of the most frail and vulnerable women in society. The idea that we did nothing is absolutely wrong. Today, we are entitled to tell the Minister that the previous Government followed a creditable agenda, and we are asking him to build on it.

It would be accepted by those hon. Members who have heard me before that I never indulge unnecessarily in party political exchanges—[Interruption.] That only goes to show that not everyone knows me. I did not expect or intend to point out the track record of the previous Conservative Government. On matters such as this the public expect us to be able to debate without bringing in such political points. I was provoked into referring to our record by the Minister, who felt, unwisely, that he should draw attention to it. Our record was wholly creditable and the Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East modestly invites the Government to draw upon it.

Before I was provoked by the Minister, I mentioned the organisations that support the purposes of the Bill. As has already been said, SANE supports it, as does the National Schizophrenia Fellowship, which has stated that it "agrees with the principle of providing security within psychiatric units but would again encourage active consultation with those using the facility . . . to ensure a therapeutic environment which might be lessened by over-zealous security measures."

As I have said, SANE welcomes the Bill in similar terms and the British Medical Association generally supports it.

MIND has its reservations about clause 1. Yesterday, I had a long session with Margaret Pedler, the policy director of MIND, and I am extremely grateful to her for the time that she spent talking me through the implications of the Bill. She believes that the drawback with clause 1 is that it might have the effect in due course of distracting attention from other people—if I may use shorthand, less fashionable people—who might need to be cared for. She is concerned that the clause might be interpreted in such a way that resources are taken from one group of patients and concentrated on another.

If I thought that that was likely to happen, I would agree with Margaret Pedler's fears about the clause posing a great risk, but I do not believe that that would be a consequence of it, as drafted. I have discussed it with my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East, and it is not his intention that the clause should be seen to operate in that way. If Labour Members are seriously concerned that the problem identified by Margaret Pedler might arise, let them discuss it in Standing Committee. They could get rid of that clause if they wanted, because it is not essential to the Bill.

As for the contributions from Labour Members, I will not go through the litany of shame because I am sure that the press will be capable of doing so, but I was saddened when I listened to the hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Ann Keen), who used to be a nurse. In the past, she has been able to say what she does when asked by someone at the bus stop and—unlike the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) and me—get a reasonable hearing. When I said to her that, whatever her other reservations, surely as a nurse she would want at least the sexual harassment provision to go forward, she replied, "I will deal with that later in my speech." I listened carefully to her speech, but she did not do so.

We are all busy on Fridays. No hon. Member should be criticised for not showing up for a Friday debate. However, when a Member does turn up and when the Whips say, "We don't want the Minister to have to talk out the Bill: we want you to earn your spurs by doing it for him," that Member puts himself on record. I would not want to be a former nurse who had played a part in talking out this Bill—although perhaps that will not be what happens to it.

I was minded to speak for longer, but I shall not do so. The Minister and I have been in politics long enough to know that gratuitous abuse across the Dispatch Box will not deal with the concerns of people who back the Bill. He should remember that the person who has most helped my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East in framing the provisions is a long-standing member of the Labour party. That should be sufficient to make him realise that his response should not be to indulge in the sort of language and tactics he tried a few moments ago. There is a time for that sort of behaviour, but not on this sort of Bill.

The issues are as plain as they could possibly be—this Bill would protect some of the most frail and vulnerable people in society. It does not involve massive expenditure. Labour Members presumably feel that expenditure is all right sometimes, but they actually draw the line at putting locks on areas in wards to make sure that people cannot be raped and abused.

This is a modest Bill with modest proposals, which could go forward to Committee. If, ultimately, the Government were not satisfied in Committee, they could kill the Bill. We want to hear from the Minister today that either he will let the Bill go to Standing Committee, while reserving the right to kill it off in due course, or he will come up today with specific measures to implement clauses 2 and 3. If he does not do that, it will be a disgrace.

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for allowing me to take part in this debate. I congratulate the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on bringing the subject to the House for debate. I agree with the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) that it is almost forgotten in parliamentary debate and, indeed, in public debate.

Whatever we may think about the detail of the Bill, this is an invaluable opportunity to talk about the various issues surrounding mental illness and how we have historically provided and currently provide for people who are mentally ill—those who deserve our support either in recovering or through their illness. This debate is worth while in its own right, whether or not the Bill proceeds.

At first sight, the Bill is tantalisingly laudable. It enshrines a number of principles and aspirations which no one in the Chamber would seriously dispute. The difficulty to which Labour Members have drawn attention is not the principle of how to provide for the treatment and recovery of those suffering from mental illness, but whether the Bill makes a good job of doing that.

In my short time as a Member of Parliament, my approach to legislation has been to consider whether a measure improves what was there before; whether it is possible to achieve the aims of the legislation by other means, because we do not want to overburden those who provide services in this country with new legislation every other day; and, finally, whether—however well-intentioned the legislation—the net consequence of what is to be enacted will cause side effects that will eventually do more harm than the good that was intended. My view of this Bill is that it falls foul of at least two of those criteria. That is I why I am unable to support the Second Reading. Although its underlying principles may be laudable, I cannot support it in detail; I cannot support what the Bill would end up as, or the consequences that would arise were it to be enacted.

I shall make a case for my stance by looking at where we have come from and where we now stand in respect of the provision of services for people with mental illness. We have heard a lot this morning about the so-called water-tower mental hospitals. That phrase entered public parlance in 1959, when Enoch Powell MP, making a speech to the National Association for Mental Health, described the Victorian-style asylums as "isolated, majestic, imperious, brooded over by the gigantic water-tower and chimney combined,- rising unmistakable and daunting out of the countryside—the asylums which our forefathers built with such immense solidity."

As one who, at an earlier stage of his life, spent a long time advising health authorities and other agencies on how to provide and reprovide work rehabilitation, both within long-stay mental hospitals and in the community, when those hospitals had closed down, I can vouch for the accuracy of Enoch Powell's description. I have visited long-stay hospitals throughout the country and can tell the House that, when visiting one for the first time, if someone has been given confusing directions, they can soon orientate themselves by scanning the countryside looking for the water tower. By so doing, they find their way to the hospital, and also see the relative isolation it suffers from the rest of the town.

I want to correct one misconception, voiced by hon. Members on both sides of the House, about the background to those long-stay hospitals. It is relevant to our debate because, interestingly enough, the purpose of our Victorian forefathers in building those asylums was to provide the sanctuary described by the hon. Member for New Forest, East. Some of the foremost social reformers of the day were behind the move to build what we now call the water-tower hospitals. They did so because of the appalling conditions of treatment for people with mental illness that existed before those hospitals were built.

Those of us with an historical bent will know the history of the original Bedlam and what certain members of the upper classes regarded as the sport of going to Bedlam at the weekend to look at the lunatics raving there. The idea motivating the reformers of the Victorian age was that that was not the way in which we should treat people in a civilised society. They therefore developed hospitals in leafy surroundings and with clean air and nice grounds—indeed, several had hospital farms. They provided a secure environment—a therapeutic environment, I dare say—and sanctuary for those who, the reformers realised, needed such treatment in order to recover from their illnesses.

Sadly, that movement effectively came to an end toward the end of the Victorian era, and a substantial change in attitude came over the people who were subsequently responsible for provision. They regarded those hospitals not as sanctuaries, but as places of containment. They believed that those people should be placed away from society's view, away from towns; that they should be shuffled away into those hospitals, which became not sanctuaries, but prisons for very many people.

The hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) said succinctly that many people who had committed no other crime than to be slightly on the wrong end of what society believed to be the right thing to do found themselves incarcerated in long-stay mental hospitals as a result of having a baby out of wedlock or acting oddly in a public place. Eventually, they became institutionalised.

The main criticism to be made of those facilities as they were envisaged in Edwardian times and at other times early in the 20th century is that, by placing a person in such an institution, one often condemned them to life imprisonment because they found it impossible to get out of the system once they were in it. To a large extent, people became institutionalised after 20, 30 or 40 years in such an institution and were incapable of making a new life in the outside world if they were discharged—which often they were not.

The change came with the discovery and introduction of psychotropic drugs in the 1960s. It became possible to use medication and newly developed rehabilitative facilities to rehabilitate many people who had been placed in a back ward, away from public view. Some of the Victorian pioneers' original ideas concerning sanctuary were reintroduced. In a secure environment, work rehabilitation facilities, occupational therapy, community farms and art therapy were developed, with a view to re-establishing long-stay patients in the community.

The origin of the change in thinking about the reprovision of facilities in the community was the move to close the long-stay asylums—the water-tower hospitals. It was thought that people should not be incarcerated, that even people who had been in a mental hospital for a long time had a future, like anyone else, and that that future should be in society if possible.

I shall quote briefly the words of a consultant psychiatrist at the then Herrison hospital in Dorchester, who rejoices in the name of Dr. Donald Dick. He gives an apt description of the thinking behind such reprovision.

Mr. Spring: This is a fascinating insight into the history of mental institutions and the development of drugs. However, I suggest that the hon. Gentleman now focuses on the serious issues of current importance in the Bill, affecting the security of women patients especially, and that he addresses clause 2. If he does not, he will demean the whole process of our serious consideration of mental health in this country.

Dr. Whitehead: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his suggestion. However, in order to comment seriously on the issues that we are discussing, it is necessary to lay the groundwork so that people can understand what lies behind them. The hon. Gentleman mentioned security for women in hospital. That relates to the whole history of people being locked up in psychiatric institutions, as I have described.

Dr. Julian Lewis: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Whitehead: If hon. Members will stop intervening, I shall explain. However, I will give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Dr. Lewis: I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving way, albeit reluctantly. I do not see how the history of people being locked up in establishments has anything to do with the proposal that people who go into establishments, usually voluntarily, should be able to lock out people who intend to attack them.

Dr. Whitehead: I am happy to explain my views. I would have come to clause 2 later, but I will explain my views now. Important points have been raised. I share the hon. Gentleman's view that, if people are taken out of the community, either voluntarily or involuntarily—as the hon. Gentleman says, it is voluntarily in most cases—they must have a strong expectation that they are going to an environment that is safe and "therapeutic", as the Bill says—[Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman is not listening to my reply.

My comments on clause 2 relate to the history of people's incarceration in long-stay mental hospitals. I accept that the clause is honourably framed and well intentioned, and is intended to deal with an issue that has been raised in the debate. I ask hon. Members, however, to look at the detailed wording of the clause.

Mr. Nicholls: If the hon. Gentleman is concerned only about the detailed wording, I can give him some assurance. The matter can be dealt with in Committee. The public will want to know whether the hon. Gentleman is or is not in favour of women being protected from indecent assault and rape by proper security devices being placed on doors. Even the hon. Gentleman should be able to get his mind around that prospect in the time available.

Dr. Whitehead: I regret the aggressive tone of that intervention. The answer to the question is, of course, yes—there's a surprise. It is facile to assume that, because I agree that women should be safe in the hospitals to which they have been committed, either voluntarily or involuntarily, I have nothing further to say on the subject. The care, including treatment and rehabilitation, of people who suffer from mental illness is complex nowadays.

Proposed section 142B(b) refers to

"the fitting of appropriate security devices to all room and ward doors in all existing psychiatric units to prevent unauthorised intrusion."

That wording is unambiguous. By law, health authorities will have to fit such devices in all institutions where people who suffer from mental illness are being looked after.

I speak now from direct experience of looking at the way in which people lived in long-stay mental hospitals in the late 1970s and early 1980s. I looked at their daily lives, at what hope they had of resettlement in the community and at what facilities they enjoyed, whether work rehabilitation, occupational therapy or other activities. A balance must be struck—I understand that it is a complex and difficult issue—between security and ensuring that people in those institutions feel that they are in a genuinely therapeutic environment and will benefit from their stay. That issue has properly been raised today.

The reason why I answered yes to the question put by the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) is that of course I believe that security is important for women in long-stay mental hospitals, just as it is for everyone else. [Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman asked me a question, but I am afraid that he does not want to listen to my reasoned answer.

My concern—I hope that Opposition Members will accept it—arises from my knowledge and understanding of such environments: it is important to ensure that people within hospital grounds have the maximum opportunity to feel as free as possible within the hospital environment.

Dr. Julian Lewis: If the hon. Gentleman went to stay in a five-star hotel, there would be a lock on the bedroom door, which he could open from the inside but which no unauthorised person could open from the outside. That would not add to a sense of oppression or over-security. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that it would, I suggest that he take the lock off the front door of his home. I am sure that he has no intention of doing so.

Dr. Whitehead: The hon. Gentleman misunderstands the clause, which refers to "the fitting of appropriate security devices to all room and ward doors"— not just to bedroom doors. That requires local health authorities to fit a lock on every single door in long-stay mental institutions.

Dr. Lewis: The clause says "appropriate" security devices—appropriate, appropriate, appropriate.

Dr. Whitehead: With respect, the clause says that appropriate security devices should be fitted "to all room and ward doors".

The hon. Gentleman will agree, because this is his Bill, that every single room and ward door must have an appropriate security device, which means, unless my command of English is seriously amiss, some form of lock or method of securing the door.

The result is that in areas of long-stay mental health hospitals where people undertake precisely the sort of therapeutic activity that the Bill advocates, the doors will have locks. In my extensive visits to many mental hospitals, the only place where I have seen that regime carried out is Rampton.

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Gentleman puts himself at odds with every mental health organisation, so he needs to know what he is doing. If we are to take him at face value as a genuine and sincere person who is trying to ensure that good legislation gets on the statute book, why does he not tell the Minister that he wants the Bill to go to Standing Committee so that the wording can be considered?

Dr. Whitehead: My hon. Friend the Minister has already asked the NHS executive estates agency to issue advice, which I believe it has, on the security and design of psychiatric units. That advice concerns locking bedroom doors and safeguarding personal property, en suite toilet facilities and observation arrangements. The advice that has been issued does precisely what I have suggested: it ensures that areas of long-stay psychiatric hospitals that require proper security, for the reasons that have been expressed in the debate, are given that security.

I am attempting to distinguish between the blanket provision contained in the Bill—it is not easily amendable because it is at the heart of the principle of the Bill—

Dr. Lewis: It is easily amendable—the hon. Gentleman could delete the word "all".

Dr. Whitehead: What I appear to be having difficulty in getting Opposition Members to accept is—

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Gentleman's sincerity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Dr. Whitehead: I recall, Mr. Deputy Speaker, hearing the hon. Member for Teignbridge state that party animus or personal unpleasantness rarely enter such debates. I am sorry that that has occurred only a few minutes after he made that remark. It reflects poorly on how I understood the debate should be conducted and on how the hon. Gentleman said that it should be conducted.

I hope that the Opposition will carefully consider the wording, if the Bill proceeds. If we place a blanket requirement on a health authority to provide security everywhere, the health authority will be subject to legal action if, for any reason, it fails to do so. The side effect of ensuring such security could conceivably be immensely detrimental to the therapeutic environment that the health authority is attempting to provide.

My visits to numerous long-stay mental hospitals have taught me that the health authority and the hospital managers should be allowed some discretion to provide security in appropriate places, and to provide relative freedom and a therapeutic environment, also in appropriate places, subject to the security that the staff of the hospital can provide.

I accept that that is a difficult strategy, and that a careful interpretation of security is necessary. On various occasions in long-stay hospitals, I observed that tools were available in the therapeutic workshop. People who were severely mentally disturbed were encouraged to take on board the possibility that, if they were discharged, they might be able to go to work again—not necessarily waged work, but perhaps therapeutic work in the community.

While those people are in hospital, it is necessary for them to undertake such therapeutic work and to be trained to use a lathe, an adze or a hammer. However, if so many security devices are put in their way in, around, to and from the workshop that it bears no resemblance to anything that they might experience in the outside world, that will do little to promote the object of the exercise, which is to resettle people in the community, if that is possible.

The only place in which I saw provisions such as those that would be the logical outcome of the clause was in a high security mental hospital for the criminally insane, not in units that provide acute intervention and therapeutic recuperation prior to rehabilitation in the outside world. I hope that I have responded adequately to the question posed by Opposition Members.

As a result of the changes in attitude to mental health in Britain that I have outlined, we embarked on the care in the community programme, whereby we have reduced the number of people in long-stay mental hospitals from a population of 150,000 in the early 1950s to the 32,000 beds currently provided—an enormous and welcome decrease.

I intervened in the speech of the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) in the context of the continued provision of places in such long-stay mental hospitals, because we must distinguish between people who in previous generations were incarcerated for no good reason, against their will, in contravention of their human rights and in contravention of everything that we now believe is right in mental health provision, and people who require a brief respite—brief sanctuary—and the possibility of rehabilitation and re-establishment in the community once that episode has passed. We need to distinguish between the core provision—the 32,000 places—and the numbers originally in long-stay hospitals.

What we do not need to do is ask health authorities to plan for a number of beds as if we were re-creating the old long-stay mental hospitals. I understand that the Government have already asked health authorities to plan a service that will ensure that acute beds are available and will deal properly with the range of problems that it faces. The range of problems has widened in recent years.

I have already mentioned a particular hospital consultant. I shall now quote what he said about work in the outside world and what problems he saw facing the people who had been long-stay patients in his psychiatric hospital:

"The patients that I see are not usually so bothered by the loss or lack of income that comes from unemployment as they are by other feelings. Shortage of money is a difficult enemy but at least it is visible and there are some choices to be made in the combat. The real pain comes from the sense of uselessness, of not contributing, of not being able to describe oneself as part of the common endeavour . . . Unemployment is a strong predisposing factor in attempted suicide, the modern epidemic. Fifty per cent. of men of working age who attempt suicide are unemployed. The number of men in the age range of 20-35 is rising, as is the incidence of alcohol and drug related disorders. Surveys of patients in psychiatric admission units during Health Advisory Service . . . visits in early 1983 showed that as few as 5 per cent. of patients of working age have a job. Absence of paid employment is therefore a frequent accompaniment of mental illness or psychological distress. It may not be the sole cause, but it certainly makes the situation and treatment much more difficult."

As I said in an intervention, the care in the community policy was skewed by five years. While the old long-stay mental hospitals were being closed and before new provision was made in the community, many people were simply dumped in the community and left bereft of any services. That happened under the previous Government—whether or not it was their intention, it is what happened.

People who suffered the sense of uselessness and hopelessness to which the consultant referred find that they could not engage. All too often, they experienced what is known as the revolving door syndrome. They were readmitted to hospital because they could not cope. The facilities were not available, and they had to return to hospital, despite their best endeavours to stay out.

Mr. Simon Hughes: The hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) have spoken for more than an hour in total. Is it the hon. Gentleman who wants the Bill to be talked out, or the Government?

Dr. Whitehead: This hon. Gentleman has made it clear that he does not agree with the Bill. I believe that I need to make a case for not agreeing with it, which I hope I have done in some detail.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I confirm that the hon. Gentleman has made his case in some detail. Like the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), he has spoken for longer than I did when I introduced the Bill. He has served his purpose, and his Whips will have noticed; his duty has been discharged, if not honourably. Why does he not now draw his remarks to a conclusion so that my hon. Friend the Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) can make his speech and so that the Minister can talk out the Bill in person?

Dr. Whitehead: The reason why I wish to continue until the end of my speech is that it makes a coherent case. As far as I am aware, the House wishes to listen to coherent cases. If I sit down, halfway through making my case—

Dr. Lewis: Is it the hon. Gentleman's intention to favour the House with another half an hour of his ruminations?

Dr. Whitehead: One does not have to be halfway through a speech to make half a case. I am attempting to make an entire case that is based on a coherent train of logic, during which I shall attempt to introduce various facts relating to it. Those two approaches are not necessarily conterminous in time.

The result of the community care policy introduced by the previous Government and the sad dissonance between the emptying of long-stay hospitals and the reprovision of facilities have meant that people suffering from mental illness, often severe, have suffered a severe diaspora. They are found in many different manifestations, not only in the old long-stay hospitals.

For example, it is estimated that about 60 per cent. of those who are long-term rootless have mental health problems, some of them severe. It is estimated that thousands of people who are suffering from severe mental health problems, or potential problems, are on remand for crime. They need not punishment for crimes, but support and treatment to allow them to live a life that they want to live that does not involve committing crimes.

It is estimated that about 40 per cent. of acute admissions involve people who have multiple problems relating to mental health. They have the problems that stem from having a severe and debilitating mental illness. At the same time, they are suffering from related problems associated with drugs and alcohol, which also need to be appreciated.

Against that background, we should say to health authorities, "We shall expect you to ensure that your services for people with mental health problems are the best that you can achieve. You should provide acute beds, rehabilitative services and support for people living in the community. Overwhelmingly, if you possibly can as a health authority, you should ensure that people are not admitted to hospitals in the first place so that they remain in and are supported in the community, and can return fully to the community when their particular episode of mental illness has passed." We should say all those things to health authorities.

We should also say to health authorities, "We shall ensure that you do all these things by allowing you to take seriously the complexity of the problem with which you are faced." There is the nub of the problem that is presented by the Bill. The Bill prescribes certain actions as a trump on all other actions so that the health authority has to do certain things, possibly to the detriment of other things.

Let us take, for example, people who are suffering from mental illness and a multitude of other problems. There is a need for new teams that can deal with multiple problems. We tend to have mental health teams that understand mental health and alcohol, and drug abuse teams that understand alcoholism and drug abuse. The idea of having teams that understand all those problems and the often complex actions that need to be taken to rehabilitate and return life chances to someone who has a multiplicity of problems is often not taken on board.

If the Bill were to be given a Second Reading—I return to the criteria that I mentioned when I first rose—the criteria that we have to bear in mind, one of the criterion is, or one of the criteria is—I am sorry. A criterion that we should be concerned about—one of the criteria is—[Interruption.] Conservative Members will make me continue for even longer.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I believe that, in a former life, the hon. Gentleman was a professor. May I take it for granted that he was not a professor of English grammar?

Dr. Whitehead: I cannot say that I was a professor in English grammar. Were I to be a professor of English grammar, I can assure the hon. Gentleman that I would continue in a much more tortuous way than I have.

One of the criteria that were at the heart of my checklist of how we should judge any legislation is whether there are any other unintended consequences of the proposed legislation that would outweigh the benefits.

My conclusion is that, first, there will be an unintended consequence in requiring health authorities to take action that they often know in their hearts will not be the best combination to deal with the very real issues that they face. Secondly, they will be required to implement a regime in their long-stay acute admission hospitals which they know is not conducive to the outcome that they wish to achieve.

That is why I oppose the Bill. I applaud its sentiments, but I am afraid that I cannot support it. I trust that Opposition Members will accept my sincerity in so doing, and that they will also trust my sincerity in my hope that the Government will take the difficult and complex action that is necessary to deal with the real issues that I have raised.

2 pm

Mr. Richard Spring (West Suffolk): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis). Rarely has anybody introduced a debate about something of such importance with such clarity and sincerity. I know of the extraordinary amount of work that he has undertaken in consulting individuals and organisations to bring coherence to the Bill and to present it to the House this morning. I unreservedly support him, and congratulate him on what he has done.

I do not propose to speak for very long, because we are all anxious to hear the Minister's reaction to the Bill. I am pleased to say that, on many issues, there appears to have been something of a consensus across the Chamber today, although we had a rather wild walk in the woods from two hon. Members on the Government Benches. At one point I felt that, rather like in a 747, an oxygen mask might just appear in order to give the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) some sustenance, but that did not happen. From the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) we had an interesting long diversion into the history of psychiatric ailments and the incarceration of people in the past.

It is true that in the past 20 years there has been a huge change in people's understanding and perception of mental illness. I entirely welcome it. There is not a family in the land who has not directly or indirectly been impacted in different ways by mental illness. Anybody who has seen it at first hand, or, indeed, as a Member of Parliament, knows the anguish and agony that it can cause.

There is no doubt that there has been a rise in psychiatric disorders in the past generation—much of it appears to be stress-related—schizophrenia, phobias, anxieties, addictive ailments, chronic depression and compulsive eating disorders. Twenty years ago, nobody had ever heard of chronic bulimia—it was not even defined as a word. The whole point about the Bill is that, in essence, it is beginning to address the very different mental disorders that have arisen and that will undoubtedly continue to arise as the way of life changes in our country.

In providing separate therapeutic environments, the Bill addresses a real and sensitive need in the way in which people who, tragically, suffer from mental disabilities or mental illness can be treated in proper and appropriate surroundings. The Bill addresses widely different needs and widely different acute mental illnesses.

Although it is true that the Department of Health requires health authorities to prepare a strategy for the provision of a comprehensive range of mental health services, in practice we know that that does not happen adequately. The key area of in-patientcare facilities needs to be specifically addressed, and the Bill does precisely that.

I pay tribute to Suffolk Health and Mid Anglia community health trust, with which I have worked on mental health issues since becoming a Member of Parliament. I have frequently visited ward G8 of West Suffolk hospital in Bury St. Edmunds, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley), to see for myself the conditions there and discuss with psychiatrists mental illness and the treatment of those who tragically suffer from it. I have often brought such issues to the attention of the House.

I should like to mention one aspect of the problem, which I ask the Minister to think about. It is described in a letter sent to me by somebody with whom I have considerable contact, and for whom I have considerable professional respect. Dr. Webb, the consultant psychiatrist at West Suffolk hospital, wrote:

"In the past month for a period of two weeks ending just over a week ago it was virtually impossible to admit either male or female adults of working age . . . to an acute psychiatric bed within reasonable reach of West Suffolk.

Male and female admission beds on Ward G8 of West Suffolk Hospital were filled immediately they became available but it was necessary for ward staff to check on a daily basis where the next available bed was, in the event that admission was unavoidable. Over the weekend of 23rd/24th November we confirmed that there was no available bed in the counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire or Essex. Female beds were located in Boston, South Lincolnshire and in Leicester . . . The situation reached its most extreme on 1st December when the nearest female bed we could locate was in Hereford, a full day's journey by emergency ambulance had we needed to take advantage of it."

I ask the Minister to listen carefully to such comments. Undoubtedly, there is considerable pressure on psychiatric wards, due to the rise in the incidence—it would appear—of people who are suffering from mental illness for one reason or another, whether temporary or not.

Making that point and urging that the provision of beds be kept firmly in mind does not detract from the importance of care in the community for those who have mental problems. From talking to professionals in Suffolk, the feeling is that, certainly in that county, care in the community has worked reasonably well. There are now only nine beds for medium and long-stay patients under the age of 65 in west Suffolk. It is important to realise that the spectrum of provision needs to be built on as we address the problem in years to come.

The important thing about the Bill is simply this: as our understanding of the needs of people who have suffered or suffer from mental illness changes and progresses—there have certainly been significant changes of attitude over the years—we have come to appreciate that issues of single-sex psychiatric accommodation and ward provision need to be properly addressed. Although, in practice, such accommodation is provided in some parts of the country, it is not universal. The Bill seeks best practice across the country.

A balance must be achieved. There must be areas in certain psychiatric wards—I have seen them in my local hospital—where both genders can mix freely in certain circumstances, but it is absolutely right, for all the reasons suggested by hon. Members, that there are also areas where women particularly can feel secure and safe if they feel threatened in any way. As the Mental Health Act Commission pointed out, and as a number of hon. Members have mentioned, it is absolutely unacceptable that, in this day and age, there is inadequate access for women to lavatories and areas where they can be private and isolated from men. The Bill seeks to address that problem, at least in part.

It is true that, over the past generation, there have been considerable improvements in the treatment of diseases or ailments such as schizophrenia and psychotic behaviour, and in our ability to prevent relapses; but individuals can deteriorate very quickly. It is important for us to take care of people, and to deal with their specific therapeutic needs in in-patient facilities, as long as it is done in an appropriate way. All that is part of a spectrum of provision that I believe to be crucial.

The Bill merely amends an existing Act. It is narrow and relatively costless, and I feel that every hon. Member should be able to support it. If hon. Members feel uncomfortable with some aspects of it, that is no reason to reject it outright. Given the importance of the issue, it is only right for a Standing Committee—perhaps a Special Standing Committee—to be set up to examine it properly.

An Opposition Member described mental health as the Cinderella of the NHS. I agree with that description, but, as our understanding of mental illness continues to improve, we must try to deal with it in a way that is appropriate to the needs of the age in which we live.

The Bill addresses key aspects of the protection and security of, in particular, female patients, and demands that health authorities draw up an appropriate strategy to deal with some of the main problems of mental illness. It is a Bill whose time has come. If the Government damage it irreparably, they will do a disservice to all who take a genuine interest in mental illness, all the organisations that lobby for the mentally ill, and, indeed, our constituents and their families.

2.12 pm

Mr. Tony McNulty (Harrow, East): Because of the time, I will be brief.

The hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning) took umbrage earlier, but I was attacking her Government's lack of activity rather than her own record, which is commendable. If she felt that I was attacking her, I humbly apologise.

On the whole, the debate has been productive, but I was less than happy about two key elements. The first is the arrogance of Conservative Members, who seem to assume that, if we do not take the route outlined in the Bill, nothing will happen. Things are already happening; Conservative Members should catch up with what is happening in this and other areas of the health service, and help us.

I do not doubt the sincerity of the hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis). I congratulate him both on his success in the ballot, and on his splendid speech. If I were being nasty—like the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), who is rather intemperate this morning—I would welcome him in his new, more genteel manifestation: he is no longer the muck-raker that he was in the 1980s. But that is by the by.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I thank the hon. Gentleman for showing us that, while he seems on the face of it to be being polite, he is really reverting to the true style that lies beneath the surface of his gentility.

Mr. McNulty: Many thanks. To use the words of a stimulating intellectual sedentary intervention from the hon. Member for Teignbridge, "You started it."

I am mindful of the time. I took notice of what the hon. Member for New Forest, East said. I found the comparison between a broken leg and a breakdown useful. I have some personal knowledge of friends who have gone through such terrible periods. Anyone would take a broken leg over a breakdown. He was right to identify the problems and to focus on the vulnerable, but the Bill does not offer solutions. It does not offer the sanctuary and asylum that is sought. For us to dine a la carte, there needs to be something on the menu; in this case, there is nothing but what the Government are already doing.

Mr. Colvin: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McNulty: No, I have only a minute.

To those who argued that a Standing Committee should have the chance to improve the Bill, I say, let the independent review group discuss the matter. With the best will in the world, any Standing Committee that we can offer will be as nothing compared with the expertise of the group's membership or that of bodies such as the National Schizophrenia Fellowship, SANE and MIND.

Let them discuss the serious issues raised in the Bill. Let the group work with the Government to develop some of the points made by the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring). If we are to make progress, hon. Members should work with what is finally, after 18 years, on the table. I again congratulate the hon. Member for New Forest, East on raising the matter. In that spirit, I hope that, after today, all hon. Members, if they are serious, will work with the Government on this.

It was disgraceful for the hon. Member for Teignbridge to suggest that the absence of female Labour Members meant that they do not care about the vulnerability of women in mental health institutions to rape and assault. Anyone, including jumped-up lawyers sitting on the Front Bench—[Interruption.] I meant the Conservative Front Bench, I hasten to add—can play the silly game of how many Members are sitting on each side of the House.

We could have said the same last week about the special educational needs debate. I do not suggest that the absence of the hon. Member for Teignbridge meant that he does not care about children with such needs. He should withdraw the remark and apologise, or at least give it serious thought in his taxi home.

2.17 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Paul Boateng): The House owes the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) a debt of gratitude for bringing this subject before the House. He did so with great feeling and intellectual force. Almost without exception, the other contributions were of the highest quality. Hon. Members brought to the debate experience of their constituencies, and of the concerns and problems of their constituents and friends. Their previous experience of the matter qualified them to speak.

The House's concern about mental health is rooted in the anxiety about community care that exists in the public we seek to serve. That is the concern which the hon. Gentleman, in introducing the Bill, seeks rightly to reflect.

One of the most powerful speeches today came, not surprisingly, from the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). He draws on an unparalleled experience in the House on Social Services and Health Select Committees. He draws on that experience in a way that always commands respect. It did today.

I have had the advantage of considering the report of the Social Services Select Committee to which the hon. Gentleman referred. I commend it to the House. The lessons it sought to teach the House and the then Government apply as much today as they did then. Most powerfully, the Committee of which the hon. Gentleman was a member said in the 1984–85 Session:

> "The stage has now been reached where the rhetoric of community care has to be matched by action, and where the public are understandably anxious about the consequences."

That was some 13 years ago. Today we might say exactly the same thing.

[Mr. Paul Boateng]

It must be said—I do not say it in a spirit of party political acrimony, but nevertheless I say it—that not enough has been done in the past 13 years. It is as a result of inadequate action on the problem over the 18 years of Conservative government that we have reached the pass we are in today, when the hon. Member for New Forest, East finds it necessary to introduce this measure. I owe it to the House—I intend to discharge this function in full—to explain fully what action the Government intend to take.

We shall begin by making sure that the NHS is put on a sounder footing. That is why a number of my hon. Friends have made reference to the NHS White Paper. The internal market has not helped the situation. I do not put it any higher than that for the purposes of today's debate, because there are other matters that we must deal with, but the reform of the internal market is essential to create the context in which it will be possible to deliver a comprehensive mental health service. With the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in that regard, that process has begun.

However, we need to go on from there. The same Social Services Select Committee rightly made the point that it was necessary to understand that community care would never be resource-neutral. I owe it to the House to make it clear that we accept that community care is not resource-neutral. I only wish that, when the Conservative party was in government, it had backed community care with the resources which at that time were made available by the sale and disposal of the sites of the old watchtower hospitals. Nevertheless, it did not happen. So we have to begin where we are.

I want to announce today that we shall make available some £5 million to mental health services to ease the pressure on acute beds this winter by buying extra residential or 24-hour nursing home places. That is important because those places of security, whether within the context of a hospital or without, make a valuable contribution to the crisis we face.

I want to draw the House's attention to another part of the report by the Select Committee on Social Services, which urged the House then, some 13 years ago, to face the fact that some people need asylum. I accept that, and the Government accept it. I also accept, however, as it said:

> "Asylum can be provided in a physical and psychological sense in the middle of a normal residential community: traditionally indeed, in the midst of a busy church."

It is right to recognise that, when we talk about places of tranquillity, to which the hon. Member for New Forest, East rightly referred, we have a duty to ensure not only that such places of tranquillity exist within district hospital and other hospital provision, but that community provision offers places of tranquillity. That is why we need the flexibility which is at the core of the Government's approach. The Bill presents some difficulties for me, because I fear that it would reduce an element of flexibility that must be present.

I want to make it clear that we will underpin our strategy with resources. We will increase next year's mental illness specific grant by £6 million to £73.3 million, an increase of 9 per cent. That is occurring in circumstances according to which there was no intention on the part of the Conservative party to make any such increase. It is money that we are making available for that purpose.

We will use the grant in two ways. It is intended that £2 million will be spent to extend the grant for services for children and adolescents with mental health problems. Local authorities will be eligible to bid for that money. That is vital when one considers the increase in the number of young men who are taking their own lives in circumstances about which, quite frankly, we as a nation should be extremely concerned. I know that the hon. Member for New Forest, East believes that his Bill would address such circumstances.

We will also be making £4 million available to the local authority mental health partnership fund to promote partnership working with the NHS and other agencies. We must take on board the vital contribution that is made not only by local authorities but by voluntary and charitable organisations. Hon. Members have drawn on such organisations' expertise and commitment in their constituency work and in their previous contributions to debate in the House. We know how much good work is being done out there, and new money will back it up.

We have gone beyond that, because we are concerned to make sure that the NHS responds. Both the funds I have mentioned will be used to foster local innovative projects and to develop best practice. That is of key importance.

We will go beyond that, however, because we take the view that it is necessary to find additional moneys, and we will do so. Some £4 million will be available in 1998–99 for the development of NHS mental health services, matching the local authority partnership fund. That is what we have to do to make a reality of the improvement in provision that we are concerned to bring about.

Dr. Julian Lewis: I thank the Minister for his generosity in giving way, and for the money that he is making available. Will he tell us, however, whether any of that money will be used to address the specific concerns in my Bill: that people cannot get into acute beds; that locks need to be fitted on doors; and that single-sex ward areas should be provided?

Mr. Boateng: We certainly intend that the money should be applied in such a way as to do just that.

I should now like to consider the specific concerns highlighted in the Bill. We have made it clear to the NHS that we expect the policy that is already in place to be carried forward. As for the NHS approach to mixed-sex wards, we expect it to take seriously the commitment that the Government have made, and will implement, on safety and security on wards.

Let us be very clear about what we are doing. We have been told by a substantial number of health authorities that they will not be able to deliver the objectives that have been set until after April 1999. That is not acceptable. We expect them to ensure that appropriate operational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients.

We expect them to meet the requirements of the patients charter. We expect them to provide safe facilities for patients who are mentally ill, in order to safeguard their privacy and dignity.

That is why we have set in place a review, with health authorities, of any target that has been set after April 1999, and to consider what scope there is to bring that forward. A central monitoring system is being developed which will provide further regular information on authorities' performance against those objectives—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday 16 January.

Guy's Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

2.32 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark, North and Bermondsey): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise the subject of Guy's hospital and the London health review, within a few days of the expected announcement of the results of the review.

In opposition, the Labour party made a number of welcome and ambitious promises about the national health service. For example, it made a general promise to save the NHS. It also made many particular promises. One, oft repeated, was to save Guy's hospital.

I have five different leaflets produced by the Labour party and circulated by my opponent during the general election. On each of them is a sentence or two similar to:

"Shadow Health Minister Chris Smith has already pledged . . . that he will stop the Guy's closure programme on Day One of a new Labour government . . . Remember—if the Tories get back into government, then Guy's will close."

Well, the Tories did not get back into government—there is a Labour Secretary of State for Health and Labour Ministers. Today, before the announcement of the outcome of the London health review, I seek to ensure that the Labour party remembers its pledge. Labour said things like, "Others will talk, but only we can deliver." Now comes the time of truth.

On 20 June, the Secretary of State announced the details of the Government's review of health care in London. He announced that the review would be carried out by an independent advisory panel and, at that time, I welcomed the extent and the nature of the review. We now know that the review panel's report has gone to Ministers, but it has not yet been published. Will the Minister tell us explicitly when we can expect the report to be published; and do the Government intend to allow an interval between publication of the report and publication of their response to the panel's recommendations?

Day one of a Labour Government has passed; indeed, it is 32 weeks today that Labour entered office—more than 201 days. It is now clear that the future of Guy's hospital does not lie with the review panel; it has moved on to Ministers' desks and is clearly in the Government's hands. Today's debate represents a final effort to persuade the Government not only of their responsibility, but of the appropriate decision that I hope they will soon announce.

For those who are not aware, Guy's hospital is the older and more academically prestigious of the two hospitals that now form the Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital trust. The background is that the previous Government endorsed a strategy to run down Guy's hospital—to reduce the number of beds from about 1,000 to about 100 and move large numbers of its internationally renowned services away from the London Bridge site. That was a political decision by the then Secretary of State, and Labour Ministers will have to make an equally political decision on whether they follow the recommendations of the independent advisory panel chaired by Sir Leslie Turnberg, either in part or in whole, or whether they reject them.

The public do not yet know what the recommendations are, but Ministers do. Labour will be forgiven for the fact that they did not save Guy's on day one of a Labour Government. However, by the people who use Guy's and work there and by the million and more people who sent to the House in the previous Parliament a petition in support of the retention of Guy's hospital—one of the largest petitions ever presented to Parliament—the Government will be forgiven only if they act to save Guy's when they make their announcement in the very near future. I hope that the Government understand that there is both huge public support and an extremely strong set of arguments for their reaching precisely that conclusion.

I notice that, coincidentally, there is large article in today's Evening Standard by the health correspondent Jo Revill, who interviewed the new chief executive of the King's Fund, Rabbi Julia Neuberger. The quote at the top of the article is:

"Labour must listen to the people on London hospital closures and health care."

I am sure that Rabbi Neuberger's strong views will also be heeded.

The Minister used to work within the shadow of Guy's hospital at B. M. Birnberg & Co., solicitors in my constituency. His old firm is one of the strongest advocates of the hospital's cause, for which I am grateful. He will know that Guy's is a three-phase hospital development. The original hospital, built in the 18th century, has given way to something that has effectively been rebuilt in its entirety since the last war.

New Guy's house was built in the 1950s. In the 1970s, to mark the hospital's 250th anniversary, a 30-storey tower was built, which is now one of the great—although perhaps not architecturally—landmarks south of the river. The third building, Thomas Guy house, has just been opened for public use. The Queen, who opened the second building in 1976, has agreed to open the third building on 18 March 1998.

It would be nonsense and a scandal if the Queen were to be invited to open the third phase of what was the flagship hospital in the national health service at a time when the Government had endorsed the trust's proposal to mothball one of the buildings, not to use as many as eight floors of the tower building and not to use much of the brand new Thomas Guy house for the purpose for which it was built. It would also be nonsense if, during the next year or so, public money were spent on building other NHS buildings to do what the Guy's hospital buildings were specifically designed to do.

In the few minutes available, I shall present to the House the most up-to-date evidence that Guy's is needed as an integral part of the network of health services in London and beyond, and I shall do so in the context of previous debates, but without replicating any of the arguments that were made in them.

This is our fifth debate on Guy's hospital in the past four years. This is the fourth consecutive year in which there has been such a debate. Not all the previous debates were initiated by me; one was initiated by Conservative Back Bencher Sir Roger Sims when he represented Chislehurst, and the case for Guy's hospital has been widely supported from both sides of the House by hon. Members who are now Ministers and by members of the current Opposition. Uniquely, this fifth debate is probably the last chance to put the very strong case for Guy's hospital before a decision is taken.

The Tomlinson report, which all those involved in London health matters have studied, decided that there was no need for four accident and emergency departments in south-east London, and effectively deemed Guy's to be the most expendable, but the recommendation was acknowledged to be based on data that have since been shown to be flawed and inaccurate. Sir Bernard Tomlinson, who produced the report, said that himself. As long ago as 1995, in an interview with the Evening Standard, he "admitted that he should have had more statistics in his possession before he made the recommendations that led to . . . the run-down of Guy's Hospital".

Those recommendations were based on the assumptions that demand for emergency services was falling and that resources would be transferred from the acute sector to the community sector, reducing the need for London or south London hospital care. National and local trends over the past five years have disproved those assumptions.

Attendances at A and E at both Guy's and St. Thomas's are rising rapidly. That trend in emergency admissions is mirrored throughout the United Kingdom, especially in inner-city areas. The statistics matter, so I shall give them to the House. At the moment, there are just under 75,000 attendances per year at Guy's and just over 90,000 attendances at St. Thomas's: 165,984 attendances in all.

Assuming a 9 per cent. growth in accident and emergency attendances during the next five years, matching the growth in the previous five years, attendances at the two hospitals will be more than 212,000 in five years' time. Attendances at Guy's alone are projected to increase to more than 111,000. The relevance is that that number of attendances rivals and exceeds the numbers at some of the biggest and busiest A and E departments in the UK, yet there is still a proposal, as of today—a legacy of the previous Government—to consolidate both A and E departments to give an accident and emergency department attendance well in excess that of any other hospital in the United Kingdom, and way above the recommended size of any casualty department and accident and emergency unit.

The biggest accident and emergency department in the whole of England is Nottingham, which handles 127,000 attendances a year. The biggest in Scotland handles 91,000 attendances a year, and the biggest in Wales handles 87,000 attendances a year. It is clear that one hospital—at the moment it is proposed that it be St. Thomas's—not only could not cope with 200,000 annual attendances but should not be asked to cope with them. Hospitals generally cannot cope with that many people.

That is not just my view. The Minister may remember the Audit Commission's recent report on accident and emergency services. It made it clear that the minimum number of attendances per year should be 50,000. The commission argued that, if there were fewer than 50,000 attendances, it was difficult to defend accident and emergency departments, but that, if there were more than 50,000, their existence was justified. Guy's is likely to cope with double those figures.

Even if some of the work load were taken elsewhere and even if the hospital could cope, we are looking at one hospital over the river taking almost double the number of attendances it has been designed to take, in its expanded form. It is obvious to anyone who has looked at the accurate and up-to-date figures that, if anybody were—I put this carefully—mad enough to follow through that proposal, there would be hugely longer waiting times, poorer outcomes and probably a total inability by the local trust to cope with demand.

I do not know what the recommendations are, but I ask Ministers to look at them in light of the latest figures I have given. They should accept that, on the basis of the figures and the academic support for them, there is a continuing need for the accident and emergency department at Guy's hospital.

The old plan skewed provision in a way that was almost impossible to justify. The current idea is that Guy's will be a planned care centre and that St. Thomas's will take the acute and emergency care. One might think that that implied that there would be an equal number of beds at each site, but, in fact, the proposal is for the opposite. Guy's has 400 beds, but the current proposals—which have varied hugely even during this year—are that there should be about 153 NHS local hospital trust beds at Guy's. One hundred of them will be for urology and orthopaedics, and 50 will have no very discernible use.

If the proposal goes ahead, apart from the illogicality of the odd 50 beds, we shall end up with the site that has all the out-patients, the site that has all the space, the site that has all the buildings and the site that has the medical and dental hospital having barely 100 patients. That is also mad. If we are to have a premier world teaching hospital, we need some patients with whom to teach students. We need to integrate planned care—elective care—for out-patients and in-patients. I accept that one can concentrate acute services on one site; that is perfectly logical. It is, however, illogical to say that we do not need all the specialist services for planned care to be in the same place as the specialist services for day admissions.

I give the Minister an example. We have just built, as part of Thomas Guy house, all the new wards for the ear, nose and throat specialty. A contract is waiting to be signed which would rip out the wards for that use and would transfer patients across to the other hospital site, although out-patients would still go to the Guy's hospital site. That is illogical and a huge waste of money, because it is likely to cost about £1 million just to remove the wards.

We would have a transfer of beds producing an absolutely illogical under-provision at Guy's under a plan that would not provide enough beds across both sites. I stress to Ministers—I think that they are sympathetic to this point—that all parts of the country need adequate beds. We need, of course, to have adequate services generally, but not having enough beds is the crisis that all Ministers have to face up to. I hope that they will be brave and strong enough to do that. If they are, we shall support them.

The United Medical and Dental School of Guy's and St. Thomas's, which, as a result of legislation passed in the previous Parliament, has just been merged with King's college in the Strand, is one of the most highly rated medical and dental schools not just in the UK but in the world, according to the latest medical school assessment. The dental school is the only one in England with a five-star research rating, and the medical school is one of only a small number with a four-star rating. Guy's continues to offer unique opportunities for first-class teaching. If it is to sustain its worldwide reputation, we must ensure that the research and teaching—pre-clinical, clinical and medical sciences—are carried out on the same site as the beds and the out-patient department. That is because it is in a brilliant place in terms of medical facilities.

Sadly, Southwark continues to be one of the most deprived local authorities in England. We rank 364th out of 366 in the Jarman index; we are only two from the bottom in terms of deprivation, based on social, economic and demographic criteria. We therefore need the best services for the local community, as well as to maintain Guy's worldwide reputation.

The issue may come down to cost, although I hope that the case is made on other arguments. The current proposal is to build a women and children's hospital over the river from here, at a cost of some £56 million but with a total spend of between £115 million and £200 million. It will not all be public money; some will be special trustees' money. It would not be acceptable to the rest of the NHS, which is desperately crying out for money, that public or charitable money is spent on a building on one hospital site when the other hospital site in the same trust has the facilities needed to carry out the work. We could have the women and children's service at Guy's. Those facilities should be used and not transferred.

When the Secretary of State took office, he said that he did not wish to become notorious for closing Bart's hospital. He said that he did not want on the wall of Bart's two plaques, one saying "Opened by Rahere in 1123" and the other saying "Closed by Frank Dobson in 1997". Will Ministers ensure that Guy's does not suffer the same fate? No logic or argument requires there to be a plaque saying "Guy's hospital—founded by Thomas Guy in 1726, destroyed by Virginia Bottomley, Stephen Dorrell and Frank Dobson in 1995–98".

The people want Guy's hospital; the NHS needs Guy's hospital; the arguments support Guy's hospital. I hope that the Minister understands the importance of making a decision which, in the next few days, secures the future of Guy's as one of the pre-eminent flagships of the British national health service.

2.53 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Paul Boateng): The hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) is a stout and knowledgeable defender of Guy's hospital. He brings to the debate considerable experience and knowledge, and real commitment. He will understand that Ministers are currently considering the outcome of Sir Leslie Turnberg's deliberations on this and other matters.

We promised in opposition a review of London's health service, and we shall deliver it. We need to get health services in London right and to tackle the causes of concern about gaps and shortcomings in provision. Our vision for health care in London is about ensuring that all Londoners have accessible local services, GP practices and clinics, and are supported by specialist advice, care and treatment in hospital and community settings. Accident and emergency and ambulance services must be capable of meeting foreseeable needs.

London has a worldwide reputation as a leading light in medical teaching and research, and it is vital that we retain and build on that reputation. Over many years, Guy's has made a considerable contribution to that reputation. It is and will remain a first-class medical resource.

The problems that Guy's has experienced are largely the result of the actions of a discredited Tory Government, rejected at the polls, who were responsible for forcing the NHS to chase short-term commercialisation at the expense of planning sensibly for the longer term. Real constraints and obstacles were put in the way of the NHS when it came to deciding how best to invest for the future. The situation at Guy's is a perfect example of what happens when planning in what is supposed to be a national public service is reduced to tearing apart: competition takes the place of co-operation, and there is a lack of common aims.

We are in the business of reversing that process. The presentation by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of a White Paper on the future of the NHS was part of that. We are reinstating the partnership model, abolishing the internal market, and replacing the fragmentation that characterised it with partnership and co-operation. We are replacing self-interest with new arrangements to share best practice. We are working incrementally to that end, through a rolling programme of change.

We moved quickly after the general election to disentangle some of the worst problems that we inherited on 1 May. We appointed Sir Leslie Turnberg and an advisory panel chaired by him to assist in taking forward the agenda for health in London. The panel is independent and distant from government. It presents its report for the consideration of Ministers, who will reflect on it with the care and attention that the hon. Gentleman would expect.

The hon. Gentleman makes his contribution to the debate, which my ministerial colleagues and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take into account, alongside a range of other contributions from right across the political and community spectrum of the community that he represents. I have not worked in Southwark—in the shadow of Guy's, as the hon. Gentleman puts it—for a decade now, but I have happy memories of that time and of the distinguished contribution that Benedict Birnberg made to the campaign for Guy's.

The hon. Gentleman can be assured that we will take forward our strategy for health in London by investing cost-effectively in the future, to ensure that the people of London, and of Southwark and Bermondsey, get the health service that they deserve. He has my assurance that the scheme proposed by the Save Guy's campaign will be given the attention that it deserves, alongside the other proposals that he knows are on the table. The concerns that he raised in the debate will be taken into account.

No one who cares about Guy's and the future of the NHS in London can view with equanimity the impact of the uncertainty on staff and patients. We will move as expeditiously as appropriate to bring forward our proposals subsequent to the London review. We have begun the process of rebuilding the NHS. It is a process that will be carried forward in a spirit of partnership and co-operation, respecting the needs, concerns and views—views strongly felt and well articulated—of the local communities, including that represented by the hon. Gentleman.

We will make sure that London gets the health service that is its due, one that is true to the spirit that has always shaped it, one of service, of caring and of community. That is the challenge. I believe that together we can meet that challenge and deliver to London, including the people of Bermondsey and Southwark, the health service that we all want—one based on excellence and patient care.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Indemnity Undertakings

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many indemnity undertakings were given by departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six month period ended 30 September; and what was the value of (a) any contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time under that section which remain outstanding as at 30 September, (b) non-statutory government indemnities in respect of loans handled by the Government Art Collection which remain outstanding as at 30 September and (c) non-statutory undertakings to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection which remain outstanding at 30 September. [18872]

Mr. Chris Smith: The provision for the Government Indemnity Scheme is made by the National Heritage Act 1980. The scheme facilitates public access to loans of works of art and other objects for public display made to museums, galleries and other such institutions by private owners and non-national institutions. It does this by indemnifying lenders against loss or damage to their loan. Loans covered by the scheme must be for public benefit. The scheme also covers loans of such objects for study purposes within borrowing institutions where this would contribute materially to the public's understanding or appreciation of the loan. Examples of this are enhancing interpretation or explanation to the public of objects and bringing into the public domain the conclusions of any study.

In the six month period ended 30 September 1997, the following undertakings to indemnify were given under section 16 by the relevant Departments for objects on loan to national and non-national institutions:

	Numbers
Department for Culture, Media and Sport	579
Scottish Office Education and Industry Department	82
Welsh Office Education Department	75
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	22

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of undertakings given at any time under section 16 and which remained outstanding as at 30 September 1997 is:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport	1,504,907,510
Scottish Office Education and Industry Department	123,023,100
Welsh Office Education Department	69,000,000
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	5,460,674

The value of non-statutory Government indemnities to cover loans handled by the Government Art Collection and which remained outstanding as at 30 September 1997 is £9,000,000.

The value of non-statutory undertakings given to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection and which remained outstanding as at 30 September 1997 is £202,538,452.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy on (a) exemptions and (b) derogations from the national minimum wage for employees in (i) the tourist industry and (ii) leisure and related industries. [17614]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government's intention is to introduce a single national minimum rate. We will set the rate in the light of advice from the Independent Low Pay Commission appointed earlier this year, and taking account of prevailing economic circumstances. Many organisations representing the tourism, hospitality and leisure sectors are invited to submit written evidence to the Commission.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many public appointments he has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16774]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have made 60 appointments and reappointments since 1 May. Of these 11 are remunerated (18 per cent.).

The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all Departments in an aggregated form.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what steps he is taking to secure a lasting legacy from the Millennium Experience at Greenwich; and if he will make a statement. [18923]

Mr. Mandelson: When the Government announced in June its decision to go ahead with the Millennium Experience at Greenwich, it was on the basis of 5 clear commitments. One of these was that there would be a lasting legacy. The Government remains determined to secure long-term benefits for the nation from the Millennium Experience, and has sought outside advice on how to maximise these legacies. Earlier this year the Government invited Mr. Dennis Stevenson to assess the prospects. I am extremely grateful to Mr. Stevenson for the advice which he has now provided, and am pleased to place in the Library of both Houses a copy of a letter to me summarising his conclusions. His analysis, which the Government accepts, shows first that a number of valuable legacies can already be identified. Specifically, the Millennium Experience is acting as the catalyst for English Partnerships' reclamation of derelict and polluted riverside land at Greenwich—a site of a size and potential unique in Western Europe; providing the platform for the pioneering Millennium Village launched by the Deputy Prime Minister in July; stimulating improvements in public transport, Thames river services, roads, and pedestrian walkways on the Peninsula; and using the Dome to promote national awareness and long-term taking-up of IT based learning, for example through the University for Industry and the National Grid for Learning.

There is a range of possible long term uses for the Millennium Experience Dome itself. These include developing the Dome as: a new arena for participation and spectator sports; a TV or film production studio and visitor centre; and using the site for a large scale international convention centre. These ideas serve to illustrate the Dome's future potential, and reflect the steps which have been taken to ensure the Dome can have a long life. Commercial interest in acquiring the Dome is, however, likely to be maximised in 2000, when it can be seen successfully in operation, and when commercial and popular awareness of the site is at its height. The Government will therefore decide on the Dome's long term future at that time. Meanwhile, I invite those with serious interest in the Dome's future use to register their ideas (which should not involve additional cost to the Exchequer) and to hold exploratory discussions with us. Proposals may either be for its use at Greenwich (where in 2000 it will occupy a 40 acre site) as a complement to English Partnerships' high quality and lasting development of the Peninsula, or for its transfer to another part of the United Kingdom.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contingency planning is being made in the event of failure of (a) Government services and (b) business arising from the year 2000 computer problem. [18025]

Mr. David Clark: (a) I have asked Ministerial colleagues to ensure that their Departments have contingency plans in place to cope with major systems failures, and that these are adequate to deal with any unforeseen Year 2000 processing problems.

(b) Mr. Don Cruickshank, Chairman of Action 2000, the new Government initiative set up to help business tackle the problem, will encourage businesses to undertake their own contingency planning.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total level of aid paid to the Congo in the current financial year (a) directly and (b) via other agencies; what amount is planned for 1998–99; and if she will make a statement. [18072]

Clare Short: All donors suspended development assistance to the Government of Zaire in 1992. Since then, substantial amounts of emergency and rehabilitation assistance have been provided. This year the UK has provided almost £1 million in bilateral emergency assistance to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In addition, our contribution to the EU programmes in health and democratisation is estimated at £9.6 million.

We shall continue to provide emergency assistance in 1998–99 if it is needed. Future development assistance will depend on the strength of the development partnership which can be established with the new Government; its commitment to poverty alleviation; and our capacity to deliver an effective programme.

PRIME MINISTER

Political Donations

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if he advised the Cabinet Secretary of the fact that Mr. Ecclestone was a donor to the Labour party before his meeting with Mr. Ecclestone on 16 October. [18269]

The Prime Minister: No. I would not expect to do so.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Prime Minister if the terms of reference of the Social Exclusion Unit will include people aged over state retirement age. [17916]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The Social Exclusion Unit's work programme is currently being finalised and will be published very soon. A number of the issues the Unit is being asked to address will bear on the needs of people over state retirement age.

Mr. Ecclestone

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Prime Minister when Mr. Jonathan Powell was informed of the invitation to Mr. Ecclestone to visit the Prime Minister. [18374]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) on 20 November 1997, Official Report, column 269.

Anglo-French Summit

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 270, what factors led him to determine that the total cost of furnishing and decorating the Canary Wharf venue for the Anglo-French summit was below the EU tendering threshold. [18512]

The Prime Minister: The threshold for European Union tendering provisions is £108,000. As the cost to the Government for the furnishing and decoration of the Canary Wharf Tower will be approximately £15,000, it falls well below the threshold figure.

TREASURY

Inland Revenue Bailiffs (Totnes)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will advise the Inland Revenue to call off the bailiffs from Mrs. Joan Bridge-Taylor of Redhill, Jubilee Road, Totnes. [18052]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 November 1997]: It would not be appropriate for me to comment publicly on the tax affairs of an individual, but I shall write to the hon. Member about the matter he has raised.

Home Insulation

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the net cost of his proposal to cut the rate of VAT on energy-saving materials used in government-funded home insulation schemes. [18391]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs' recent review estimated that the annual cost would be £7.5 million.

National Asset Register

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to sell items on the National Asset Register. [17974]

Mr. Darling: It is for each individual department, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, to review its asset holdings as set out in the National Asset Register and decide whether they still meet the department's core aim and objectives. If they do not, then each department will need to decide the most appropriate response.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proposals he has for allowing United Kingdom citizens to pay taxes in euros before 2002; [15923]

(2) if his proposals to allow taxes to be paid in euros before 2002 will allow such payments to be free of exchange costs. [16696]

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what will be the cost of equipping (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) Customs and Excise to collect tax payments in euros after 1999; [15966]

(2) what will be the operation date for calculation of the exchange rate in force for payments of taxes in euros after 1999; and which government department will bear the exchange rate risk of such transactions; [15965]

(3) what assessment he has made of the need for additional computing and information technology resources for (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) Customs and Excise arising from their acceptance of payment in euros after 1999; [16179]

(4) what plans he has for the dissemination of information arrangements for tax payments in euros for 1999 to (a) professional tax advisers and (b) taxpayers. [16178]

Mrs. Liddell: The Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise are, like other organisations, reviewing their banking requirements and their systems to take account of the likely effects of the introduction of the Euro, including an increase in the demand for payment of taxes in foreign currencies. This review is being conducted in consultation with the Business Advisory Group established by the Chancellor to look at the practical and strategic implications of EMU which is, among other things, assessing legal, accounting and reporting issues arising from EMU and what information about EMU is needed by business. A report summarising the groups conclusions and recommendations will be published early in 1998. If the reviews lead to proposals to change the way the existing arrangements operate, the information will be disseminated promptly and in the appropriate way. Costs will be addressed once the full implications have been identified.

Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise already accept payment of tax in foreign currency, so there is no new principle involved in accepting the Euro from 1999. It is not expected that accepting payment in Euro on the same basis will require substantial additional resources.

Where tax payments to the Inland Revenue are made in foreign currency the net amount received conversion into sterling is the amount which the taxpayer is treated as having paid. So the exchange risk of a payment in euro will be borne by the taxpayer. Customs and Excise currently meet the costs arising from currency conversion on the relatively few payments received in foreign currencies. This policy may need to be reviewed if the introduction of the Euro increases demand.

Tax Services (Rural Areas)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the provision of tax office services in remote rural areas. [17215]

Dawn Primarolo: Services may be provided from a local office or by other means such as mobile inquiry centres and, increasingly, by telephone. The Inland Revenue is reorganising its local office network but none of the plans currently approved for implementation includes closure of a remote, rural office. The best means of providing services to such areas in the future is being considered as part of the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review.

EU Unanimity Voting

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those treaty articles which provide for unanimity of voting in respect of matters contained in Article 99 of the Treaty of Rome. [17524]

Dawn Primarolo: Article 99 of the Treaty of Rome relates to the Council's powers to adopt provisions for the harmonisation of legislation concerning turnover taxes, excise duties and other forms of indirect taxation to the extend that such harmonisation is necessary to ensure that the establishment and functioning of internal market. The Article provides for unanimity of voting in relation to these matters. Other articles in the Treaty which specifically refer to fiscal matters maintain the unanimity requirement. In particular, Article 100a paragraph 2 explicitly excludes fiscal provisions from the internal market implementation measures that can be decided by qualified majority voting.

Similarly, in relation to environmental measures Article 130s paragraph 2 states that provisions primarily of a fiscal nature must be adopted on the basis of unanimity.

Income Tax

Dr. Vis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue impact of raising the top rate of income tax to 50 per cent. on incomes over £50,000 per annum. [17039]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated full year yield at 1997–98 income levels of increasing the top rate of income tax to 50 per cent. on taxable incomes above £50,000 per year is £2.7 billion. The yield includes the consequential effects on the yield of capital gains tax after allowing for likely changes in the volume of disposals. It does not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the new rate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many public appointments she has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16783]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Since 1 May 1997, 512 appointments have been made. Of these, 26 per cent. attract remuneration.

The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all Departments in an aggregated form.

NHS Funding

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the additional funding allocated to the National Health Service in Northern Ireland has been allocated to (a) clinical care and (b) management support; and if she will make a statement. [16933]

Mr. Worthington: The £5 million for Northern Ireland which was announced on 14 October was allocated in full for clinical and social care, as was the additional £7 million I announced on 21 August and the further £7.5 million I announced on 28 November. The additional £19.5 million thus provided this year shows the priority this Government attaches to the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland and in particular now it has acted decisively to tackle key pressures over the coming winter by targeting resources on patients and clients.

Central Investment Fund for Charities

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those organisations which belong to the Northern Ireland Central Investment Fund for Charities, the proportion of their investment in the fund and the current value of the fund's securities.[17303]

Mr. Worthington: The Department as trustee of the Northern Ireland Central Investment Fund for Charities considers that it has a duty of confidentiality not to reveal the identity of investors in the fund. The fund is valued monthly and at 31 October 1997 its capital value was £15.6 million.

Civil Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what affirmative action measures she plans to adopt to increase the representation of Catholics and women in the (a) industrial craft and (b) higher non-industrial grades in the Northern Ireland Civil Service. [17705]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) aims to create a position where men and women, Protestants and Roman Catholics, are fairly represented at all levels in the organisation. It will continue to seek to identify lawful affirmative action measures which are effective in addressing the under-representation of women and Roman Catholics in the industrial craft and higher non-industrial grades.

NICS policy is that employment and advancement is based on ability, qualification and aptitude for the work. Subject to that overriding principle, the Service has initiated a range of measures in the context of its Action Plan for Women, designed to help improve female representation at senior levels. These include the use of flexible working, women only training, equal opportunity awareness programmes for senior staff, training for women returning to work, and the examination of organisational barriers to the promotion of women to the senior levels including specialist areas.

The Service also regularly reviews its promotion and recruitment practices and has taken a number of measures to promote a more balanced work force at all levels of the organisation. These include the use of positive action advertising in appropriate circumstances and the removal of various internal barriers to promotion to encourage a better flow of staff from lower to higher grades within and between Departments.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards the decentralisation of Civil Service jobs. [17707]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Some 280 posts were transferred from Belfast and Bangor to Londonderry in 1989. Subsequent options for dispersing jobs have been considered, but rejected for reasons of cost and feasibility. In view of this, a research study was commissioned to assess more accurately the costs and the social and economic benefits of dispersing Civil Service jobs from Belfast and North Down, to develop a methodology to measure costs and benefits and to inform decisions on future policy. The report of this study is under consideration.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the Sixth Report compiled by the Department of Finance and Personnel into Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service. [17706]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I was pleased to note the strong evidence contained in the Sixth Report of compositional change in the NICS work force and the fact that, at the macro level, Protestants and Roman Catholics are now fairly represented at most grade levels up to around Staff Officer and equivalent level. Service-wide female representation has risen to 45.1 per cent. and Roman Catholic to 40.7 per cent. Overall in the Non-Industrial grades Female and Roman Catholic representation has increased in every grade level between Executive Officer level and the senior grades. However, I was naturally disappointed that the Service did not reach some of the goals and timetables previously set and, in particular, the progress made in terms of the composition of the most senior grades and the continuing under-representation of women in the Professional and Technical, and Industrial Grades. The Service has put in place a range of measures within the law to try to accelerate the rate of change whilst adhering strictly to the merit principle in both its recruitment and internal promotion practices. It will also continue to consult with the statutory agencies to examine and implement further practical affirmative action measures.

Road Safety

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what impact the application of 'R' plates for probationary drivers in Northern Ireland has had on injury and fatality levels among and relating to newly qualified drivers. [17634]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Specific information on the direct impact of the Registered Driver Scheme on road casualties is not available. Research in 1993–94 into the overall effectiveness of the scheme was unable to demonstrate conclusively a direct correlation between it and a reduction in the level of road accidents.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 76, on the basis of what information she was able to indicate to the Minister of State at the Scottish Office the importance of the transfer of Jason Campbell to the wider peace process. [17460]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 24 November 1997]: I received representations from political parties and others regarding the importance of the transfer of loyalist prisoners. Throughout the current political process the Government has accepted the importance of prison issues of the participants.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Stress-related Illnesses

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many days during term time were lost through stress-related illness amongst (a) classroom teachers, (b) deputy heads and (c) heads in primary schools in each local education authority during the (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97 school years. [18550]

Mr. Byers: The information is not collected centrally.

Schools (Internet)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools were connected to the Internet at the start of the current school year. [18551]

Dr. Howells: Estimates indicate that some 6,000 schools in the UK (primary and secondary) were connected to the Internet at the beginning of the 1997–98 academic year. A further statistical survey of ICT in schools will be undertaken in 1998.

Former Astra Staff

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he intends to take in respect of Astra pensioners. [18537]

Dr. Howells: Renewed investigations into the problems faced by former members of the Department over their pensions entitlements from the former Astra Training Services Ltd. following that organisation's collapse in 1993 have been going on in the Department for some time. The vast majority of Departmental staff who transferred to Astra had their previously accrued Civil Service pensions values and benefits preserved in the Principal Civil Service Pensions Scheme. Pensions values due for their time with Astra are primarily for the liquidators of the former Company to resolve. We will be pressing the liquidators and the pension fund trustees to resolve this long-outstanding issue.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the entitlement to interviews of ex-Astra staff. [18538]

Dr. Howells: Renewed investigations into the problems faced by former members of the Department who transferred to Astra Training Services Ltd. but were made redundant by the collapse of that organisation in 1993 have been going on in the Department for some time. Work continues to find ways of assisting former staff, and those currently seeking employment will be guaranteed interviews for any suitable vacancies which may arise in the Department.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if his Department will take steps to secure a derogation from EU law so that students from England can be charged a higher fee for a fourth year university course in Scotland than students from elsewhere in the EU. [18514]

Dr. Howells: No, we see no need for such a derogation. From autumn 1998, the maximum support for fees that we are proposing to make available for full-time undergraduate students will be £1,000: this maximum will apply to students from England, Scotland, and the rest of the UK and the European Union, depending on the level of their parents', spouses' or own income. We have made it clear that top-up fees play no part in our proposals for home and EU full-time undergraduates.

Full-time students resident in Scotland and studying in Scottish institutions on honours degree courses that are a year longer than equivalent courses elsewhere in the UK will, however, be eligible, irrespective of income, for the maximum support for fees in the final year of the course from the Scottish Student Awards Agency. The EC Treaty requires Member States not to discriminate on grounds of nationality against nationals of other Member States, on matters within the scope of the Treaty. However, EC law does not intervene in internal matters and require each Member State to treat all its own nationals in exactly the same way.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the costs for local authorities of administering the means-testing of university tuition fees. [18515]

Dr. Howells: Data on local authorities' costs of administering mandatory awards are not collected centrally. Local authorities already carry out means testing of student and parental income for awards purposes. In 1998–99, the results of this means test will be applied first to the university tuition fee and any balance to maintenance grants.

Qualifications and Curriculum Authority

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the annual budget of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. [18392]

Ms Estelle Morris: The first budget of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will be agreed in consultation with the Authority in February 1998.

Supplementary Allowances

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students in 1999–2000 and beyond who would be eligible for supplementary allowances under the existing system will continue to receive these allowances as grants. [17858]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given on 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 160.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Courts

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 November 1997, Official Report, column 501, if he will seek agreement at the next European Council for the adoption of rules of procedure applicable to all its future meetings and for the adoption of those arrangements for other Heads of Government meetings. [17869]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Council is established by Article D of the Treaty on European Union (TEU), where there is no provision for rules of procedure. Other international organisations such as the G7, also operate without formal rules of procedure. It is for the Presidency, in consultation with other Member States, to structure discussions in the European Council.

European Council and the IGC

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates and times of (a) the meeting of the European Council and (b) the Inter-Governmental Conference held in Amsterdam in June; and what in each case was the smallest number of (i) Ministers and (ii) officials attending a session. [17915]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Council met in Amsterdam from 9.30 am on 16 June until approximately 4 am on the morning of 18 June. The majority of time was spent discussing the Intergovernmental Conference, although other European Council business was also addressed. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary were present at all sessions. No UK officials attended the sessions, as is standard practice at European Councils.

India (Trade)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British firms have contacted diplomatic missions in (a) Bombay and (b) New Delhi concerning trade opportunities in 1997. [18310]

Mr. Fatchett: Precise figures relating to trade and investment inquiries from British companies are not recorded. However, from extrapolation of incoming fax inquiries during September 1997, the British Deputy High Commission in Bombay dealt with an estimated 860 written inquiries during January to October 1997 inclusive. In addition, Bombay received 272 British business visitors in the same period. The British High Commission in New Delhi received an estimated 2,000 written inquiries from British companies and briefed 304 British business visitors during the same period. Both offices also received many telephone inquiries from UK companies, but these are not automatically recorded. An even greater number of inquiries were received from Indian companies seeking trade and investment links with British companies. In addition, there were numerous contacts with members of the resident British business community.

Britain-Russia Centre

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual reports of (a) the Britain-Russia Centre and (b) the British East-West Centre will be published. [18276]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Copies of the Centres' Annual Report for 1996–97 have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The Centres received a grant-in-aid from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of £237,000 to support their activities in 1996–97. In addition the Centres secured funding in 1996–97 of £237,227 for direct expenditure on projects. Their priority areas for assistance have been Russia, Eastern Europe and Central Asia. The Centres continue to make a valuable contribution to the strengthening of bilateral relations. Activities have included seminars and workshops; administering the British observer mission to the Russian presidential elections; work with the media in the republics of the Caucasus and senior level visits from Georgia, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan.

Museum of Europe

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are presently being considered at European Union level for the establishment of a museum of Europe; what discussions he has held with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport on (a) which United Kingdom museum and (b) which United Kingdom collections will be affected; and if he will make a statement. [18155]

Mr. Fatchett: At the Council of Culture and Audiovisual Ministers meeting held in Brussels on 30 June 1997, the Greek delegate proposed the foundation of a Museum of Europe. The proposal has not been considered since then and neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary have had discussions with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport about the matter.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies he has undertaken of the effect of the increase in the use of qualified majority voting procedures under the Treaty of Amsterdam on the use by the European Parliament of its powers in these areas; and if he will make a statement. [18299]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None. There is no direct link between the use of Qualified Majority Voting in the Council and the use by the European Parliament of its powers.

Bombay Deputy High Commission

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to publicise the opening hours of the British Deputy High Commission in Bombay. [18312]

Mr. Fatchett: The opening times of our Deputy High Commission in Bombay (Mumbai) are readily available from the mission itself and from this Department. The Deputy High Commission is open from 0800 to 1300 and 1400 to 1600 local time.

Ministerial Visits (India)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British Ministers have visited India in 1997. [18313]

Mr. Fatchett: Nine Ministers have visited India in 1997 including five since 1 May. The right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major), then Prime Minister, and Mr. Lang, then President of the Board of Trade, visited in January. The hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, visited in February. Mr. Nelson, then Minister of State for the Department of Trade and Industry visited in March. I also visited India in June. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister visited in September and November. My noble Friend, Baroness Symons, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, visited in September. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited in October. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade visited in November.

Iraq

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Iraqi compliance with UN resolutions. [16816]

Mr. Fatchett: Iraq is not yet in compliance with the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions (SCRs). Iraq must comply with all the relevant SCRs before the process of lifting of sanctions can begin.

Immigration (Nigeria)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the staffing establishment of the British High Commission Immigration Section in Lagos, Nigeria; and how many staff are in post. [18073]

Mr. Fatchett: In our High Commission in Lagos there are 68 members of staff (19 UK-based and 49 locally engaged staff) on the establishment of the Immigration Section which is currently fully staffed. The total number of staff working in the High Commission is 246 (48 UK-based and 198 locally engaged).

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the average wait for an interview for (a) visa and (b) entry clearance at Her Majesty's High Commission in Lagos for each of the last three years. [18100]

Mr. Fatchett: The average wait for an interview for entry clearance (or visa) at the High Commission in Lagos for each of the last three years was:

Interview type	Average wait
1997
Visit	11 days
Settlement	5 months
1996
Visit	6 days
Settlement	5 months
1995
Visit	1 day
Settlement	1 month

Rockall

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British Ministers have visited Rockall in each of the last 10 years. [18076]

Mr. Fatchett: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the legal title to Rockall; and if he will make a statement. [18080]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no doubt about our sovereignty over the Island of Rockall. This was made clear in response to recent correspondence from Greenpeace purporting to declare the independence of Rockall.

Algeria

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press for an independent investigation of (a) massacres and (b) human rights violations in Algeria. [18536]

Mr. Fatchett: Without co-operation from the government in Algiers, any effort to investigate events in Algeria would be fruitless. We note that UN suggestions that the Commission on Human Rights has a role have been rebuffed by the Algerian Government. We welcome, however, news that the Algerians have said that they will accept a visit by a UN Special Rapporteur. We encourage the Algerians to ensure this takes place soon.

Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for Ministerial visits to the Congo. [18071]

Mr. Fatchett: There are currently no plans for Ministerial visits to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). However we are closely monitoring the situation in the DRC with our partners in the EU and at the UN.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has had with the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [18074]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), gave him on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 167. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has held no further discussions with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo since then.

Employment Pacts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the rapport d'information approved at the plenary session of the Economic and Social Committee on 29 and 30 October on territorial employment pacts; and if he will make a statement. [18154]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

I have placed a copy of the Economic and Social Committee's information report in the Library of the House.

As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston, (Mr. Hughes) of 31 July 1997, Official Report, columns 635–36, the UK nominated 10 territorial employment pacts to the Commission. The Commission agreed to support our nominations and has been discussing detailed proposals submitted by the applicants. When these are approved, the Commission will pay an initial tranche of grant to them to support the development of local action plans.

European Coal and Steel Community

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the provisions in the annual budget of the European Coal and Steel Community for (a) workers' housing, special reserve, and (b) staff loans, pension fund, apply to. [17264]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The special reserve relating to workers' housing is used to grant loans from ECSC funds to finance subsidised housing for workers in the coal and steel industries.

The proportion assigned to the pension fund originally represented the ECSC's total pension obligations prior to 5 March 1968. Since that date, the Member States have assumed responsibility, via the general budget for the payment of staff pensions, and this fund has subsequently been available for a number of purposes, including the financing of housing loans for officials of the European Communities.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Property Portfolio

36. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the Commissioners' management of the property portfolio. [16833]

Mr. Bell: The Commissioners' property portfolio is actively managed by external firms of Chartered Surveyors, with the exception of the Octavia Hill Housing Estates which are managed by qualified Housing Managers, directly employed by the Church Commissioners. The Commissioners' own property staff are headed by the Chief Surveyor who is a fellow of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors. The Commissioners' property portfolio has shown excellent returns in recent years, well ahead of the industry benchmark.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poultry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the Agenda 2000 proposals on the costs of poultry production. [18385]

Mr. Rooker: Agenda 2000 contains no proposals which relate directly to poultry production. Feed costs, however, form a significant proportion of total poultry production costs and Agenda 2000 contains proposals to reduce cereal support prices by 20 per cent. from current levels. To the extent that cereal market prices also fall, feed costs will be reduced.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of UK poultry meat production is sold (a) fresh in (i) oven ready and (ii) New York dressed form and (b) frozen. [18375]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many tonnes of chicken meat were produced by United Kingdom producers in 1996 from (a) broiler and (b) other systems; [18383]

(2) how many tonnes of turkey meat were produced by UK producers in 1996 from (a) intensive, (b) semi-intensive and (c) free range systems; [18384]

(3) what tonnage of poultry meat was produced by UK producers in 1996; and how much was imported from (a) EU countries and (b) non-EU countries. [18382]

Mr. Rooker: In 1996, 1,450 thousand tonnes of poultry meat were produced by UK producers, 244 thousand tonnes were imported from EC countries and 18 thousand tonnes were imported from non EC countries.

In 1996, 1,065 thousand tonnes of meat were produced from broilers and 54 thousand tonnes of meat were produced from other chickens.

In 1996, 293 thousand tonnes of turkey meat were produced by UK producers. No information is available on the systems by which turkeys are housed.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the UK per capita consumption of (a) eggs, (b) chicken meat and (c) turkey meat in the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the equivalent figures for (i) five and (ii) 10 years previously. [18386]

Mr. Rooker: Per capita consumption of eggs, chicken and turkey in Great Britain as measured by purchases for consumption at home is given in the following table.

Grams per person per week (except for eggs)

Purchases of:	1986	1991	1996
Eggs (number)	3.01	2.25	1.87
Chicken	174	183	191
Turkey	21	16	38
Pre-cooked poultry[1]	11	14	23

[1] Not in cans.

These estimates exclude consumption outside of the home and consumption in the form of processed products. To help complete the picture, the following table provides details of total usage, derived as total UK production plus imports less exports and adjusted for stock changes.

UK usage of:	1986	1991	1996
Eggs (million Dozen)	869	853	813
Total Poultrymeat (000 Tonnes)	986	1,256	1,539
Chicken meat (000 Tonnes)	n/a	n/a	1,220
Turkey meat (000 Tonnes)	n/a	n/a	286

n/a = not available.

It should be stated that poultry meat figures are carcase weight equivalent, whereas the per capita consumption estimates above relate to the actual weight purchased.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy regarding the (a) disposal and (b) usage of poultry offal. [18387]

Mr. Rooker: The Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 set out the requirements for the handling of poultry offal in licensed premises. Stringent hygiene requirements apply to all fresh meat, including offal, which is destined for human consumption.

The EC Poultrymeat Marketing Regulations (Council Regulation 1906/90 with detailed rules set out in Commission Regulation 1538/91) allow the sale of giblets in the carcase of a whole bird when sold provided that this is indicated on the label.

Enforcement officers carry out checks in licensed and unlicensed poultry premises under this legislation and also the Food Safety (General Food Hygiene) Regulations 1995 to ensure that all food produced is fit for human consumption.

The Animal By-Products Order 1992, as amended, and the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973, as amended, set out the requirements for the processing and disposal of offals which are not intended for human consumption. This legislation is currently under review and any proposals will be the subject of consultation in the normal way.

Eggs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proportion of UK egg production is from (a) battery, (b) deep litter, (c) barn and (d) free range systems; and what were the figures 10 years ago; [18377]

(2) how many eggs were produced by UK producers in 1996; and how many were imported from (a) other EU countries and (b) non-EU countries; [18376]

(3) how many laying hens are currently housed in (a) battery, (b) deep litter, (c) barn and (d) free range systems. [18378]

Mr. Rooker: In 1996, 774 million dozen eggs were produced by UK producers for human consumption, 52 million dozen[1] were imported from EC countries and 1 million dozen[1] were imported from non EC countries.

In 1996, 86 per cent. of eggs were produced by intensive systems, 11 per cent. were produced by free range systems and 3 per cent. were produced by perchery and other systems. This level of detail was not collected 10 years ago, and therefore no equivalent comparison can be made.

No information is available on the number of hens split by production systems.

[1] Includes shell egg and shell egg equivalent of whole (dried, frozen and liquid) egg and egg yolk, but excludes albumen.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs were imported from countries where mammalian meat and bone meal is incorporated in feedstuffs during 1996. [18379]

Mr. Rooker: During 1996, 52 million dozen[1] eggs were imported from EC countries and 1 million dozen[1] were imported from non-EC countries. We believe that most of these are destined for processing. We do not have detailed information on legislation on all feed controls in place elsewhere but are unaware of any measures in place in other countries, during 1996 or before, banning mammalian meat and bonemeal (MBM) from non-ruminant feed. The poultry feed may therefore have included MBM.

[1] Includes shell egg and shell egg equivalent of whole (dried, frozen and liquid) egg and egg yolk, but excludes albumen.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he intends to make to the EU Council of Ministers during the UK Presidency regarding battery systems of egg production; [18381]

(2) what steps he is taking regarding phasing out battery systems of egg production. [18380]

Mr. Rooker: We aim to phase out the conventional battery cage. This needs to be achieved at the European level, by developing measures in the Council of Ministers. That is why we are pressing the Commission to submit urgently for negotiation in the Council its proposals to update the EU rules on the welfare of laying hens.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that imported eggs and poultry meat meet the hygiene requirements for United Kingdom producers. [18388]

Mr. Rooker: The import conditions for trade in poultrymeat and eggs within the Community, and for imports from third countries, are governed by Community legislation. The EU shell egg marketing legislation and Council Decision 94/371 both provide for and apply a maximum "best-before" limit of 28 days after lay for the marketing of shell eggs. These provisions are enforced by the relevant enforcement authorities including the Egg Marketing Inspectorate.

Ritually Slaughtered Animals

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to ensure that all ritually slaughtered meat is clearly labelled as such. [17254]

Mr. Rooker: We shall cover this approach in our forthcoming discussions with the religious communities about all aspects of religious slaughter.

Technology Foresight

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what ways his Department's research priorities have been modified in response to Technology Foresight. [17426]

Mr. Rooker: An analysis of the Department's research programme has shown that some 90 per cent. of it currently aligns with the Foresight recommendations. Since the Foresight programme started, the Department has initiated new LINK programmes on Horticulture, Aquaculture and Sustainable Livestock Production and has established a Diet and Health Funders Group, all of which reflect Foresight recommendations.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what Technology Foresight priorities are being taken into account in the forward planning of the Department's scientific research programme. [17425]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has played an active role in the Foresight panels dealing with Agriculture, Horticulture and Forestry, Food and Drink, and the Marine. Our planned R and D already closely aligns with Foresight recommendations and we shall continue to be guided by the recommendations of panels in planning our future programmes.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help and access he has given the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards to ensure it can regulate organic farms effectively with particular reference to the origin of cattle bought by organic farmers; and if he will make a statement on the current constraints of commercial confidentiality affecting access to information in this area. [17748]

Mr. Rooker: Under the rules of the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards (UKROFS) organic farmers may buy in only cattle from herds which have not had any case of BSE in the previous 6 years. It is the responsibility of the organic farmer to demonstrate compliance with this rule.

The Government have given an undertaking to make information on the BSE history of herds available to organic purchasers of animals provided that the consent of the owner of the herd to which the information relates can be obtained. However, the legal constraints are considerable and it has taken time to make sure that the procedures we propose are legally defensible. Administrative instructions are now being finalised and the Department will write to interested parties to inform them of the new arrangements next week.

Chocolate

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the United Kingdom Government's position will be at the meeting of the Council of Ministers when they discuss the labelling of chocolate with regard to (a) vegetable fat and (b) milk content; and if he will make a statement [17747]

Mr. Rooker: In the Council of Ministers, the Government will press for a new chocolate Directive which allows the full range of different European chocolate-making traditions to co-exist within a single, harmonised market and which increases consumer choice throughout the EU. It will oppose any measures which would discriminate against UK products or change the names under which those products have been sold for many years and which are familiar to UK consumers.

BSE (Headboning Businesses)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many headboning businesses closed as a result of the tightening of BSE controls; and what was the impact on employment. [17722]

Mr. Rooker: I regret that no record is held centrally of the information requested.

Vitamin B6 Supplements

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultation he undertook with international experts on nutrition prior to making his decision to introduce restrictions on the retail sale of higher dose vitamin B6 supplements. [17819]

Mr. Rooker: The Government's decision to restrict the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law was based in part on advice from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT). Members of the COT include internationally recognised experts in a range of disciplines including nutrition.

In considering the safety of vitamin B6, the COT took account of the nutritional requirements for this vitamin that had been established by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy (COMA) as part of its review of food energy and nutrient requirements of groups of people in the United Kingdom. Those carrying out this review included a number of nutritionists of international standing. International experts representing the EU Scientific Committee for Food and other experts from the European Community acted as observers.

Green Pound

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the average impact on individual producers of his Department claiming in full the compensation available from the EU resulting from each significant revaluation of the Green Pound during 1997. [18098]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 November 1997]: No. The compensation which HMG could pay under the EU rules to offset the income effects of green rate revaluations this year stands at around £980 million, of which up to half may be reclaimed from the EU budget. It would be for Ministers to decide the mechanisms for distributing any such aid to the four sectors eligible for assistance under the EU rules.

Offal Rendering

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his policy that the production of tallow and other products from the rendering of pig offal and fallen stock should be disposed of in the same way as that from bovine animals. [18067]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The BSE (No. 2) Order 1996 requires that all mammalian protein is excluded from ruminant feed and all mammalian meat and bone meal is excluded from all farmed livestock feed. The Fertilisers (Mammalian Meat and Bone Meal) Regulations 1996 also require that mammalian meat and bone meal is not used as a fertiliser on agricultural land. The Orders do not distinguish between pig and bovine material or material from fallen stock. Under the Bovines and Bovine Products (Despatch Prohibition and Production Restriction) Regulations 1997, plants wishing to produce bovine tallow for feed use must be registered and comply with the provisions laid down in that Order.

Hemp

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the Home Office regarding the level of fee for the licence required for growing hemp and its impact on small producers. [18063]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The Department's officials have written to, and met with, officials in the Home Office and have relayed the concerns of the hemp industry about the proposed level of the licence fee for 1998.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Deterrent

4. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the total cost of the British nuclear deterrent over the next four years. [16797]

Mr. George Robertson: The total procurement cost for Trident is estimated to be £12.6 billion. Average running costs have been estimated at £200 million a year over the 30 year lifetime of the system. We are examining the basis upon which cost estimates have been calculated in the light of operating experience as part of the wider Strategic Defence Review.

Medals

16. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will instigate a review of the policy relating to the distribution and striking of medals and the protocols relating to their display. [16811]

Mr. Spellar: The present policy relating to the distribution and striking of medals and the protocols for the wearing of medals is well proven. There are no plans to change it at the present time.

Army Officers

17. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance he has given to the Chief of the General Staff on the selection and commissioning of Army officers. [16812]

Dr. Reid: My hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Chief of the General Staff routinely discuss all major aspects of Army policy, including recruitment. They are both committed to ensuring that access to the modern British Army, and promotion thereafter, is based firmly on merit alone.

Future Large Aircraft

18. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends publishing the RAF's operational requirement for the future large aircraft. [16813]

Mr. Spellar: I have no plans to publish the Staff Requirement (SR(A)435) for the Hercules Rolling Replacement Programme (for which the Future Large Aircraft is a possible contender for the second tranche).

Territorial Army

19. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve. [16814]

Dr. Reid: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the Territorial Army, whose future role and structure are being considered in the Strategic Defence Review as part of our work on the Armed Forces as a whole. It would be premature to assess the likely outcome of the Review before the process is complete.

Defence Medical Service

20. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the review of the Defence Medical Services. [16815]

Dr. Reid: The stewardship of the previous Administration, whatever its intentions, has left the Defence Medical Services in a parlous state. In addition to the work of the Strategic Defence Review, which will clearly encompass the Defence Medical Services (DMS), I have established a team to implement the recommendations of a recent review of the operational capability of the DMS. I have also ordered a review of the provision of secondary care in the UK by the Defence Secondary Care Agency, and called for proposals to improve morale and retention among DMS personnel. I have directed that the work on these separate but interrelated issues be brought together in order to determine a structured way forward.

Surface Ships

21. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for the provision of new surface ships for the Royal Navy. [16817]

Dr. Reid: There are currently 18 surface ships either under construction or completing contractor trials. In the last 12 months two ships, the Type 23 Frigate, HMS Grafton, and the Ocean Survey Vessel, HMS Scott, have been accepted from contractors and will be entering full operational service in the next few months. The next 12 months will see the acceptance of the Type 23 Frigate HMS Sutherland, the naming and acceptance of the helicopter carrier, HMS Ocean, and the launching of the Type 23 Frigate, HMS Kent, and the Single Role Minehunters, HMS Pembroke and HMS Grimsby. A contract was placed in October 1997 for the charter of additional Ro-Ro ships which from May 1998 will increase the heavy lift capability for the Joint Rapid Deployment Force to two vessels.

Future projects include replacing, early in the next century, the capabilities currently provided by the Type 42 Destroyers with the Horizon frigates, the Type 22 and 23 Frigates with a new class of Future Escort and a new class of Aircraft Carrier to supersede the Invincible class. In addition to these major programmes, a number of other projects including replacements for the Surveying Flotilla, Logistic Landing Ships and new Combat Stores Ship are also under consideration. These projects are, of course, being considered as part of the Strategic Defence Review.

Headquarters Refurbishment

22. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the cost of refurbishing his Department's headquarters. [16818]

Mr. George Robertson: Costs of the refurbishment of MOD Main Building will depend on proposals from the shortlisted consortia during the next stages of the procurement programme that I announced on 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 582. Costs will continue to be closely examined as the public private partnership programme proceeds. Shortlisted bidders have the challenge of producing value for money solutions against the benchmark of my Department's public sector comparator.

ASTOR Project

23. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated value of the ASTOR project; and when he expects to announce his decision on this project. [16819]

Mr. Spellar: The estimated procurement cost of the ASTOR (Airborne Stand-Off Radar) project is in the region of £750 million. Final proposals for the full Development and Production phase have now been invited from the two contractors who carried out competitive Project Definition studies. In addition, the Ministry of Defence has agreed that a co-operative development of a variant of the US Joint Surveillance Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS) should also be considered for meeting the UK ASTOR requirement. We aim to announce a decision in 1998.

Iraq

24. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are currently deployed overseas on duties related to the current situation in Iraq; and what plans he has to add to these numbers. [16820]

Dr. Reid: Some 800 UK Service personnel are deployed overseas on duties connected with the current situation in Iraq. Almost all are contributing to established land, sea and air operations (including UN operations) which predated the recent crisis caused by Saddam Hussein's decision to expel the US Unscom personnel.

In addition, HMS Invincible and RFA Fort Victoria deployed to the Mediterranean, embarking seven RAF Harrier aircraft, as part of the UK's response to the crisis, with a combined complement of some 1,300 personnel. There are no plans at present to deploy additional personnel.

Yorks and Lancaster Regimental Museum

25. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will restore the planned reduction in financial support towards the maintenance of the Yorks and Lancaster regimental museum in Rotherham. [16821]

Mr. Spellar: £6,000 of funding has been restored to the Museum in recognition of its valuable representative role for the Army and focus for local recruit activity. We have also offered our assistance in identifying alternative sources of income to enable the museum to cover any shortfall in funding.

Former Yugoslavia

26. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the cost of the United Kingdom's contribution in the former Yugoslavia will continue to be met from the contingency reserve. [16822]

Mr. George Robertson: Once the costs of the Bosnia operation in the current year are clearer, we will be able to assess more precisely how much of that cost can be absorbed within the Defence budget. I will discuss the funding of anything in excess of that sum with my Cabinet colleagues.

Bosnia

27. Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of Britain's military contribution to the stabilisation force in Bosnia. [16823]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies), on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 83.

New Deal

28. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the armed forces participate in new deal employment initiatives. [16824]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 14 November 1997, Official Report, column 688.

Former Prisoners of War

29. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department took to ensure that his report following the review of the administration of the pay of officer prisoners of war and protected personnel in German and Italian hands during the second world war, published on 23 July, reflected the first-hand experiences of the officers involved. [16825]

Mr. Spellar: My decision on the Review of officer Prisoner of War and Protected Personnel pay deductions took full account of the lengthy submissions of the officers and Protected Personnel, their meetings with the previous Minister and the letters many of them wrote, all of which reflected their first hand experiences. This work also examined the considerable weight of contemporary evidence which survives.

The main concern of the Review was to examine the pay policy which covered these servicemen, and to consider the decisions which formed it and its implementation. It is clear that those concerned with this policy had a number of sources of detailed information about the views and circumstances of those in the camps, ranging from the formal Reports of Red Cross and other visits, to communications with individuals raising questions about their own pay.

Defence Diversification

30. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for defence diversification. [16826]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Redditch (Jacqui Smith).

Russian Defence Officials

31. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was discussed at his recent meeting with Russian defence officials; and if he will make a statement. [16827]

Mr. George Robertson: I paid a short, productive visit to Moscow on 3–4 November, where I had meetings with the Russian Defence Minister, General Sergeyev, the Secretary of the Defence Council, Dr. Kokoshin, and Foreign Minister Primakov.

Dr. Kokoshin and I agreed to develop discussions on the democratic control of defence. Foreign Minister Primakov and I exchanged views on Iraq.

The main purpose of my visit was to promote defence co-operation between the UK and Russia. General Sergeyev and I inaugurated a joint Russo-British Commission to oversee the management of defence co-operation between our countries. Among a range of bilateral issues discussed, we agreed that our navies should work towards closer co-operation in humanitarian and peacekeeping operations.

We agreed on the value to both countries of the series of high-level British/Russian conferences on defence matters, held at Wilton Park, Sussex.

We also agreed to promote scientific co-operation between our Ministries of Defence, and that the Russians would send experts to a demining seminar in the UK next year. I took the opportunity to pass on an offer of assistance from The Royal British Legion to Russian veterans' organisations.

Strategic Defence Review

32. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the delay in completing the strategic defence review. [16828]

Dr. Reid: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 499–500.

Chatham Dockyard

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims relating to alleged ionising radiation exposure at the workplace have been received by his Department from past civilian employees at Chatham Dockyard since it became a nuclear refit facility; and how many of these claimants have received compensation other than as a result of a common law claim. [17430]

Mr. Spellar: Chatham Dockyard became an approved nuclear submarine refit facility in 1966.

It is not possible to report how many claims relating to former Chatham Dockyard workers have been received by my Department since 1966 because this information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, such information has been held centrally since 23 October 1986 and my Department's records show that forty claims for compensation for illness allegedly caused by exposure to ionising radiation relating to former Ministry of Defence civilian employees who worked at Chatham Dockyard have been received.

On 27 July 1994, the Ministry of Defence joined the British Nuclear Fuels Compensation Scheme for Radiation Linked Diseases. Membership of the Scheme covers past and present radiation workers including those at the Royal Dockyards before contractorisation in 1987. Thirty-two claims have been submitted to the Scheme of which seven have been rejected as ineligible, and twenty-five are under consideration. Prior to July 1994, all claims for alleged exposure to ionising radiation from civilian employees were considered on the basis of whether or not the Department had a legal liability to pay compensation. One of the eight claims received prior to July 1994 resulted in damages being awarded by the High Court; the remaining seven claims were not pursued. Therefore, none of the claimants has to date received compensation other than as a result of a common law claim.

Hunting Licences

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total income to his Department from the issue of licences to hunt on his Department's land in the last year for which figures are available. [17301]

Mr. Spellar: The income that my Department will receive from those licences issued to hunt foxes on the Defence Estate in the 1997–98 season will amount to £800. The full administrative costs associated with the preparation of such licences will also be recovered.

HMS Vigilant

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident D5 Missiles were loaded on to HMS Vigilant in the United States after the completion of its most recent test firing of missiles there. [18320]

Mr. Spellar: Following a very successful Demonstration and Shakedown Operation, HMS Vigilant collected 14 unarmed Trident D5 missiles from the US Navy's Strategic Weapon Facility Atlantic at Kings Bay, Georgia in preparation for her entry into operational service.

UN Special Commission, Iraq

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if members of the reserve forces can serve with the UN Special Commission in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [18873]

Dr. Reid: A Call-Out Order is in force which permits members of the reserve forces to be called out under Section 54 of the Reserve Forces Act 1996 to support operations in the former republic of Yugoslavia and also in the region of Iraq. This includes service with the UN Special Commission in Iraq. Only suitably qualified volunteers are called out.

Low Flying

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the boundaries of the United Kingdom low-flying zones for fast jets. [16803]

Mr. Spellar: The UK Low Flying System is kept under continuous review to ensure that low flying is conducted as safely as possible with the minimum of disturbance to the public.

Recruitment

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase recruitment into the armed forces. [16807]

Dr. Reid: The Government is committed to addressing the very serious problem of undermanning inherited from the previous Administration and has made recruitment to the Armed Forces one of the top priorities. A number of new recruiting initiatives are in place and, there are signs that these measures are beginning to have an effect.

OCCAR Projects

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the in-service date slippage in the production of the COBRA project to date has been due to problems in partner countries; what measures he is undertaking to prevent similar problems in other OCCAR projects; and if he will make a statement. [17914]

Mr. Spellar: The slippage against the original in service date for the Counter Battery Radar (COBRA) system is 108 months. The principal reasons for the slippage are explained in the National Audit Office Major Project Report 1996 (HC238, session 1997–98, 15 August 1997). As the report notes:

(a) The timetable was first estimated when the Project Definition phase approved in 1986. The in-service date was reassessed at the end of that phase as a result of a better understanding of the programme and the work involved. This gave rise to a 23 month slippage from the original estimate.

(b) There were protracted negotiations between the three Governments, UK, France and Germany, and industry before the placement of the Development contract in 1990, which resulted in a further slippage of 36 months.

(c) The original in-service date was based on the assumption that there would be a seamless transition from development to production. This could not be achieved because a reduction in the number of Radars required by Germany invalidated the maximum price production option and led to the need for further development work, the Cost Reduction Programme, to reduce production costs. This programme resulted in a further slippage of 42 months.

There has been a further delay of seven months as the result of extended negotiations with EuroArt, the international industrial consortium, over their proposals to enter the production phase. We are currently assessing those proposals.

There are currently no UK collaborative projects being managed by Organisme Conjoint de Cooperation en matiere d'Armament (OCCAR), although we hope progressively to integrate projects, including COBRA, into the organisation. It is a primary aim of OCCAR to improve on past performance in the management of collaborative programmes. We will actively press for the adoption of best practice procurement techniques as part of our contribution to the development of OCCAR's procedures.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing (Staffordshire)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much the Government spent in each of the last 10 years on (a) new social housing stock and (b) maintenance of social housing stock in (i) Staffordshire, (ii) the West Midlands and (iii) England. [16871]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 20 November 1997]: The available information on allocation or outturns for expenditure on social housing stock made by the government since 1988–89 is set out below. A revised local authority capital finance regime and housing revenue subsidy system was introduced from April 1990, and thus prior years' figures are not directly comparable. Some of the resources allocated through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund and City Challenge are used for investment in social housing but this element is not separately identified in the allocations made, and they are therefore not included below.

Housing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Barclays Bank report concerning shortages of homes to buy. [17161]

Mr. Raynsford: Barclays Bank is one of a number of organisations reporting that there are currently more prospective buyers than there are homes for sale. Part of the reason is that confidence in the housing market has returned. Increasing numbers of first time buyers and people in rented accommodation are looking to buy but will have no home to sell. This imbalance is likely to level off as the market adjusts. The Government's planning policy guidance (PPG3: Housing) advises local planning authorities to ensure the availability of a continuous five year supply of housing land to cater for on-going housing requirements.

Lowell Park Mortgages

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the activities of Lowell Park Mortgages. [17529]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department can find no trace of any representations relating specifically to this company.

M25 Widening

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1997, Official Report, column 255, if he will now instruct the Highways Agency to send a substantive reply to Mr. Chris Fisher of FLAME consequent on the publication of the accelerated review. [17346]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In my previous answer to my hon. Friend on 3 July 1997, Official Report, column 255, I said that the Highways Agency would reply once the outcome of the accelerated review was announced. In the event, the decision was to carry out a further review of the M25 widening scheme, that work is continuing and I would not wish to prejudice the outcome. The Highways Agency will give a substantive response to FLAME once that review has been completed. In the meantime FLAME's letter did raise some factual questions and I have asked the Highways Agency to respond to these issues directly to FLAME. A copy of the letter will be placed in the House Library.

Vessels (Port State Inspections)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many vessels were subject to a port state inspection at (a) Flotta and (b) Sullom Voe in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1 January to 31 October 1997; and in each case what percentage of the total number of vessels were inspected. [17609]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 November 1997]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of vessels subject to port state inspection at (a) Flotta and (b) Sullom Voe in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1 January to 31 October 1997 and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of individual ships visiting the ports were inspected.

Port state inspection was carried out in Flotta on one vessel in 1996, and on three vessels in the period 1 January to 31 October 1997. This represents, respectively, one percent, and five percent of the number of individual ships visiting the port. In Sullom Voe, twenty one vessels were inspected in 1996, and seven in the period 1 January to 31 October 1997, which represents sixteen percent and six percent, respectively, of the number of individual ships visiting during those periods.

The selection of vessels for inspection takes account of their age, the safety record of the flag of registration, how recently the ship was inspected with Europe and the outcome, and inspection effort is directed to obtain the greatest impact.

Water Quality (Fylde Coast)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) studies and (b) investigations the Environment Agency (i) has carried out and (ii) plans to carry out to determine the reasons for the failure of the waters off the Fylde Coast to meet the standards required under the European Community Bathing Water Directive in the last five years. [17878]

Angela Eagle: Additional monitoring and investigations have been undertaken by the Environment Agency since completion of the Fylde Coast bathing water improvement scheme. These include checking the performance of the scheme, the integrity of the local sewerage network and investigations into additional sources of microbiological contamination. Further information on these investigations, which are not yet concluded, is available from the Agency.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the powers available to him to tackle coastal pollution and (b) the occasions on which those powers have been used in respect of the Fylde Coast in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [17877]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State has wide powers under the Water Resources Act 1991 relating to water pollution. In respect of bathing waters on the Fylde Coast, the effect of The Bathing Waters (Classification) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991 No. 1597) and the associated Direction and Notice is to require the Environment Agency to exercise its powers to ensure, as far as is practicable, that the Bathing Water Directive quality standards are met.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussion (a) his Department and (b) the Environment Agency have had with North West Water on the failure of the waters off the Fylde Coast to meet the requirements of the European community Bathing Waters Directive. [17879]

Angela Eagle: Performance of the Fylde Coast bathing waters has been the subject of considerable discussion between the Department, the Environment Agency and North West Water, and this will continue. Improving compliance with the Bathing Water Directive is a high priority for the Government.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how health and safety issues arising from the year 2000 computer problem are being addressed by his Department. [18026]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has commissioned research into the safety-critical aspects of date discontinuity problems associated with the year 2000 computer problem and the research will be published shortly. HSE has also established a committee within government to ensure that the results of this research and other experience can be shared with enforcing authorities and used as a basis of advice to dutyholders who may have safety-critical systems. Further guidance will be published next year. Health and Safety inspectors will remind dutyholders of their legal responsibilities to make sure that control systems are safe and will take enforcement action where the risks and circumstances justify it.

Commuting

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in what ways his Department's objective of reducing commuting is reflected in planning guidance. [18303]

Mr. Raynsford: Existing Planning Policy Guidance on Transport (PPG13) and Planning Policy Guidance on Town Centres and Retail Developments (PPG6) encourage local authorities to locate major generators of travel demand in existing centres which are highly accessible by means other than the private care, and to strengthen existing local centres in both urban and rural areas which offer a wide range of everyday community, shopping and employment opportunities, in order to reduce the need to travel.

The Government regards the closer integration of transport and land-use planning as an important part of its current wide-ranging review of transport policy. The White Paper on integrated transport is due in the spring.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what would have been the effect in 1997–98 on (a) the standard spending assessment and (b) the revenue support grant for (i) each class of authority and (ii) each local authority in England, had the indicator for shared and non-permanent accommodation been removed from the social index used in the calculation of SSAs, assuming that the national aggregate finance had remained at the current level. [17963]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: Figures showing the effect in 1997–98 on standard spending assessments (SSAs) of removing the shared and non-permanent accommodation indicator from the Social Index are not readily available. Figures showing the effect of the same change in 1996–97 are given for each class of authority and each local authority in England in the "Standard Spending Assessments Sub-Group Report for 1997–98", published by the Department of the Environment in 1996, a copy of which is in the Library.

It is not possible to quantify the effect of the change on revenue support grant (RSG), because the total amount of RSG available depends upon, among other things, the amount of the SSA Reduction Grant payable for the relevant year. This, in turn, depends upon the decisions made on the arrangements for the payment of SSA Reduction Grant and the pattern of SSA changes in the relevant year.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what would have been the change in (a) standard spending assessment and (b) revenue support grant in 1997–98 for (i) each local authority in London and (ii) London as a whole, had the resident population been used as the client group in the 'All Other Services' SSA, assuming that the national aggregate external finance had remained at the current level. [17962]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: Figures showing the effect in 1997–98 on standard spending assessments (SSAs) of using the resident population as the client group for the purpose of adjusting for extra costs due to population density, population sparsity and varying socio-economic characteristics in the 'All Other Services' SSA are given for each local authority in London, and for London as a whole, in the "Standard Spending Assessments Sub-Group Report for 1998–99". A copy of this document is in the Library.

It is not possible to quantify the effect of the change on Revenue Support Grant (RSG), because the total amount of RSG available depends upon, among other things, the amount of the SSA Reduction Grant payment for the relevant year. This, in turn, depends upon the decisions made on the arrangements for the payment of SSA Reduction Grant and the pattern of SSA changes in the relevant year.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the standard spending assessment in 1997–98, for (a) the City of Westminster, (b) the London Borough of Islington and (c) the London Borough of Southwark, indicating for each the (i) density of population, (ii) proportion of people from ethnic minorities, (iii) proportion of people living in over-crowded accommodation, (iv) proportion of people aged over 85 years and (v) proportion of elderly people living alone. [17971]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: Information for the City of Westminster, the London Borough of Islington and the London Borough of Southwark on the Standard Spending Assessments for 1997–98, the proportion of people likely to be from ethnic minorities and the proportion of people living in overcrowded accommodation is available in the "Standard Spelling Assessment Handbook 1997–98", published by the Department of the Environment. A copy of this document is in the Library.

Information for the same three authorities on the density of population, the proportion of people aged over 85 years and the proportion of elderly people living along is also available in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes to the standard spending assessment formula methodology he is assessing for implementation in 1998–99; and if he will indicate for each option its potential financial impact on each class of local authority in England expressed (a) as the net change in its standard spending assessment and (b) as the net change in its standing spending assessment divided by (i) the aggregate number of Band D equivalent dwellings and (ii) chargeable dwellings, as used for council tax setting in 1997–98, for that class of authority. [17972]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: We shall announce shortly our proposals for changes to the Standard Spending Assessments (SSA) formula methodology for implementation in 1998–99. In reaching our decisions, we have had regard particularly to the possible changes discussed this year with the Local Government Association. A report on these discussions, including illustrations of the effect of possible changes on SSAs, is given in the "Standard Spending Assessments Sub-Group Report for 1998–99", a copy of which is in the Library.

Figures for each class of authority in England of the aggregate number of Band D dwellings and the number of chargeable dwellings, as used for council tax-setting in 1997–98, are also available in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the submissions his Department has received on the 1998–99 local authority settlements; and if he will summarise their main recommendations and indicate the date on which they were received. [17969]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of submissions from the local authority associations, local authorities and others, including, for example, considerable correspondence during the SSA sub-group's consideration of SSAs for 1998–99. It would be disproportionately expensive to cover all submissions received on this issue. We have been carefully considering all submissions as we take decisions on our proposals for local government revenue expenditure in the coming financial year. We will be announcing the provisional settlement next week and local authorities and others will have the opportunity to comment on our proposals in the consultation process that will follow.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what would have been the effect in 1997–98 on the (a) standard spending assessment and (b) revenue support grant for each (i) class of authority and (ii) local authority in England had the share of SSA for additional educational needs changed in line with changes in numbers of income support claimants, assuming the national aggregate external finance had remained at the current level. [17967]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: Figures showing the effect in 1997–98 on Standard Spending Assessments (SSAs) of changing the share of SSA for additional educational needs in line with changes in numbers of income support claimants are not readily available. Figures showing the effect of the same change in 1996–97 are given for each class of authority and each local authority in England in the "Standard Spending Assessments Sub-Group Report for 1997–98", published by the Department of the Environment in 1996. A copy of this document is in the Library.

It is not possible to quantify the effect of the change on Revenue Support Grant (RSG), because the total amount of RSG available depends upon, among other things, the amount of the SSA Reduction Grant payable for the relevant year. This, in turn, depends upon the decisions made on the arrangements for the payment of SSA Reduction Grant and the pattern of SSA changes in the relevant year.

London Government

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which regional chamber will cover London; and if he will set out its boundaries. [18177]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: In July we published proposals for a new elected strategic authority for London, to cover the area comprising the 32 London Boroughs and the Corporation of the City of London. Subject to a referendum on 7 May, we shall introduce substantive legislation next year to establish the new authority.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department proposes to treat the GLA as a tier of regional government. [18172]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: The GLA will be a new form of city-wide strategic local Government.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reviews his Department plans of the use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation by local authorities. [18577]

Mr. Raynsford: We monitor the extent to which local authorities use bed-and-breakfast accommodation for homeless households through the quarterly statistics that authorities supply to us.

Bed-and-breakfast hotels may have a role to play as very short-term accommodation, but, as my Department's Code of Guidance on the homelessness legislation states, should be used only as a last resort.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria he uses to determine which planning appeals for supermarket developments are called in for his own determination. [18199]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 November 1997]: In recovering planning appeals for his determination, as distinct from planning applications called in prior to decision by a local planning authority, my right hon. Friend has regard to the criteria in paragraph 36 of the Government's response to the Fifth Report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985–86 (Cmnd. paper 43).

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the prohibition of appeals against a planning application which is allowed by a local authority. [17242]

Mr. Raynsford: In recent years, the scope for third parties to participate in the planning process has been increased by requiring that development plan policies are adopted only after widespread consultation and making it a statutory requirement that all planning applications are publicised. It is the responsibility of local planning authorities to act in the general public interest when determining planning applications and we therefore have no plans to introduce a third party right of appeal against the granting of planning permission. Such a right could be used to delay or effectively veto many acceptable developments needed for the health and growth of our economy.

Water Saving Trust

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a water saving trust with a similar remit to the Energy Saving Trust. [18502]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to establish such a trust. The Environment Act 1995 introduced a duty for the water companies to promote the efficient use of water, and we look to the water companies to fulfil this duty with vigour, imagination and enthusiasm.

A49 (Shropshire)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many fatalities have occurred as a result of accidents on the A49 in Shropshire in each of the past 10 years. [18410]

1988: 0
1989: 5
1990: 8
1991: 2
1992: 9
1993: 5
1994: 8
1995: 4
1996: 4.

Liability Orders

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to amend legislation to allow the cancellation of liability orders where these have been made in error. [17241]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department's recent consultation paper on council tax enforcement included a proposal to give local authorities a power to request a magistrates' court to overturn a liability order where they consider it to have been made in error. The outcome of the consultation exercise will be announced shortly.

Factory Noise

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review permitted noise levels from urban factories. [17243]

Angela Eagle: It is for local authorities to deal with noise pollution from urban factories. Noise from certain factories will be considered as part of my Department's continuing consultation on the future implementation of EC Directive 96/61 "Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control".

Waste Management (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the holders of a waste management licence in West Yorkshire. [17244]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency is required to maintain a public register of current waste management licences. I have been informed by the Environment Agency that its public register records the following as holders of waste management licences in West Yorkshire:

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions were pursued, in West Yorkshire, for contraventions of waste management regulations in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [17245]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency is responsible for the enforcement of waste management legislation. I have been informed by the Environment Agency that the number of waste-related prosecutions in West Yorkshire brought by the Agency, and prior to 1 April 1996 by waste regulation authorities, for the calendar years 1993–1997 is as follows:

	Number
1994	20
1995	16
1996	20
1997 (to date)	25

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions the Health and Safety Executive has brought against employers who have failed adequately to control exposure to substances hazardous to health under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994 since January 1995 in which the employer was charged with failing to reduce the level of exposure below the maximum exposure limit; and how many have been successful. [18414]

Angela Eagle: Such prosecutions can be brought only under Regulation 7(1) of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994 for failure to ensure that exposure is adequately controlled. Charges cannot be laid separately under Regulation 7(6) which explains the duty with regard to substances for which a maximum exposure limit is specified. There have been five informations laid under Regulation 7(1) resulting in five convictions during 1996–97. This information is provisional. Information prior to 1996–97 is not available at this level of detail due to the coding system then used by HSE.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions the Health and Safety Executive has brought against employers who have failed adequately to control exposure to substances hazardous to health under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994; and how many have been successful. [18413]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive has brought 28 prosecutions under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994. Of these, 22 have resulted in convictions. The provisional figures for 1997 are 11 prosecutions resulting in 11 convictions.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures Health and Safety Executive officials are taking to ensure that levels of exposure to substances hazardous to health are reduced below the maximum exposure limit. [18415]

Angela Eagle: Where a maximum exposure limit (MEL) has been assigned, the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994, as amended, require employers to control exposure to as low a level as is reasonably practicable and in any case below that MEL.

Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectors enforce COSHH by assessing employers' arrangements for controlling health risks and, in particular, the measures they take to reduce exposures, including monitoring to test compliance with exposure limits.

HSE also publishes considerable practical advice on controlling exposure and inspectors refer to such guidance as illustrating good practice. Publicity and enforcement campaigns are also targeted at priority classes of substances, many of which have maximum exposure limits.

"Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas"

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department has taken in the last 12 months to assess the extent of the problem of failure to report in pursuance of the recommendation of Lord Donaldson's Report "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas". [18187]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R. Bradley, to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the steps taken to assess the extent of the problem of failure to report, pursuant to recommendation 71 of Lord Donaldson's Report, "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas."

Since the publication of the report by Lord Donaldson the Department has implemented Council Directive 93/75/EEC. The implementing Regulations make it compulsory for masters of vessels which find themselves in circumstances which may cause pollution or damage, either to themselves or to the UK coastline, to report to the Coastguard. This significantly strengthens the position as against that prevailing at the time of the report.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations of Lord Donaldson's Inquiry Report "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas" in a form similar to that placed in the Library on 31 October 1996. [18186]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government is currently reviewing the progress made in implementing the recommendations of Lord Donaldson's Inquiry. I will place copies of a progress report in the Library shortly.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department has taken to monitor the operation of the voluntary certification scheme issued by the Marine Safety Agency in May 1995 in pursuance of recommendation 51(c) of Lord Donaldson's Report "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas". [18190]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R. Bradley, to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about what steps the Department has taken to monitor the operation of the voluntary certification scheme issued by the Marine Safety Agency in May 1995 in pursuance of recommendation 51(c) of Lord Donaldson's Report, "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas".

The voluntary certification scheme, published in Merchant Shipping Notice number M.1616, encouraged ship operators to gain certification to the International Safety Management (ISM) Code in advance of the mandatory compliance dates.

Our records indicate that those passenger roll-on/roll-off ferries and their operating companies, which were required to comply with the Code under Council Regulation (EC) No 3051/95, have all achieved certification.

In addition, good progress is being made on the certification of companies and the vessels they operate which are required to comply with the Code by 1 July 1998, by virtue of the new Chapter IX to the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) 1974 Convention. The vessel types affected in this phase of implementation are oil tankers, chemical tankers, gas carriers, bulk carriers and cargo high speed craft, all of 500 gross tonnage and over, and all passenger ships including passenger high speed craft. We are liaising closely with ship operators who have already applied under the voluntary scheme, to ensure certification is achieved as soon as possible. We have been in contact also with the few who have not yet formally applied to enquire about their progress and intentions.

Coastguard Minute 20/96

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the text of Coastguard Minute 20/96 sent to coastguard stations in July 1996 [18191]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard agency, Mr. C. Harris, to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Coastguard Minute 20/96.

I enclose a copy of Coastguard Minute 20/96 "SAR situation reports (SITREPS) and morning press reports" as requested.

HM COASTGUARD

Coastguard Minute 20/96

Distribution C

Sar Situation Reports (SITREPS) And Morning Press Reports

Ref: A. CG3 Vol. 3 Part 2 Section 7

B. CG3 Vol. 2 Part 5 Section 1

1. Representations have been received at CGHQ concerning the publication in Lloyd's List of information on alerts, emergencies and equipment failures, passed by the Offshore Industry and Merchant Vessels to HM Coastguard in good faith and on the understanding that there will be an embargo on further publication. However, despite the "For information not for publication" affix, these articles are being published.

2. Staff should be well aware of the value of rapid and open reporting between Industry and ourselves and should be conscious that unnecessary media emphasis on what turns out to be a precautionary report is not conducive to maintaining the necessary rapport. We must however, also be mindful, as a government agency, of being aware of the publics' expectation for us to report emergency incidents without fear or favour.

3. (a) Effective upon receipt of this minute, SAR situation reports are not to be transmitted to Lloyds, except where positive SAR[1] action occurs.

(b) Reports in accordance with Ref. B (Paragraph 1.6.2) are to continue, however to clarify the situation, the term "wreck or casualty" does not include precautionary alerts or reports of vessel stoppages.

4. In accordance with Ref. A, SITREPS should normally only be sent when positive SAR action is taken or required; for example, precautionary alerts from an offshore installation or a report of a vessel stopped for mechanical repairs would not normally warrant a SITREP unless/until the situation deteriorated.

5. In future, tighter control is to be maintained on the occasions when SAR SITREPs are released to external authorities. SWOs/DMTs/RDOs are to assess the requirements for SITREPs more rigorously, paying particularly attention to the SITREP address list.

6. Morning reports to CGHQ should continue as per Ref. A. Where these are used for external distribution, they should be edited to reflect only those incidents where positive SAR action was taken.

7. This Coastguard Minute remains extant until superseded or incorporated into Coastguard Instructions.

On-train Telephones

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that public on-train telephones are equipped with induction loops; and what steps his Department has taken in pursuing this matter with the Office of the Rail Regulator. [17931]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Regulator will be reviewing his Code of Practice for Disabled Passengers in the New Year; the revised Code will take account of the regulations made under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The draft regulations include a proposal that on-train telephones are equipped with inductive couplers.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the proposed regulations for railway rolling stock under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will ensure that public on-train telephones are equipped with induction loops. [17932]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently drawing up draft regulations for railway rolling stock under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. They will be issued for public consultation early in the New Year.

The regulations cover a wide range of features to ensure that disabled people can travel on trains in safety and with reasonable comfort. The draft regulations include a proposal that public on-train telephones are equipped with inductive couplers.

South Downs

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has received about the protection of the South Downs; [17922]

(2) when he plans to announce a decision about the future of the South Downs Conservation Board; [17923]

(3) what representations he has received about the future of the South Downs Conservation Board. [17924]

Angela Eagle: Ministers have received a number of representations about the protection of the South Downs and about the future of the Sussex Downs Conservation Board. At our request, the Countryside Commission is carrying out the consultation on the long term arrangements for the South Downs. A conference was held in Brighton on 26 November to launch the consultation, at which it was announced that the consultation period has been extended to 1 February. Copies of the consultation document are available from the Countryside Commission's London office and from libraries within the South Downs and surrounding towns. The Commission will analyse the responses and bring the results and advice to Ministers next spring.

Port Control Inspections

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of (a) all foreign flag vessels, (b) oil tankers, (c) passenger ships and (d) bulk carriers were the subject of port state control inspections in United Kingdom ports in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) January to October 1997. [18189]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R. Bradley, to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the inspection of foreign flag vessels in United Kingdom ports.

Please find below the figures you requested. You will note that Marine Safety Agency statistics are compiled by financial year rather than by calendar year.

Port state control inspections by ship type

Per cent.

	1995/6	1996/7	April–October 1997
All foreign vessels	30.6	27.4	25.9
Oil tankers	17.4	15.8	10.0
Passenger ships	71.8	91.7	85.7
Bulk carriers	65.3	74.7	74.8

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what United Kingdom port state control inspections of the vessel "Green Lily" have taken place since 1 January 1996. [18188]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R. Bradley, to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. James Wallace, dated 1 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question abut the vessel "Green Lily".

Since 1 January 1996, "Green Lily" has been inspected once by the Marine Safety Agency. This inspection was conducted on 24 March 1997 at Hull. No deficiencies were noted.

Alexandra Palace and Park

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the correspondence between his Department and the London Borough of Haringey since 1 January 1990 regarding Alexandra Palace and Park; and if he will make a statement. [18193]

Ms Armstrong: The Department has had a considerable volume of correspondence with Haringey over Alexandra Palace and Park in the last seven years. Much of its relates to a deficit of approximately £55 million which the authority has accrued in respect of the property. As such, a large part of the content of these letters is therefore commercially sensitive and is exempt from release to a third party under the Department's Code of Practice on Open Government.

Identifying the correspondence and the information that is confidential would be time-consuming and could not be undertaken except at disproportionate cost.

Driving Licences (Diabetics)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what medical conditions are specifically identified in legislation as preventing a person holding a licence enabling them to drive a vehicle in Groups C and D. [17392]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Section 92 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 requires the Secretary of State to refuse to grant a licence if he is satisfied that an applicant is suffering from a relevant disability. Relevant disabilities which are a bar to the holding of a Category C or D licence are:

inability to read a number plate under prescribed conditions; eye abnormality which prevents a person from meeting prescribed visual acuity standards, or sight in one eye only;

diabetes requiring insulin treatment;

epileptic attack or treatment for epilepsy within the previous 10 years; liability to seizures other than as a result of epilepsy; liability to disabling giddiness or fainting, including as a result of an implanted electrical cardiac device;

severe mental disorder;

persistent misuse of alcohol or drugs;

becoming a High Risk Offender as a result of disqualification for a drink/drive offence; and any other disability which is likely to lead to a danger to other road users.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications of the proposed restrictions on issuing driving licences to people with insulin-dependent diabetes on those whose current employment requires them to drive vehicles in Groups C and D; if he will review such restrictions to allow licences to be granted in very exceptional cases; and if he will make a statement. [17393]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Legislation has since 1991 prohibited the grant of category C and D licences—giving entitlement to lorries over 7.5 tonnes and buses with more than 16 seats—to insulin dependent diabetics. The provisions which come into force on 1 January 1998 apply only to those having entitlement to drive vehicles in category C1 (lorries up to 7.5 tonnes) and category D1 (minibuses) obtained through passing a test to drive cars. The D1 entitlement is qualified "Not for hire or reward" and holders should therefore not be employed as drivers. It is impossible to establish the number of people who are employed as drivers of C1 vehicles who are insulin-dependent. In any case a number of studies by experts in the field on the consequences of insulin treatment have shown that insulin treatment leads to a significant risk of hypoglycaemia. This can lead to loss of consciousness, as well as other effects such as diminished judgment. It is well established that hypoglycaemia can occur without warning and a number of accidents have directly resulted from this. The Honorary Advisory Panel on Diabetes and Driving have advised that there are, in their judgment, no exceptional cases, and confirmed that granting licences to drive lorries up to 7.5 tonnes and minibuses to those who are insulin-dependent is not in the interests of road safety.

Coastguard Reports

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions between 1 August 1996 and 31 October 1997 coastguard search-and-rescue situations reports were not released to Lloyd's List. [18192]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Social Services (Oxfordshire)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received from Oxfordshire about the reductions in social service provision in the county. [18390]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations about the funding of Oxfordshire County Council. Many of these have referred to proposals by the County Council to make reductions in its services, including social services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Big Cats

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibility his Department has for monitoring sightings of big cats. [17874]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office has no responsibility for monitoring the sightings of big cats.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sightings of big cats have been reported to the police in Norfolk. [17875]

Mr. Michael: Since 1 July 1997, Norfolk Constabulary have received 54 reports of a "big cat", mostly sighted in the Norwich area.

Young Offenders

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it takes, on average, from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders, and for other young offenders. [18874]

Mr. Straw: Information on the time between arrest and sentence for young offenders is not available from historical records, as the previous Government did not collect data on time intervals from arrest. However, we have recently completed a survey of persistent young offenders dealt with by the youth justice system in 1996. That survey indicates that in 1996 the average time between arrest and sentence for persistent young offenders was 142 days.

An Audit Commission survey of 600 young offenders in 1996 suggests that the average time between arrest and sentence for all young offenders was 121 days[1]. The Time Intervals Survey, published by the Lord Chancellor's Department, indicates that in 1996 the average time from offence to completion for defendants in indictable cases dealt with by the Youth Court was 131 days. The White Paper "No More Excuses—A New Approach to Tackling Youth Crime in England and Wales" (Cm 3809) erroneously stated (paragraph 7.1) that this figure of 131 days was the average interval between arrest and sentence for a young offender.

We are ensuring that systems are put in place to monitor the time between arrest and sentence in the future for persistent young offenders and other young offenders.

Mukesh Gajjar

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the deportation order in the case of Mukesh Gajjar. [18316]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The decision not to revoke the deportation order against Mukesh Gajjar is currently under appeal to the Immigration Appellate Authority.

Final Product Cosmetic Testing Ban

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of animal deaths, broken down by species, which will be averted by the voluntary ban on final product cosmetic testing on animals. [17885]

Mr. George Howarth: The "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1996" were laid in the House in July. Table 10 shows that 252 procedures were for the purpose of safety testing of finished cosmetic products, the category of tests covered by the voluntary ban. Table 10a shows that these involved 220 animals (34 rats, 162 guinea-pigs and 24 rabbits). Most of these animals would only have experienced low levels of suffering and would not have died as a result of the procedure.

The ban on cosmetic product testing is an important first step. We announced on 6 November that we would also be exploring a ban on the testing of ingredients for "vanity" products and finished household products.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan asylum seekers have been granted refugee status or leave to remain in the UK in the past 12 months (a) without the intervention of a special adjudicator and (b) following intervention by a special adjudicator. [17912]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the period 1 November 1996 to 31 October 1997, a total of 1,900 initial decisions, excluding dependants, were made on asylum applications lodged by Sri Lankan nationals. Of these, 40 were to recognise the applicant as a refugee and grant asylum, 10 were to refuse asylum but grant exceptional leave (to enter/remain in the United Kingdom) and 1,850 were to refuse both asylum and exceptional leave.

Provisional information indicates that, during the same time period, special adjudicators determined approximately 1,140 appeals lodged by Sri Lankan nationals against the refusal of asylum. Of these, an estimated 8 per cent. were allowed, 87 per cent. were dismissed and 5 per cent. were withdrawn.

An allowed appeal does not necessarily result in an automatic grant of refugee status or a grant of exceptional, or other, leave to remain in the United Kingdom. In cases where the allowed appeal relates to an initial refusal of asylum on safe third country grounds, the Asylum Directorate will then usually consider the application substantively—any subsequent, adverse decision attracting a further right of appeal before the special adjudicator. Additionally, in cases where reasonable grounds exist, the Home Office may elect to challenge an adjudicator's determination by lodging an appeal with the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

I regret that a reliable breakdown of asylum decisions made following appeal determinations is not available.

Prisons (Boards of Visitors Reports)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates of publication for each board of visitors annual report for 1996 and (a) each privately managed prison and (b) each publicly managed prison; and if he will make a statement. [18086]

Ms Quin: Each Board of Visitors has a statutory duty under Prison Rule 97 to report annually to the Home Secretary on the state of the prison and its administration and include advice and suggestions as they consider appropriate.

Boards of Visitors Annual Reports are not published documents. They are made to the Secretary of State who permits the Board to publish their Annual Report, if they wish, subject to allowing a period of notice to elapse before publication and to removal of any material which is confidential.

Fifty Boards have published their 1996 Annual Reports. The Boards and the publication dates of their Reports are as follows:

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the renewed contract between his Department and United Kingdom Detention Services Limited in respect of Her Majesty's Prison, Blakenhurst; and if he will make a statement. [18087]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedford (Mr. Hall) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, columns 247–49, that he would extend the contract for the management of Her Majesty's Prison, Blakenhurst by UKDS Limited for a further three years. The detailed contractual terms are being finalised and, as is usual for prison management contracts, a copy of the signed contract will be placed in the Library.

Prison Service

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions and on what basis the Prison Service Contracts and Competition Group has provided consultancy, advice and assistance to foreign governments and private contractors; what income has been received as a result on those occasions; and if he will make a statement. [18090]

Ms Quin: Since 1995–97, members of the Prison Service Contracts and Competition Group (CCG) have met or provided information on request to officials of the following national governments:

Australia
Colombia
Canada
Fiji
Israel
Japan
Trinidad and Tobago
New Zealand
United States of America

Similar assistance has been provided to the following provincial or state governments or administrations:

South Australia
Western Australia
Victoria
New Brunswick
Nova Scotia
Ontario
Oklahoma

These contacts were either part of an itinerary of visits arranged by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, or, in the majority of cases, reflect the reciprocal exchange of information between the Prison Service and other prison services throughout the world.

More extensive advice and assistance was provided this year to the Republic of South Africa in connection with its pilot programme for the design, construction, management and financing (DCMF) by private contractors of 5,400 new prison places. The Head of CCG was an independent member of the evaluation panel that assessed application by contractors to prequalify to tender for these contracts. CCG also arranged a short briefing programme in the United Kingdom, which included meetings with officials at the Treasury and staff of the Private Finance Panel Executive, for officials from the Republic of South Africa's ministries of Public Works, Corrections and Finance.

There were no charges for such assistance; most of the meetings were of a short duration.

Relations with private contractors are restricted to the administration of existing contracts and actions necessary for the procurement of future contracts.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much income the Prison Service received for staff recruitment advertisements placed in Prison Service publications by private prison and escort service operators in the last six financial years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [18091]

Ms Quin: Prison Service News has carried three such advertisements during the past two years, earning from them £990 in the financial year 1996–97 and £200 in the current financial year (to the end of October). There were no such advertisements placed in 1995–96, the only other year for which such detailed advertising records are available.

All income from such advertising is appropriated in aid of Prison Service expenditure through the Supply Estimates.

Departmental Staff (Early Retirement)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officials in his Department and its agencies, in the grade of assistant secretary and above, or equivalent, took early retirement, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; what is the estimated additional cost of those early retirements; how many in each year retired on (a) medical grounds and (b) grounds related to performance; how many were subsequently re-engaged for any period on a consultancy basis; and if he will make a statement. [18093]

Mr. Straw: Details of the number of officials in the grade of assistant secretary and above, or equivalent—now members of the Senior Civil Service—who retired early, including those leaving on medical grounds, are shown in the table. Information is available only for the last six years. During this period, no early retirements on grounds of performance are recorded.

Number of officials in the Home Department (and agencies) at SCS level (previously grade 5 and above or equivalent) who have taken early retirement since 1992

1994	6 (1)
1995	4
1996	[1]19
1997 (to end November)	3 (2)

[1] Includes 18 early retirements resulting from loss of senior posts following Home Office Senior Management Review.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public appointments he has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16780]

Mr. Straw: Since 1 May 1997, I have made 323 public appointments, of which 58 (18 per cent.) receive remuneration.

The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all Departments in an aggregated form.

Private Prison Contracts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide details of each default notice issued in the last two years for failure to comply with private prison contract conditions; and if he will make a statement; [18088]

(2) if he will list the dates, amounts and details of the financial penalties incurred by private prison operators for contract failures; and if he will make a statement. [18089]

Ms Quin: There have been two occasions when the contractors managing prisons were penalised financially. First, in February 1994, a payment of £41,167 (excluding value added tax) was withheld from UKDS Limited because of an incident at Her Majesty's Prison, Blakenhurst, which resulted in a temporary reduction in cell availability. Second, a deduction of £526 was made from payments due to Group 4 under the contractual performance measurement system for Her Majesty's Prison, Buckley Hall.

Notices issued to contractors managing prisons when they fail to comply with their contract are now termed improvement notices; in the past, they have sometimes been described as cure or default notices. The number of and reasons for such notices issued to privately managed prisons since 1 November 1995 are set out in the table below.

Prison	Date	Reason for notice
Her Majesty's Prison Blakenhurst	22 November 1995	Failure to provide a full set of standing orders in the prison library
	3 September 1996	Failure to maintain accurately prisoners' records
	25 March 1997	Failure to provide meals for prisoners transferring to another prison
Her Majesty's Prison Buckley Hall	17 January 1996	Failure to operate fully the personal officer scheme
	17 January 1996	Failure to provide sufficient work opportunities
	15 August 1996	Employment of three members of staff without security clearance
	10 April 1997	Failure to comply with procedures laid down in the Security Manual
	6 November 1997	Operation of prison shop by subcontractor without Her Majesty's Prison Service authorisation

Deaths in Custody

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the access by the family or representatives of a deceased prisoner to the Prison Ombudsman; and if he will make a statement. [18278]

Ms Quin: We have received one representation from the family of a prisoner who died in custody, and another from the campaigning group Inquest on behalf of the family of a prisoner who died in custody. Inquest have also raised the question of the Prison Ombudsman's remit separately with my right hon. Friend.

The Prison Service already carries out an internal investigation into every death in custody and the Service is currently considering whether future reports should be made public. In light of the outcome of this review, we will consider whether there is a case for extending the Prison Ombudsman's remit.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths of prisoners have occurred at HMP Belmarsh, in the past year; what were the causes; and if he will make a statement. [18279]

Ms Quin: Four prisoners at Belmarsh prison have died in the past year. The inquest on one of these deaths was completed on 10 September 1997; the cause of death was hanging. The remaining inquests are outstanding; the cause of death in these cases has been initially classified as apparent suicide by hanging.

Myra Hindley

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors lay behind his decision to keep Myra Hindley in prison for the rest of her life. [17720]

Mr. Straw: Following my reply to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Ms Jones) on 10 November 1997, Official Report, columns 419–20, about a revised policy on setting tariffs for mandatory life sentence prisoners, Myra Hindley's solicitors asked that I should indicate whether I proposed to stand by her present whole life tariff. I have looked at the papers considered by my predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), before he set her present whole life tariff. They include descriptions of the crimes for which she was convicted, the judicial comments made in her case, and her representations. I saw no reason to depart from his decision. Myra Hindley's solicitors wish to make further representations on the subject of whether her whole life tariff should be reduced by reason of "exceptional progress" by her. When I receive such representations, I shall consider them.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the (a) desirability and (b) practicality of making the installation of smoke alarms in domestic dwellings mandatory; [17645]

(2) what steps he is taking to encourage the installation of smoke alarms in domestic dwellings [17644]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government recognise the significant contribution made by smoke alarms to the protection of life and property. The installation of properly maintained smoke alarms in households has been the centrepiece of our efforts to reduce fire casualties for some time.

Since 1992, the Building Regulations require all new dwellings in England and Wales to have a smoke alarm system installed. For existing properties, the policy has been to ensure that people are aware of the potentially life saving benefits of smoke alarms; and to encourage them to install smoke alarms in their homes and maintain and test them regularly. These efforts, and those of brigades, increased ownership from 9 per cent. in 1987 to its present figure of 79 per cent.

Our efforts on fire prevention certainly need to be redoubled. In this respect, I welcome the report earlier this month to my right hon. Friend from the Community Fire Safety Task Force. The Task Force considered the mandatory installation of smoke alarms, but felt this would not be practicable. However, they argued for the refocusing of the fire service towards prevention and set ambitious targets for reducing the incidence of fires, deaths and casualties in the home.

There is clearly still more to be done to install smoke alarms in those households who are most vulnerable or at greatest risk of having a fire. The Task Force report identifies means of achieving this. We are consulting widely on their recommendations and in light of responses will decide on the way forward.

Visitors' Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an independent appeals procedure for refusal of visitors' visas. [18317]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are committed to providing a streamlined right of appeal for visitors denied a visa and we are examining the options for achieving this. We hope to make an announcement in due course.

Voting Systems

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Independent Commission on the Voting System. [18561]

Mr. Straw: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has today appointed Lord Jenkins of Hillhead to be the Chairman of the Independent Commission on the Voting System. The other members will be Lord Alexander of Weedon, Lady Gould of Potternewton, Sir John Chilcot and Mr. David Lipsey.

The Commission's terms of reference will be:

"The Commission shall be free to consider and recommend any appropriate system or combination of systems in recommending an alternative to the present system for Parliamentary elections to be put before the people in the Government's referendum.

The Commission shall observe the requirement for broad proportionality, the need for stable government, an extension of voter choice and the maintenance of a link between hon. Members and geographical constituencies".

The Commission will begin its work early in the new year and has been asked to report within twelve months.

Prisoners (Books and Magazines)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Prison Service's policy on the taking of books and magazines into prisons for inmates. [16181]

Ms Quin: The taking of books and magazines into prisons is covered by Prison Service policy on prisoners' property brought in on reception and visits, or sent in by post. Books or magazines of a category allowed by the local establishment may be handed in and then checked by the prison authorities before giving it to the prisoner. The Governor of each establishment has discretion to restrict the handing in of any property within the powers given by Prison Rules 41, 42 and 85 and Young Offender Institution Rules 45 and 69 (Copies available in the Library) to avoid, for example:

(a) undermining the incentive and earned privileges scheme; or

(b) compromising the security of establishments.

The Governor of each establishment has complete discretion over the handing in of property. If, for security reasons, a particular prison restricts the handing in of property which prisoners may normally have in their possession, facilities will be made for prisoners to purchase these items either through the prison shop or through approved mail order arrangements by suing their private cash and/or earnings.

It is planned to review existing policy on the handing in of prisoners' property during 1998–99.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a breakdown of the personnel of each fire brigade by ethnic origin, sex and grade. [17785]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The Central Fire Brigades Advisory Councils' Joint Committee on Equal Opportunities produces an annual report which includes statistical information on fire brigade personnel. The Committee's Fourth annual report was published on 22 October 1997 and circulated to all fire authorities and brigades. I am placing a copy in the Library. The report includes data on personnel employed by fire brigades, analysed by gender and ethnic origin.

The attached tables, based on recent statistical returns from fire brigades, provide a further breakdown, by rank, gender and ethnic origin, of uniformed personnel within the fire service for England and Wales for the year ending 31 March 1997. Copies of these have also been placed in the Library.

"Corpus Juris"

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 28 October 1997, Official Report, column 778, concerning the document "Corpus Juris", under what authority and terms of reference and for what reason this paper was produced; and by what Ministerial Council of the Community and under which article or treaty any formal proposal would be made. [17319]

Mr. Michael: I have no information about the provenance of the document beyond the fact, which is stated in the introduction to the document and was referred to by my hon. Friend in his earlier question, that the work was done by researchers at the request of the Director General for Financial Control of the European Commission.

As has been made clear, the paper has no status beyond that of a possible discussion document, for the commissioning of which no formal Treaty base is required. None of the recommendations has been formally proposed in the Council, nor has the paper itself been formally presented to or discussed in any European Union forum. If the Commission were formally to table proposals arising from the text, it would be for it alone to decide where, and on which Treaty base, to introduce them; that would clearly depend on the content of such proposals. In some areas to which the text refers, e.g. police and judicial co-operation, the Commission does not have any formal right of initiative. Any proposal in these areas would therefore need to be presented by a member state.

Since the document covers issues which span the First and Third Pillars of the Treaty on European Union. I do not think I can usefully speculate about which article might be used if a formal proposal were made or which Ministerial Council might be involved.

Asylum Seekers (Nigeria)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for asylum from Nigeria have (a) been granted refugee status, (b) been given exceptional leave to remain, (c) not yet had their application determined and (d) been removed to Nigeria for each of the last 10 years and for 1997 to the latest available date. [18101]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom from nationals of Nigeria, excluding dependants, initial decisions[1,2,3], and removals/voluntary departures, for the years 1987 to 1996 and 1997 (January to October)

Campsfield Detention Centre

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged following incidents in Campsfield Detention Centre last August; and if he will make a statement. [18079]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Following the disturbances at Campsfield House detention centre on 20 August, a thorough investigation of the events was conducted by Thames Valley Police. Thirteen detainees were charged initially with violent disorder. Twelve were remanded in prison custody and one was granted bail. On 12 November, charges against four of the detainees were dropped and they were returned to immigration detention. The remainder have now been charged with riot. They appeared at Oxford Magistrates' Court on 28 November and were remanded to reappear in January 1998.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of damage to Campsfield Detention Centre following incidents in August. [18077]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The insurance assessors have estimated the total cost of the damage to Campsfield House to be £175,000.

Immigration (English Channel)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has issued to (a) ferry and (b) Channel Tunnel Operators concerning the stamping of passports of passengers; and if he will make a statement. [18075]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No official written guidance has been provided by the United Kingdom Passport Agency on the practice of stamping passengers' passports. I fully support the ferry and Channel Tunnel operators in their efforts to deal effectively with the unacceptable behaviour of certain passengers but the private stamping of passports by the ferry companies is an unorthodox approach which we have not sanctioned.

Immigration Detention

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is offered to security companies undertaking administration of immigration detention on behalf of the Immigration Service. [18099]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All Group 4 Total Security Ltd. and Wackenhut (United Kingdom) Ltd. staff employed under contract to provide detention management services are required to undergo a comprehensive training programme. This programme includes an immigration induction course; race awareness; self injury and suicide prevention; health and safety; control and restraint; first aid; domestic management; the welfare of and duty of care towards immigration detainees. Refresher training is provided after one year's service and at yearly intervals thereafter.

Protection from Harassment

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the rules of court to be completed for section 3 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997; and if he will make a statement. [17738]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

Section 3 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 introduces, amongst other things, the power for a civil court to grant relief to a victim of harassment by way of an injunction and whereby the breach of an injunction granted by that civil court may be dealt with as a criminal offence. Subsections 3(1) and 3(2) are in force, and breach of an injunction made under those subsections may at present be punished as a contempt of court by up to two years' imprisonment. Rules and forms for subsections 3(3)–3(9) have been drafted for use by the High Court, county courts, the Crown Court and magistrates' courts to ensure that the process of treating a breach as a criminal offence works effectively. Consultation on these is under way and, as soon as it is complete, the outstanding subsections will be commenced.

WALES

Capital Expenditure (Cardiff)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of publicly funded capital expenditure in the Cardiff County Council area in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and what's the planned expenditure for 1997–98. [17575]

Mr. Ron Davies: These figures are not held centrally but the principal sums made available or committed over the past three years, totalling £376.4 million, include the following:

	£ million
CBDC	232.0
ERDF	9.5
WDA	2.5
Transport grant	10.3
Millennium Commission	73.0
SportsLot	13.9
Welsh Arts Lottery Fund	17.3
SDS/Welsh Capital Challenge	9.4
Wales Tourist Board	0.7
CADW	0.3
Heritage Lottery	0.4
Top Slice housing SCA	7.1

These figures exclude sums made available through basic credit approvals, expenditure on further and higher education and more general housing provision.

HEALTH

Appointments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) all those people he has appointed since taking office, (b) the offices to which he has appointed them, (c) the period of office for which they have each been appointed and (d) the political party allegiance or membership of each of their appointees and the date of appointment where this is known. [18556]

Mr. Milburn: Most of the information requested by the hon. Member is collected by the Department but it will take a little time to assemble. I will write to him immediately it is available. However, we will be unable to provide information on the political allegiance or party membership of candidates for National Health Service appointments as this is not collected by the Department. We will be able to provide information on the political activity of candidates, as defined by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. The Commissioner's guidance requires candidates for appointment to NHS boards to make a declaration about any significant political activity in the last 5 years. Significant political activity is defined as activities that are a matter of public record such as office holding in, public speaking in support of, or candidature on behalf of a political party (or affiliated body) which fields candidates at local or national elections.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce ILO conventions into British law in respect of child labour. [18070]

Mr. Boateng: The Government fully support the efforts of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in tackling the problem of child labour. The United Kingdom is party to a number of ILO Conventions which deal with the minimum age for admission to employment and has launched an urgent review of what is involved in order to ratify the core Convention (No. 138) in this area. The UK welcomes the discussions planned for next year's ILO Conference aimed at drawing up a new Convention specifically designed to tackle the most abhorrent forms of child labour.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning child labour legislation from local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [18078]

Mr. Boateng: We have received few representations from local authorities about the law on children's employment. We intend to announce our plans shortly.

Read Codes

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the figures for the last five financial years on capital expenditure and revenue in respect of (a) version 2 and (b) version 3 of the Read Codes. [18533]

Mr. Milburn: Version 3 of the Read Codes was developed by the Clinical Terms Projects. The relevant costs are as follows:

£ million

	Revenue	Capital
1992–93	1.1	Nil
1993–94	2.1	Nil
1994–95	0.5	Nil
Total	3.7	Nil

Although the Clinical Terms Projects ended in 1995, during 1994–95 and 1995–96 significant numbers of new Read Codes were added to version 3 as part of routine maintenance. The costs were as follows:

£ million

	Revenue	Capital
1995–96	0.7	Nil
Total	1.4	Nil

Since 1996 maintenance of new Read Codes version 3 has stabilised. Maintenance of all versions is now part of the baseline activity of the NHS Centre for Coding and Classification. It is not possible retrospectively to break down its baseline budgets into separate capital and revenue figures for the maintenance of each version of the Read Codes.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total licence income from all NHS sources to Computer Aided Medical Systems Ltd. in each financial year since 1991–92; and what proportion of this income was derived from Read Codes version 3. [18534]

Mr. Milburn: The revenues for National Health Service licences paid to Computer Aided Medical Systems Ltd. up to 1995–96 are as follows:

April 1991 to September 1992 (18 months)	1,530,900
October 1992 to September 1993	1,286,912
October 1993 to September 1994	1,572,877
October 1994 to September 1995	1,684,016
October 1995 to September 1996	1,615,189

The relevant accounts for the year 1996–97 are not yet available.

The National Health Service Read Code licence covers the use of all versions of the Read Codes and it is not possible to estimate what proportion of the above income was derived from Read Codes version 3.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from NHS clinicians in relation to Read Codes version 3; and what assessment he has made of the degree of clinician support for the viability of that version. [18535]

Mr. Milburn: In 1994 the clinical professional bodies wrote formally to the National Health Service Executive supporting the use of the Read Coded Clinical terms as recommended clinical dictionary to underpin all clinical information systems and communication in the NHS.

A review of the Information Management and Technology Strategy for the NHS is currently in progress and this will include a proposal for the future role of version 3 of the Read Codes.

Bereavement Services

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those NHS trust hospitals which employ a (a) full-time or (b) part-time bereavement officer or counsellor. [18295]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally. Bereavement counselling is undertaken by a variety of different people, depending on who within the hospital is trained to undertake the work. This may be a psychologist, a nurse trained in bereavement counselling or a counsellor called in from the community.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list (a) those hospitals which have contracted out their bereavement services to the private sector and (b) the names of the trading companies and their parent companies which have been awarded the bereavement services contracts; [18296]

(2) if he will list (a) those NHS hospitals whose bereavement officers are employees of funeral director companies and (b) trading companies and the parent companies involved. [18297]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive market testing database has a record of one NHS trust, the Central Middlesex Hospital, which has contracted out its bereavement and mortuary services (but not its bereavement counselling). This contract was awarded to Associated Funeral Directors whose parent company is Service Corporation International plc. The bereavement officer is an employee of Associated Funeral Directors.

Mentally Ill People

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the £300 million extra funds for the National Health Service this winter will be spent on provision for the mentally ill. [18373]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the purposes to which the extra funds are to be put are contained in the Executive Letter EL(97)64, copies of which are available in the Library. Details of the amounts allocated to specific service areas are not held centrally.

Social Services (Oxfordshire)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from Oxfordshire about reductions in social services provision in the county. [18389]

Mr. Boateng: The Director of Social Services for Oxfordshire wrote on behalf of the Social Services Committee to express concern about budget reductions on the provision of Social Services on Oxfordshire. Ministers will be responding shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Wealth Warnings (Consultation)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the consultation paper on wealth warnings will be issued. [14436]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 4 November 1997]: I will publish a consultation paper on simplification and clarification of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 shortly. This will include a proposal on wealth warnings.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of how many computer systems will be made redundant by the century date change; if she has had discussions and issued guidelines on arrangements for their disposal or redeployment; and if she will make a statement. [17427]

Mrs. Roche: I have made no assessment and issued no guidelines. I understand that relatively few systems will be made redundant. Most affected systems can be upgraded, some by reworking existing software or electronic components and others by replacing inadequate software or components.

Action 2000, the new initiative set up by this Government and chaired by Don Cruickshank, Director General of OFTEL, will be signposting business to information to help them address such issues.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with relevant representative bodies on the reporting requirements for companies during the transition phase of economic and monetary union. [17141]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The question of the currency in which company accounts may be drawn up, whether or not the United Kingdom were to participate in European Monetary Union, has been discussed during the course of meetings between my officials and a range of representative bodies. The question was also touched upon by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his speech to the CBI on 10 November 1997.

Funerals

Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people have brought pre-paid funerals in the last two years. [17940]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: On the basis of information obtained during consultation it is estimated that to date up to 200,000 pre-paid funerals have been sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 191, if she will list the undertakings given by (a) the Co-operative Wholesale Society and (b) Service Corporation International to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, together with the dates by which (i) each undertaking was to be carried out and (ii) each undertaking was carried out. [18036]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: On 7 December 1987 the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry accepted undertakings from the Co-operative Wholesale Society Limited (CWS) that it would before 21 October 1988 (or such later date as the Secretary of State might agree) sell either all the funeral businesses acquired from House of Fraser plc, or alternatively the businesses in those areas affected by the merger, as going concerns to a person other than a CWS subsidiary or certain retail societies. CWS also undertook to keep the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) informed as to its progress in divesting itself of the businesses. The four businesses situated in the areas most affected by the merger (Aberdeen, Falkirk and Perth) were sold by CWS on 22 April 1988.

CWS also undertook to notify the DGFT before it acquires any enterprise carrying on the business of a funeral undertaker in Scotland; and that it will not refuse to supply coffins on normal commercial terms to any funeral undertaker in Scotland. These undertakings are on-going.

On 18 December 1996, the then Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs accepted undertakings given by Service Corporation International (SCI). SCI undertook, within six months of the date of the undertaking:

(a) to reduce its market share to no more than 25 per cent. by selling funeral directors' businesses in Brighton and Hove, Camberwell, Chiswick, Eastbourne and Sidcup (in relation to Chiswick, the sale of either of two specified SCI branches in that locality would be deemed to comply with this undertaking);

(b) where it had a market share of more than 25 per cent. before the merger, to sell the funeral directors' businesses it acquired from Plantsbrook Group plc in Battersea, Bromley, Crawley, Fulham and Putney;

The divestment required under (a) and (b) took place on 4 April 1997.

SCI further undertook:

(c) not to acquire any further funeral directing businesses within the ten localities without the DGFT's prior approval;

(d) to disclose its ownership of funeral directing businesses prominently at the premises, in documentation given to customers, and in all advertisements or other promotional material used in connection with those businesses (for those SCI funeral businesses situated in the area examined by the MMC);

(e) to display prominently details of competing crematoria at every SCI funeral directing branch in the area of an SCI crematorium;

(f) not to discriminate in the prices charged for crematorium services between its own and other funeral directing businesses; and

(g) to provide customers with a list of prices of competing crematoria where, in the area examined by the MMC, an SCI funeral directing business is situated within 20 miles of an SCI crematorium.

Undertakings (c) to (g) are on-going.

On 3 November 1997 I accepted a variation to the undertakings given by SCI to allow it to acquire Birkbeck Securities Ltd. (Birkbeck) on condition that SCI disposed of the funeral directing business of Birbeck's subsidiary, H. Copeland & Son Ltd., within six months. That business has now been sold by SCI.

I have placed copies of the relevant press notices with undertakings attached in the Library of the House.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 192, if she will list the representations she has received relating to the marketing and selling of pre-paid funeral plans and place copies in the Library. [18043]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: I have received representation on the marketing and selling of pre-paid funerals from:

Scottish Consumer Council;

Service Corporation International;

Federation of Small Businesses;

Society of Allied and Independent Funeral Directors;

National Association for Pre-Paid Funeral Plans.

I am still receiving representations. When the process is complete, I will publish a list of these in the Library.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will (a) establish a funeral services ombudsman, (b) establish a single code of practice for the supply of funeral services and (c) introduce statutory regulation of pre-paid funeral plans. [18049]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Caplin) today. I am considering a number of possible options for the regulation of pre-paid funerals as a priority. I shall consider options for improved consumer protection more generally.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 192, (1) if she will list the trading companies that are subsidiaries of registered charities and the registered charities concerned about which she has received representations; [18046]

(2) if she will list the representations she has received relating to links between providers of funeral services and subsidiaries of registered charities and place copies of these representations in the Library. [18044]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: I have received one representation on this. However, since the representation was made on the understanding that it would be treated in confidence, the name of the complainant is not being made public.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 191, if she will list the individual funeral directors' businesses that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission recommended Service Corporation International divest, and the dates on which divestment took place in each case. [18037]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The MMC did not specify all the individual funeral directors' businesses that Service Corporation International (SCI) should be required to divest.

Divestment in accordance with the undertakings given by SCI took place on 4 April 1997.

The individual funeral directing businesses sold were:

Francis Chappell and E.L. Wickes (Camberwell);

Ashtons (Brighton and Hove);

Frederick W. Paine (Chiswick);

Adela (Eastbourne);

Mannerings (Sidcup);

W. H. Wigley (Battersea);

W. S. Bond (Fulham);

Ashton and Matthias (Putney);

Mannerings (Bromley);

Peter A. Martin (Crawley);

Colin Bennett Funeral Services (Woodingdean); and

E. Carter and Sons (Rottingdean).

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases for unfair dismissal (a) have been brought by employees of funeral director firms over the past five years and (b) are currently pending; if she will list the names of the parties to the actions; and if she will indicate the names of the employers' ultimate parent companies [18298]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have consulted the Chief Executive of the Employment Tribunals Service on this matter, and he informs me that no information is held on an employee's occupation or on the category of business the employee was working in. Details of tribunal applications, the tribunal's decision and the names of respondents in particular cases can be found on the Public Register at Bury St. Edmunds, unless the case involves an allegation of a sexual offence.

Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will set up an independent ombudsman to oversee the funeral industry. [16863]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: There are a number of schemes for consumer redress in the funeral industry. A substantial minority of funeral directors recognise the present Funeral Ombudsman Scheme. The largest trade association, the National Association of Funerals Directors operates a separate scheme. I would welcome the emergence of a single independent scheme to protect consumers.

Turkey (Military Equipment)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what export credits have been made to Turkey in each of the last three years for the sale of military equipment to Turkey; and if she will make a statement. [17859]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 November 1997]: From data readily available, the information that my hon. Friend requests is as follows:

	£ million
1994–95	90
1995–96	268
1996–97	none
1997–98 (to October 1997)	none

These figures include all ECGD supported business with defence buyers in Turkey, including sales of non-lethal equipment.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy of her Department in respect of the closure of (a) main and (b) sub-post offices. [18163]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices. We cannot guarantee that no post office will ever close or relocate for operational or other reasons, as over 95 per cent. of the network is made up of small businesses. At my request, the Post Office, in May, suspended its programme of converting Crown post offices to agency status until the review of the Post Office is complete and we are in a position to make informed decisions.

Employment Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many appeals there have been to the Employment Appeal Tribunal where the applicant did not have two years' continuous employment prior to dismissal; how many of these cases have been (i) stayed and (ii) struck out by industrial tribunals subsequent to the case of Seymour-Smith and Perez; and for (i) and (ii) what are the figures by industrial tribunal region. [18327]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Since the decision in the case of R v. Secretary of State for Employment ex parte Seymour-Smith and Perez was referred to the European Court of Justice, 182 cases have been stayed at the Employment Appeal Tribunal. The Chief Executive of the Employment Tribunals Service informs me that the industrial tribunal offices do not record separately cases that have been struck out or stayed because the applicant could not demonstrate two years' continuous service.

Duty Free Trade

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with Treasury ministers in respect of obtaining from the European Union a material damage derogation to permit the cross-Channel duty-free trade to continue in perpetuity. [18060]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 27 November 1997]: None. The decision to allow intra-EU duty free sales to continue until 30 June 1999 was taken by the Council of Finance Ministers in 1991 so as to allow the economic sectors concerned time in which to adapt gradually to the new situation.

Coal

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will require coal to be the main fuel for base load generating stations. [16438]

Mr. Battle: The choice of baseload generation should be determined on the basis of cost as assessed in a market which is fair. In the review of the Electricity Trading Arrangements (including the Pool), which I announced on 23 October 1997, the Government will examine whether the market is tilted against coal, and, if so, what changes are needed to level the playing field.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 11 July 1997, Official Report, column 646, how many (a) customers and (b) others were sent the letter regarding the Export Credits Guarantee Department's policy on disclosure of business information; what were the results of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's consultation exercise; and if the Export Credits Guarantee Department has drawn up new guidelines on the disclosure of information. [15621]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD's letter was sent to 11 exporters, 11 banks and five trade associations. A number of other Government Departments were also consulted. It emerged that while some customers were generally content with ECGD's guideline proposals, there was still a serious concern that the confidential nature of their business relationship with ECGD should be maintained. No new guidelines have since been drawn up by ECGD and it would be premature for work on this to be completed in advance of the publication of the Government's White Paper on freedom of information. ECGD is currently abiding by the spirit of the Open Government Code of Practise on Access to Government Information which encourages information to be disclosed unless it is judged that, on a case by case basis, such disclosure would be harmful either to the competitive position of a company or the work of ECGD as insurer.

Departmental Information

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library a copy of the internal departmental guidance on the dissemination of information; and if she will make a statement. [16310]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department provides a considerable amount of internal guidance to staff on administering the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. This includes guidance on the proactive dissemination of information as required by the Code. I will be placing copies of my Department's general internal guidance on the Code of Practice in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Office

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available the study of the impact on traffic of moving a large part of the Scottish Office from New St. Andrew's House to Victoria Quay. [17626]

Mr. Dewar: Research was conducted prior to the move of Scottish Office staff to Victoria Quay into the travel to work intentions of these staff. A summary of the research report "Future Travel to Work Patterns of Scottish Office Staff—Relocation to Victoria Quay", drawn up in 1995, has been placed in the Library of the House. A copy of the full report is available on loan from my Department's library at Victoria Quay.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to move Ministers' offices from St. Andrew's House to the Scottish Office building at Victoria Quay. [17627]

Mr. McLeish: The issue of future accommodation arrangements for Scottish Office Ministers will be addressed when a decision on the site of the Scottish Parliament building has been taken. Ministers regularly use accommodation at Victoria Quay at present.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those organisations which have expressed to the Scottish Office their views on where the Scottish Parliament should be sited, indicating which support (a) Leith, (b) Calton Hill, (c) Haymarket and (d) a city centre site. [17628]

Mr. McLeish: We have received letters from the following:

(a) List of organisations in favour of Leith

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individual representations the Scottish Office has received, (a) from residents in Edinburgh and (b) from those living elsewhere in Scotland, on the proposed site for the Scottish Parliament; and how many have supported (i) each of the three specific sites and (ii) a city centre site. [17629]

Mr. McLeish: A total of 150 representations have been received, of which 91 have come from people living in Edinburgh and 59 from people who live elsewhere in Scotland. 44 of these representations were in support of a city centre location but did not mention any preferred site. The remainder supported the following:

	Number
Calton Hill/Regent Road	89
Leith	11
Haymarket	6

SOCIAL SECURITY

Sensory Impairments

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps her Department plans to take to ensure that people with sensory impairments are not disproportionately affected by the proposed changes to the backdating of benefits. [16124]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The proposed rules will provide for up to one month's automatic backdating for non-income-related benefits and up to one month's backdating of claims for income-related benefits in specified situations. This will include circumstances where the person is deaf and/or blind and has no relative, friend or adviser to assist them in making a claim.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost of allowing students to claim (a) income support during the summer months and (b) housing benefit; what plans she has to introduce income support and housing benefit for students; and if she will make a statement. [18549]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information required on which to base a reliable estimate of the cost is not available.

The primary source of financial support for full-time students is the student support system, which is specifically designed to meet their needs. Social Security is not. Certain students in prescribed vulnerable groups (including lone parents and students with disabilities) are entitled to benefits in recognition of the additional difficulties they may face in continuing with their studies. The majority of full-time students are not entitled to benefits and we have no plans to alter those arrangements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the consultation procedures for the inter-departmental review of asylum; which organisations have been invited to comment; and which organisations or individuals have made submissions. [17418]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: When the Comprehensive Review of asylum was announced, those interested were invited to comment direct to the Study Team. The following individuals and organisations have made submissions:

London Borough of Merton
Westminster City Council
The Progressive League
The Central London Interfaith Refugee Network
Praxis
Michael Symth Esq.
The Churches Commission for Racial Justice
The Housing Associations Charitable Trust
Hackney Community Law Centre
UNLEASH (Church Action on Homelessness in London)

Camden Social Services
Refugee Arrivals Project
The Churches Interfaith Refugee Network
The International Organisation on Migration.

National Stud

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future ownership of the National Stud. [18141]

Mr. George Howarth: The National Stud is the responsibility of the Horserace Betting Levy Board. There are no current plans to change its ownership.

Smoke Alarms

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages of instigating a publicity campaign to raise public awareness of the benefits of installing smoke alarms in homes. [18483]

Mr. George Howarth: I am well aware that publicity campaigns offer the potential for achieving wider installation of smoke alarms in homes. The Community Fire Safety Task Force have recently reported with a strategy and recommendations to secure significant reductions in the number of fires, deaths and casualties in homes. We are consulting widely on their proposals and will assess carefully the responses we receive.

Smuggling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of illegal immigrants who have been smuggled into Britain by criminal gangs in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [18819]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No reliable estimate can be made of the number of illegal immigrants smuggled into Britain by criminal gangs.

Police Grant

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the allocations of police grant for individual police authorities in 1998–99. [19097]

Mr. Straw: I have today put a copy of my proposals for the allocation of police grant for 1998–99 in the Library. I intend to implement these proposals subject to consideration of any representations I receive about them.

The police service has indicated its support in principle for the continued distribution of police grant in accordance with a needs-based formula, and I am therefore proposing to continue to allocate the greater part of police grant according to the police funding formula.

I am however proposing several changes to the formula to reflect the latest data now available, and in response to the representations I have received. The principle changes I propose are: to reduce from 30 per cent. to 20 per cent. the share of funding allocated on the basis of forces' past establishments: and to increase from 12.9 per cent. to 13.2 per cent. the proportion of funding allocated on the basis of forces' pensions commitments.

I have also set the amount of the special payment to the Metropolitan Police, in recognition of its national and capital city functions, at £151 million in 1998–99.

An additional £40 million of police grant has been made available in 1998–99. This allocation is to ensure that police authorities and the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District have funds available which would allow them to increase spending on meeting the key objectives for the police in 1998–99 over and above that available through the principal formula.

Other police funding proposals within the local government finance system are being announced today by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and for Wales. These proposals and mine would increase the total spending power of police authorities in England and Wales by 3.7 per cent. or around £258 million over 1997–98.

The table below shows, by police authority, the effect of my proposals for 1998–99. It also shows the allocations approved by Parliament for 1997–98.

Youth Justice

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the advice he received from the Task Force on Youth Justice and the responses to his consultation papers on youth justice. [19126]

Mr. Straw: Yes. Copies of the two reports submitted by the Task Force on Youth Justice, in August and October, have been placed in the Library.

Several hundred responses have been received to my consultation paper on youth justice and these are currently being assessed. We will provide Parliament with a report as soon as practicable.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18113]

Mr. Straw: Information in respect of (a), (b) and (c) is given in the attached table and covers the Home Office and its agencies. Information in respect of (d) is not available; figures could be provided only if all our contractors were prepared to waive commercial confidentiality considerations so as to allow disclosure.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his Answer of 13 November 1977, Official Report, column 654, if he will provide a further breakdown, by grade, of the ethnic origin and gender of employees in the Immigration and Nationalities Department. [18627]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Details of the ethnic origin of Immigration and Nationality Directorate staff by gender and grade are set out in the following table. In some cases, grades have been amalgamated in order to avoid disclosure of individual ethnic origin.

The breakdown refers to staff figures as at 28 November 1997. These differ slightly from the figure provided in my answer to my hon. Friend's question on 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 654, due to staff changes in the intervening period.

PRIME MINISTER

Humphrey the Cat

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what steps were taken by Cabinet Office staff to establish the state of health of Humphrey the cat, prior to his departure from Downing Street; on what dates; and if he will make a statement. [18675]

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office staff have always taken excellent care of Humphrey the cat. He was taken to a Veterinary Clinic at least every six months for the last five years where his kidney complaint was treated and his inoculations were kept up to date. His last visit was on 6 August 1997.

In the weeks prior to his retirement from the Cabinet Office, the staff who looked after him were concerned about his loss of appetite and the general deterioration in his condition.

Since retiring to a home environment it is reported that he has responded very well and put on weight.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the locations of the successful outline bids for round 4 SRBs, indicating the names and political control of those local authorities concerned; and if he will make a statement. [17311]

Mr. Caborn: Bids for round 4 of the SRB Challenge Fund are not defined at the outline stage as successful or unsuccessful. I have placed a table which contains details of all 371 outline bids received by Government Offices for the Regions in the House Libraries.

Government Offices for the Regions currently are considering outline bids, to determine the extent to which these meet the objectives and criteria for the Challenge Fund and merit working up into final bids.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities submitted bids for each round of (a) the Single Regeneration Budget and (b) Capital Challenge; and how many were successful in each round. [18740]

Angela Eagle: The information is as follows:

Single Regeneration Budget

The numbers of bids for support from the four rounds of the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund submitted by local authorities, either individually or as partners, are as follows:

	Round 1	Round 2	Round 3	Round 4[1]
Total number of final bids received	469	329	310	371
Number of final bids received from local authorities[2]	235	171	186	167
Number of successful bids from local authorities[2]	108	93	109	—

[1] All bids are currently at the outline stage only.

[2] Where the local authority is the lead partner.

Capital Challenge

There has been only one round of Capital Challenge. There were 330 local authorities, acting jointly or separately, which submitted a total of 326 bids. Of these, 189 bids, involving 217 authorities, were successful either in full or in part.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the costs incurred by local authorities in preparing and submitting bids in each round of (a) the Single Regeneration Budget and (b) Capital Challenge. [18739]

Angela Eagle: For the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund, my Department commissioned the Department of Land Economy at the University of Cambridge to evaluate rounds 1 and 2. An interim report explored the level of resources committed by ten local partnerships, including those with local authority partners, which submitted unsuccessful bids. The average time committed by each partnership to the bidding process was 16 weeks, at a cost of £10,000.

None of the unsuccessful bidders regarded the bidding process as a waste of resources, nor did they regard it as more costly than preparing proposals under other funding regimes. The benefits of the bidding process were recognised, particularly in improving inter-agency partnership working.

For Capital Challenge, the Local Government Research Programme Report "Evaluation of the Experience of Authorities during the Capital Challenge Pilot Scheme Bidding Round" estimated that the average value of resources used in the preparation of bids was £14,000.

London Underground

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which organisations he has met in the last six months to discuss the future of (a) London Underground and (b) the Piccadilly Line; and if he will make a statement. [17527]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My colleagues and I have discussed the future of the Underground with a number of organisations, including London Transport, representatives of Transport Unions, and organisations representing business and other interests in London. No meetings have been held specifically on the future of the Piccadilly Line.

We are urgently considering a range of options for public—private partnerships to improve the Underground.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library responses to his consultation paper on RDAs. [17890]

Mr. Caborn: In accordance with guidelines on deposited papers issued to Government Departments by the House of Commons Library, I placed in the Library on 18 November a list of the responses to the Department's Issues Paper on Regional Development Agencies. The guidelines say that, for reasons of space, consultation paper responses should not be deposited in the Library. Consistent with the guidelines, copies of the responses to the RDAs consultation paper are deposited in the Department's library, and can be made available to Members there.

Travellers

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will seek to amend section 77(3)(b) of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 so as to make it a criminal offence for travellers having been evicted to return to any land in the same district within three months; [18214]

(2) if he will seek to amend the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to enable agents acting for local authorities to confiscate property belonging to travellers subject to eviction orders as compensation for damage done to public land and legal costs incurred in securing evictions. [18215]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to amend the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 in the way that the hon. Gentleman suggests.

The 1994 Act already makes it a criminal offence for unauthorised campers who have been directed to leave land, to return to the same land with a vehicle within three months of the date of the direction. We do not think it would be reasonable to make the whole of a local authority's area out of bounds to campers, because they have been evicted from one site in that area. The stronger the powers, the more difficult it would be for a local authority to persuade the courts that it was acting reasonably in seeking an eviction order.

Consultation preceding the introduction of the 1994 Act powers revealed a majority of respondents, including local authorities, opposed to local authority powers to seize vehicles belonging to unauthorised campers. This was thought to be unreasonable and impracticable, and the proposal was dropped.

The Government considers that the 1994 Act powers strike a reasonable balance between the need to control what can be a public nuisance and the rights of the campers concerned, in line with the European Convention on Human Rights. We have commissioned research to look at how local authorities deal with unauthorised camping in their areas, and will be issuing good practice advice based on that research in Spring next year.

Residential Development

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on which dates since 1 May was (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials met representatives of the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development to discuss increasing the Government's target of new residential development to be built on previously used land. [18319]

Angela Eagle: Neither Ministers nor officials have met representatives of the UK Round Table specifically to discuss the Government's target of new residential development to be built on previously used land. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment has, however, had general discussions with the Chairman about Round Table recommendations.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of new homes provided in each year since 1981 through (a) urban infill and (b) house conversions. [18302]

Mr. Raynsford: Estimates of the number of dwellings provided through conversions are shown below.

Net gain in dwellings from conversions and changes of use

England

	Thousands of dwellings
1981	14.6
1982	17.6
1983	16.2
1984	17.3
1985	16.6
1986	17.1
1988	14.8
1989	14.6
1990	12.4
1991	13.1
1992	10.1
1993	7.7
1994	9.3

Estimates of number dwellings through urban infill are currently not available, but should be available soon.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what in each of the last three years for which information is available, was the proportion in each region of the amount of new residential development built on previously used land; and what (a) meetings he has had and (b) other actions he has taken in respect of these regions where the proportion was under 50 per cent. [18321]

Mr. Raynsford: The table below shows the percentage of new residential development that is on land previously developed for urban uses, by Government Office Region, for the latest three years for which reliable estimates can be made.

The Government has held a number of meetings at which the issue of land recycling and other household growth matters have been discussed. The Government has also made it clear that, in making their housing land allocations, local authorities should make the best possible use of previously used sites for new housing. This applies in particular to those authorities who are achieving low levels of land recycling. The Government is considering these and other issues, taking into account the public consultation earlier this year, and will announce decisions in due course.

Household Growth White Paper

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the seminars which his Department (a) has held since 1 May and (b) plans to hold to debate the issues raised in the Green Paper "Household Growth: Where Shall We Live" (Cm 3471). [18318]

Mr. Raynsford: No public seminars have been held by the Government specifically on this subject since 1 May, nor do we have any current plans to hold such seminars in the near future. Officials attend independently arranged seminars on this subject as appropriate.

Planning Appeals (Redundant Farm Buildings)

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many appeals his Department has received in each year since 1988 involving the refusal of planning consent for the conversion of redundant farm buildings into (a) houses and (b) other uses; when the Department last issued new guidance on this subject; and what plans he has to issue revised guidance. [18301]

Mr. Raynsford: The following information has been provided by the Planning Inspectorate. Information is not available for the period before 1990. The data do not reveal whether the appeals related to redundant farm buildings. The number of unsuccessful appeals against refusal of planning permission for conversion of farm buildings to residential use was as follows:

	Number
1 January to 31 December
1990	523
1991	419
1992	298
1993	194
1994	198
1995	196
1996	188
1 January to 1 November
1997	88

In 1990 there were 3 unsuccessful appeals against refusal of planning permission for conversion of farm buildings to industrial use. There have been none since.

The Government's guidance on the conversion of redundant farm buildings is contained in Planning Policy Guidance note 7 "The Countryside—Environmental Quality and Economic and Social Development", which was revised in February 1997. This allows greater discrimination than formerly in favour of re-use for business rather than residential use. There are at present no plans to issue revised guidance.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the report "Options for the Future Development of Energy Efficiency Standards of Performance", prepared for him and the President of the Board of Trade OXERA Consultants. [18271]

Angela Eagle: I have placed a copy of the report in the Library. The analysis of options provided by the report will be taking into account in the Government's consideration of future regulation of the energy industry and of the achievement of energy efficiency climate change targets. There will be consultation on both issues.

Organophosphates

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will empower the Health and Safety Executive to examine with the permission of the patient the medical records of any person who suffers accidental exposure to organophosphates and other chemicals which results in admission to hospital or consultation with a doctor. [18162]

Angela Eagle: HSE may already examine medical records when it investigates reports of ill-health because of exposure to chemicals if the sufferer gives permission, except in special cases where the doctor judges that disclosure would itself put the patient at risk. Reported incidents of ill-health resulting from exposure to pesticides, veterinary and human medicines (including organophosphates) are assessed by expert panels who routinely examine medical records on this basis.

Trees

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage tree planting and the conservation of mature trees in urban areas to reduce storm water run-off. [18479]

Angela Eagle: My Department encourages local authorities to develop long term strategies to guide the planting, maintenance, conservation and replacement of all trees in their area. Such strategies should contain an appraisal of how trees might contribute to the local environment, taking account of local circumstances and conditions. This might include their role in reducing storm water run-off.

Railway Lines (Trespass)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the duty to fence off railway lines with a view to requiring Railtrack plc to prevent trespass on railway lines. [18372]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following a recommendation by the Health and Safety Commission (HSC), a review of railway safety legislation was completed by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) in 1996. As a result, the Railway Safety (Miscellaneous Provisions) Regulations 1997, which came into force on 10 May, place a new duty on Railtrack to take reasonably practicable measures to prevent unauthorised access by trespassers. Guidance on these Regulations, issued by the HSE, gives advice on the type of fencing or other physical barriers that should be provided.

Rat Control

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the legal responsibilities of water and sewerage companies in respect of the control of rats. [18501]

Angela Eagle: There is no specific duty on water and sewerage undertakers in relation to the control of rats in sewers. However, all sewerage undertakers have programmes to control and reduce the number of rats in their systems. This includes the use of baits in pumping stations and air vents to stop rats entering the system and within sewers. In addition, I understand that the water industry will be undertaking some research into the issue of rats in sewers early next year. Finally, under Section 79 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, local authorities have a duty to inspect their area for statutory nuisances such as "any premises in such a state as to be prejudicial to health or a nuisance."

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people were living in bed and breakfast accommodation in each of the London boroughs on 1 November. [18582]

Mr. Raynsford: Information is published on households accommodated under statutory homelessness provisions in a quarterly Information Bulletin, "Statistics of local authority activities under the homelessness legislation: England". The Bulletin includes a table on homeless households temporarily accommodated and this identifies those in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Copies of the Bulletin are in the Library and the latest provides statistics for the second quarter of 1997.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18115]

Angela Eagle: In London, the lowest rate paid by the Department to full-time employees is £4.39 an hour. £3.17 per hour is the lowest hourly rate paid in the English regions, by a Departmental Agency.

Part-time and full-time staff are paid the same hourly rates.

The Department employs relatively few people who are on personal contracts. The lowest rate is £3.25 an hour, in an English region.

The Department does not hold information on the rates of pay for persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services. This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list (1) for each class of authority and (2) for each individual local authority and Police authority in England (a) 1998–99 standard spending assessments in total and by major service block, (b) changes in standard spending assessments in total and by major service block, between 1997–98 and 1998–99, expressed in (i) monetary and (ii) percentage terms, (c) changes in standard spending assessments in total and by major service block, between 1997–98 and 1998–99, expressed (i) in monetary and (ii) percentage terms and adjusted to take account of changes in local authority functions and responsibilities (d) resident population, (e) tax base, (f) standard spending assessment, (g) standard tax income, (h) business rate income, (i) revenue support grant, (j) standard spending assessment reduction grant and (k) total external support, for 1998–99; [18632]

(2) what is the (a) total standard spending assessment and Police grant and (b) total external support including revenue support, non-domestic rates, standard spending assessment reduction grant and police grants to be received by (i) all local authorities, (ii) each class of local authority, (iii) education authorities, (iv) authorities other than Police authorities and (v) all authorities, in (1) 1998–99 and (2) 1997–98 indicating (A) the change over 1997–98 in pounds and percentages, (B) adjustments for 1997–98 for local government reorganisation and for changed local authority functions and responsibilities in 1998–99; and if he will list each such adjustment and its monetary value; [18633]

(3) what is the (a) total standard spending and (b) total aggregate external finance for (i) all local authorities and (ii) all local authorities other than Police authorities in England in (1) 1998–99 and (2) 1997–98, giving in each case (A) the change over 1997–98 in pounds and percentages and (B) adjusting 1997–98 totals for changed local authority functions and responsibilities in 1998–99, listing each adjustment and its monetary value. [18634]

Mr. Raynsford: This information will be available in the Library following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Region statement on local government finance.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Régions if he will set out the basis of his calculations of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1998–99. [18804]

Mr. Armstrong: The distributable amount of non-domestic rates in England for 1998–99 will be £12,524 million. This is based on a non-domestic rate multiplier of 0.474 and includes an allowance of £360 million for an Exchequer payment to the non-domestic rates pool, to compensate for the shortfall which would otherwise occur as a result of the regulations under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation on rate bills.

The calculation for 1998–99, and the prior-year figures on which this is based, are set out in the following table:

National non-domestic rates—Calculation of distributable amount

Distributable amount	11,354	12,736	12,027	12,524
Surplus carried forward	–1,059	–1,002	–326	—

The amounts shown are those recorded in the post end-year (NNDR3) returns. For 1997–98 the amounts shown are the estimated outturn for the year based mainly upon authorities' provisional contributions to the non-domestic rating pool.

1. Item 1: The gross calculated rate yield represents the total value of non-domestic hereditaments on local rating lists times the multiplier.

2. Item 1(i)(a): The Transitional decrease adjustment includes the estimated amount of rates that will not be recouped from local list ratepayers under the transitional arrangements made by regulations under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

3. Item 1(i)(b): the empty property relief adjustments include voids and partially occupied hereditaments. The 1998–99 figure includes an allowance for the increase in the gross rates yield.

4. Item 1(i)(c): Charitable rate relief. The 1998–99 figure includes mandatory relief for village shops under the Local Government and Rating Act 1997. As for empty property relief.

5. Item 1(i)(d): Discretionary relief granted to charities, non-profit making organisations and for other reasons including, for 1998–99, discretionary relief for village shops and other rural businesses granted under the Local Government and Rating Act 1997. As for charitable rate relief.

6. Item 1(ii)(a)&(b): The allowances for the costs and losses incurred by local authorities in collecting non-domestic rates from ratepayers.

7. Item 1(ii)(c): City Offset—the amount which the City of London will not be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool. It is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its own expenditure.

8. Item 1(iii): net adjustment in respect of appeals and other amendments to the rating list affecting liability for previous years rates settled in that year.

9. Item 2: the rateable value of non-domestic hereditaments on the central rating list times the multiplier, less the net effect of transitional arrangements, and adjusted for appeals and other changes in respect of previous years.

10. Item 3: the 1998–99 figure for crown properties includes an allowance for the effect of transition.

11. Item 4: the contribution from central government to offset the amount of the Secretary of State's estimate of income forgone as a result of transitional arrangements established by regulations under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

European Charter on Self-Government

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to ratify the European Charter on Local Self-Government. [18865]

Mr. Raynsford: Subject to the views of this House and those of Another Place, the Government intends to ratify the European Charter on Local Self-Government as soon as practicable in the new year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Conditional Fees

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has undertaken to discover (a) the number of people, who since their introduction, wanted to pursue civil claims on a conditional fee arrangement but whose cases were not accepted by solicitors and (b) the reasons for which those cases were not accepted by solicitors. [18733]

Mr. Hoon: None. Lawyers decline to accept cases from clients for many reasons whether the client wishes to fund these through conditional fee agreements or otherwise.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has undertaken to discover the suitability of conditional fee arrangements in (a) medical negligence, (b) breach of contract, (c) professional negligence, (d) defamation and malicious falsehood and (e) false imprisonment and malicious prosecution cases; and if he will publish it. [18732]

Mr. Hoon: None. The suitability of conditional fee arrangements in any given case must be a matter for the client and their lawyers. Our proposals to extend the availability of conditional fee agreements simply widen the options available to lawyers and their clients and thus increase the ways in which people can obtain access, to justice, even when they are unable to bear the costs of lawyers' fees but do not qualify for legal aid.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of the damages awarded to plaintiffs in cases brought under a conditional fee arrangement were paid to (a) solicitors and (b) barristers as success fees in each year since their introduction. [18734]

Mr. Hoon: The information the hon. and learned Member seeks is not available. No arrangements were put in place by the hon. and learned Member's party when in Government to monitor this, which is, in fairness, dependent on the private contractual arrangements clients make with their lawyers. The PSI research did, however, show that in 97 per cent. of the agreements under study the solicitors had applied the voluntary cap of 25 per cent. of damages on their success fee.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has undertaken into the public's attitude to conditional fee arrangements; and if he will publish it. [18735]

Mr. Hoon: Over 28,000 cases in just over two years and new agreements being made at a rate of 1,500 a month appear to me substantial proof that the public have welcomed conditional fees and have made considerable use of them.

Plaintiff Liability Insurance

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of insurance available (a) between 1995 and 1997 inclusive and (b) from 1 April 1998 to cover plaintiffs' liabilities for (i) their own costs and disbursements and (ii) defendants' costs and disbursements. [18736]

Mr. Hoon: There are a considerable number of legal expenses insurance products available to protect against one's own costs of going to law. Many people have them added to their household or motor car insurance policies at very modest cost. I have no reason to believe these are likely to reduce from 1 April 1998. There clearly has been sufficient availability of insurance to allow over 28,000 claims to be brought in a little over two years. New products are still being launched. I see no reason why other insurance products should not become available on or after 1 April 1998.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18226]

Mr. Hoon: This answer covers the Headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department (with Associated Offices), the Court Service, Public Trust Office, Land Registry, Public Record Officer and Northern Ireland Court Service. Minimum salaries currently payable to full-time staff, expressed as minimum hourly rates, are shown in the tables below. Part-time salaries are pro rata those of full-time staff. Staff are categorised by current grade. Information as to location is not held in the form requested, but separate details are given—where applicable—for staff in London and elsewhere.

Details of the range of pay of staff employed by firms undertaking contracted out services are not held and could be provided only if contractors were prepared to waive commercial confidentiality considerations.

LCD HQ (with Associated Offices)

£3.44 (elsewhere)

The above rates relate to staff in the grade of Administrative Assistant. They also represent the minimum payable to individuals employed on personal contracts (casual Administrative Assistants).

Court Service

£4.45 (Inner London)

£4.08 (Intermediate London zone)

£3.96 (Outer London)

£3.30 (elsewhere)

The above rates relate to staff in the grade of Administrative Assistant and also represent the minimum payable to individuals on personal contracts (casual Administrative Assistants). The rates do not include a negotiated uplift due to take effect for permanent staff in April 1998.

Public Trust Office

£4.53 (Administrative Assistant)

Staff on personal contract: as above (casual Administrative Assistant)

All staff are in London

Land Registry

£5.06 (London)
£3.50 (elsewhere) } Registration Assistant 2

Staff on personal contract: none outside Senior Civil Service.

Public Record Office

£4.27 (Junior Print Operator)

Staff on personal contract: none

All staff are employed in offices in the Greater London area.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Chairman of Cardiff Bay Development Corporation about progress relative to the contract on the Barrage lock gate contract awarded to Messrs Noell of Würzburg, Germany. [18212]

Mr. Ron Davies: None. Responsibility for monitoring progress on the Barrage lock gate contract is an operational matter for the Corporation. It would not be appropriate for the Department or the Corporation to get involved or indeed to comment on sub-contractual arrangements.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for local government revenue spending and grant support in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [19122]

Mr. Ron Davies: Following consultation with representatives of local government in Wales, I propose that the provision for local authority revenue expenditure (total standard spending) in 1998–99 should be £3,090.5 million. This represents an increase of £120 million, or 4 per cent. on the comparable level of funding for 1997–98. The provision includes £190.2 million for care in the community, the additional £50.3 million revenue spending for schools I announced on 2 July, and extra provision to help local authorities achieve the Government's policy objectives for nursery education.

For local authorities, I intend to set provisional capping principles which will allow, on average, for a basic increase of 3 per cent. on 1997–98 budgets, an average of 4.6 per cent. when a number of capping disregards and the passporting of standard spending assessment increases in full are taken into account. The provisional capping principles allow local authorities further headroom for expenditure in addition to that provided by total standard spending.

I propose to set central government support for total standard spending through aggregate external finance at £2,702 million. Within this support, I propose to make available £1,831.1 million in revenue support grant/council tax reduction grant (includes an extra £6 million to help limit council tax increases); £612 million in distributable non-domestic rates; and £258.9 million in specific grants.

If local authorities spend in line with the proposed capping principles, council tax bills for band D properties should, on average, increase by about £1.20 a week. However, if councils use only a small part of planned efficiency savings to keep council tax bills down, or draw from reserves, I believe that average increases in council tax bills next year for band D properties should not exceed about £50 a year or £1 a week. The council tax reduction scheme is designed to limit the maximum increase in any authority for spending at the capped level to under £1 a week for band A properties to around £2.50 a week for band H properties.

Looking further ahead, the Welsh Local Government Association has sought stability for the next two or three years and asked for a fundamental review of the system for distributing grant in readiness for the National Assembly for Wales. I have agreed to both these requests and plan to commission jointly with the Association an independent assessment of the current arrangements for calculating standard spending assessments. I hope that an interim report will be available next summer.

Further information on the proposed settlement, including details for individual authorities, will be announced next week.

I am making a separate announcement today giving details of the settlement for police authorities.

My Department has written today to the Welsh Local Government Association and all local authorities in Wales to initiate a consultation on my proposals for next year's settlement. Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for police authority revenue spending in 1998–99. [19123]

Mr. Ron Davies: I propose to make £353 million available from total standard spending in Wales to fund police services in 1998–99. This sum comprises £179.6 million in cash-limited police grant, to be paid by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, and £173.4 million in standard spending assessments (SSA). It represents an overall increase of £12.4 million, or 3.6 per cent. on 1997–98.

The sums for each police authority are set out in the following table:

£ million

	Police grant	SSA	Total
Dyfed-Powys	26.0	25.1	51.1
Gwent	34.3	33.0	67.3
North Wales	37.4	35.8	73.2
South Wales	81.8	79.5	161.3

My Department is today writing to each police authority in Wales consulting them on their provisional standard spending assessment for 1998–99. The figures may alter slightly if the balance of funding between English and Welsh police authorities, which is determined by a joint formula, changes as a result of consultation.

My provisional capping principles for police authorities allow for an increase in spending power of 3.7 per cent. I will make my final decisions on capping principles in the light of budgets set by police authorities.

Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the Welsh non-domestic rate poundage for the next financial year. [19124]

Mr. Ron Davies: I propose that the national non-domestic rate poundage for Wales should rise to 42.9 pence to reflect the annual increase in the retail prices index to September 1997.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18108]

Mr. Ron Davies: (a) Full-time casual administrative assistants earn the hourly equivalent of £3.30 per hour.

(b) Part-time casual administrative assistants earn the hourly equivalent of £3.75 per hour.

(c) There are no staff employed on personal contracts in the Welsh Office.

(d) Information of this nature is commercial in confidence.

Brecon Beacons National Park

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the future management of the Brecon Beacons National Park. [18836]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have received representations from a number of members of the Park Authority. On 20 November, the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) requested a report from the Chairman.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

India (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance officers there are in (a) Bombay and (b) New Delhi. [18308]

Mr. Fatchett: Bombay currently has 10 Entry Clearance officers (ECOs) and 2 Entry Clearance Managers (ECMs). New Delhi has 12 ECOs, 2 ECMs and a full time Head of Immigration (who is also the Consul).

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the application for admission of Mr. Sayed Muhamed Azim Nazis in Bombay (reference E/97/3255). [18311]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in Bombay to provide a detailed account of the position. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to the hon. Member within one week of receiving that account.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time taken in (a) Bombay and (b) New Delhi to dispatch an explanatory statement followed a refusal of entry clearance in 1997. [18309]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1997 the average time taken to despatch an explanatory statement following a refusal of entry clearance in Bombay and New Delhi are two months in both cases.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) others concerning the operation of the entry clearance office in (i) Bombay and (ii) New Delhi. [18307]

Mr. Fatchett: Our correspondence statistics are not broken down in such a way as to be able to give precise figures of representations on the operation of the entry clearance offices in Bombay and New Delhi.

South Africa (Murders)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens were murdered in South Africa in the last 12 months; and what measures he plans to take to promote the protection of British nationals resident in or visiting South Africa. [18216]

Mr. Fatchett: Eight British citizens have been reported to British missions in South Africa as murdered in the last 12 months. There are approximately 1.2 million Britons living in South Africa; and some 200,000 Britons visit each year. This Department has a duty to protect their interests and to provide them with relevant information about threats to their personal safety. In South Africa this is undertaken by consular staff at the six British missions there and by the provision of Travel Advice. Since February 1997 Travel Advice on South Africa has been warning potential visitors about the high level of violent crime there. It also advises against visiting isolated areas throughout South Africa and names specific locations in the major cities where care should be taken.

World Summit for Children

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the World Summit for Children project; and if he will make a statement. [18482]

Mr. Fatchett: The 1990 Summit focused international attention on the plight of millions of children who are victims of poverty, neglect, cruelty and exploitation. Implementation of the Summit Plan of Action requires a universal effort by governments, the United Nations, other international and regional organisations and all sectors of civil society. We support the follow up work of the United Nations, including to promote implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the action Her Majesty's Government has taken to implement Clause 22 of the Declaration of the United Nations World Summit for Children 1990. [18481]

Mr. Fatchett: We fully support implementation of paragraph 22 of the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Summit Declaration. The United Kingdom makes a major contribution to promoting the rights of children in especially difficult circumstances. This includes support for UN organisations such as the UN High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR), the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

EU Delegations

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 July 1997, Official Report, column 704–05, what were the total costs of European Commission delegations to third countries for 1996. [18500]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In 1996, the total expenditure of Commission Delegations in third countries was 194,558,200 ecu (£132.8 million—November 1997 exchange rate).

Republic of Slovakia

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in the Republic of Slovakia. [18576]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Slovakia is party to the International Convention on Civil and Political Rights, the European Convention on Human Rights and has ratified the Framework Convention on National Minorities. We expect Slovakia to abide by its commitments under these instruments. We are also encouraging the Slovak Government to address the shortcomings in democratic standards identified in the Commission's Opinion on Slovakia's application for EU membership.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the proliferation risks posed by the use of mixed oxide fuel by European Union countries and its transport from European Union suppliers to Japan. [18491]

Mr. Fatchett: The proliferation risks posed by the use of Mixed Oxide Fuel (MOX) by European Union countries and its transport from EU suppliers to Japan are assessed as being extremely low. Indeed, the use of MOX fuel reduces proliferation risks by gradually reducing plutonium stockpiles.

Albania

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each planned visit (a) by British Ministers to Albania and (b) by Albanian Ministers to the United Kingdom. [18475]

Mr. Fatchett: There will be an opportunity for substantial discussion at Ministerial level when the Albanian Prime Minister, Fatos Nano, visits Britain from 14 to 17 December. We intend to continue regular Ministerial contacts but no dates have been fixed either for visits by British Ministers to Albania or further visits by Albanian Ministers to the UK.

Immigration

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be made on the visa application by Abdul Rehman, Islamabad High Commission ref. IMM/E2002. [18832]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in Islamabad to provide a detailed account of the position. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to the hon. Member within one week of receiving that account.

EU Agreements

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the precedents for bilateral agreements between an EU member state and the EU Presidency being concluded after the hearings at a summit. [18671]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At negotiations such as the IGC, it is not unusual for the Presidency to reach tentative understandings with a Member State on how to handle a point of key concern to them. But such understandings would normally be considered subsequently by the full meeting.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement on 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 754, when he was first informed of the bilateral agreement between Spain and the Dutch Presidency. [18669]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We first learned of the change to the text when we received a revised Treaty text after the Amsterdam summit on 19 June.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral statement of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 754, when the bilateral agreement between Spain and the Dutch Presidency of the EU was concluded. [18668]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We believe that the text reflected discussions in the margins of the Amsterdam European Council on 16–17 June.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if another EU member state can block the UK acceding to the Schengen Acquis. [18672]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Unanimity is required where the UK and Ireland apply to take part in a measure within the existing Schengen Acquis. The Declaration on Article 4 of the Protocol, integrating the Schengen Acquis, makes provision for the Council to seek the opinion of the Commission before it decides on a request from the UK or Ireland to take part in some or all of the provisions of the Schengen Acquis. Other Member States also undertake to make their best efforts to allow the UK or Ireland to participate. The UK cannot be blocked from opting into proposals and initiatives which build upon the Schengen Acquis.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral statement of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 754, what representations he made to the Presidency of the European Union about the bilateral agreement between Spain and the Dutch Presidency; and when. [18670]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK made a number of representations on this matter at Ministerial and official level.

Council of Europe

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take in response to Recommendation 1335 (1997) of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. [18366]

Mr. Foulkes: I have been asked to reply.

We are closely monitoring the situation of displaced persons in the Transcaucasus. United Kingdom assistance has concentrated on promoting livelihood security through strengthened co-ordination of humanitarian aid, improved targeting of vulnerable groups and stronger dissemination of international humanitarian law. The Department for International Development has also funded quick impact income generation projects as well as relief items. The total value of UK humanitarian aid since the beginning of 1996 has exceeded £4.3 million.

A UK assessment mission to the Transcaucasian countries is due within the next couple of months and Recommendation 1335 of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe will be taken into consideration when drawing up our strategy.

European Voluntary Service For Young People

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with national youth organisations in the United Kingdom over the European Voluntary Service for Young People as set out in Com (97) 347; what his Department's policy is in respect of Article 1(2) as modified by the European Parliament; to what extent personal security will be taken into account as concerns article 2(1a); what is entailed in the reference to analysis and dissemination of data in article 5.3(2); and if he will make a statement. [18094]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

I attended the European Council of Youth Ministers in Luxembourg on 28 October, at which a common position was reached on the Commission's draft proposal for a European Voluntary Service for Young People, subject to a UK Parliamentary Scrutiny Reserve. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Trickett) on 19 November, Official Report, column 186.

The Commission's proposal states specifically that the activities undertaken by young people under this programme will no way replace potential or existing paid jobs; the other points of detail raised will be addressed with other Member States when the precise arrangements for the Programme are being discussed over the next few months.

The Government are committed to seeing this programme under way as early as possible. The Government agree with Article 1(2) of the draft proposal.

Officers of the Department have had general discussions with the British Youth Council about this programme, and we will draw on our experience of the pilot phase in determining the exact arrangements for the new EVS Programme.

Arms Export Licences (Indonesia)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arms have been licensed for export to Indonesia since 1 May; which arms have been denied such a licence; and on what grounds. [16076]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results obtained.

Between 2 May and 13 November, decisions were taken on 27 applications for standard or open individual licences to export to Indonesia goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (the so-called "Military List"). The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

Decisions on applications for standard individual export licences during the period

Rating	Number of licences granted covering goods with this rating	Number of applications refused covering goods with this rating
ML1	0	2
ML5	1	0
ML7	1	0
ML10	5	0
ML11	11	0
ML13	1	0
ML14	1	1
Total	22	4

Decisions on applications for open individual export licences (OIELs) during the period

Rating	Number of licences granted covering goods with this rating	Number of applications refused covering goods with this rating
ML13	[1]1	0

[1] This OIEL was issued for the export to any destination, including Indonesia, of certain goods for use by specified persons working in the media.

However, this information should be considered in light of the answer given on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 256–58, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint).

In addition to the above, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Indonesia during the period concerned under the following Open General Export Licences (OGELs): OGEL (technology for military goods), OGEL (military surplus vehicles), OGEL (export after repair: military goods) and OGEL (export after exhibition: military goods). I am arranging for copies of all current OGELs to be placed in the Library of the House.

The decision to refuse the applications listed above were made after careful consideration of each case against the criteria announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of her Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if she will make a statement. [13272]

Mr. Murphy [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The policy is that when tax advisers are used it should only be to enable Northern Ireland departments to fulfil their statutory tax obligations rather than for tax avoidance purposes.

Parades and Marches

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total cost of policing the marches, demonstrations and associated disturbances during July and August; [15046]

(2) what was the total cost of policing the parades which took place in Northern Ireland from 1 April to 30 September. [15052]

Mr. Ingram: Policing marches and demonstrations is part of normal police duties and as such separate costings for these activities are not held centrally.

Terrorist Offences

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been charged with terrorist offences other than those in connection with paramilitary beatings in 1997. [16032]

Mr. Ingram: Between 1 January 1997 and 2 December 1997, a total of 334 persons were charged with terrorist type and Serious Public Order offences within Northern Ireland.

Glassdrummond Band

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to her Answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 692, what was the rank of the officer to whom notice was given by the Glassdrummond Band on 2 November. [17031]

Mr. Ingram: The rank of the officer to whom notice was initially given by the Glassdrummond Band on 2 November 1997 was Reserve Constable. The Constable consulted with his Sergeant who granted permission.

Appointments

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list (a) those public bodies to which she makes appointments, (b) the number of persons whom she appoints and the total number of the members of each body, (c) the period of each appointment, (d) the remuneration of each appointment and (e) the sums of public money available to each body in the last year for which figures are available. [17321]

Mr. Murphy: Information relating to parts (a), (b), (d) and (e) of the question can be found in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1996". The 1997 version of this document will be available on 16 December 1997. Information in the form requested at (c) is currently being assembled, and will be made available as soon as that exercise has been completed.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to her answer of 20 November 1997, Official Report, column 272, who made the decision not to fly the Union flag at the Southern Area Health and Social Services Board, Tower Hill, Armagh, on 9 November; and if she will make a statement. [17820]

Mr. Worthington: A letter was sent to all Health and Social Services Boards on 1 May 1997 advising them of the days in 1997 on which the Union Flag should be flown on Central Government Buildings. There is, however no requirement for the Boards to fly the Union flag on these dates. It is at the discretion of each organisation whether the flag should be flown on those buildings occupied by their staff.

There was no specific decision made to fly or not to fly the Union Flag at the Southern Health and Social Services Board Tower Hill, Armagh on 9 November 1997.

District Cancer Centres

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans are in place to train the skilled staff required for the district cancer centres. [17765]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 25 November 1997]: The Cancer Working Group (CWG) Report "Cancer Services—Investing for the Future" recommended a minimum target of 13 consultants in non-surgical oncology by the year 2005. Currently there are eight consultant clinical oncologists in post. To move towards the recommended target the number of trainees in Clinical Oncology has been increased from four to five in 1997–98. Also, a new training post in Medical Oncology is planned for next year.

Prostheses

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the shortest period spent on a waiting list for (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients for the fitting of a prosthesis following the amputation of an arm in the last year for which figures are available. [17896]

Mr. Worthington: No one has had to wait longer than the three week timescale for the fitting of a prosthesis during the past 12 months.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prostheses the Eastern Health and Social Services Board has contracted for in the current financial year; and what funds have been committed to purchase these services. [17903]

Mr. Worthington: The information is not available in the form requested. The Eastern Health and Social Services Board's contract with Green Park Healthcare

Trust is for prosthetic services not the provision of a specified number of prostheses. The value of the contract in the current financial year is £1,005 million.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the longest current waiting time for (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients for the fitting of a prosthesis following the amputation of (i) an arm and (ii) a leg. [17898]

Mr. Worthington: No one is currently waiting outside the three week timescale for the fitting of a prosthesis.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the allocation of resources of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board for the purchase of clinical procedures for (a) the fitting of a prosthesis following the amputation of a leg and (b) breast reconstruction following a mastectomy; and what account was taken of policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines in determining these allocations. [17895]

Mr. Worthington: It is for the Eastern Health and Social Services Board to ensure that sufficient resources are allocated to purchase the level of services necessary to meet the needs of its population. The Board requires that all patients are treated on the basis of clinical priority.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what account the Eastern Health and Social Services Board took of the Government's Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment Guidelines in deciding on the allocation of resources for the purchase of procedures for the fitting of a prosthesis following the amputation of a leg; and what steps were taken to ensure that women and men were treated equally in the purchase of these services. [17911]

Mr. Worthington: When allocating resources for the fitting of prostheses, the Board requires that all patients are treated on the basis of clinical priority.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs Tsar

39. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the recent appointment of a drugs tsar. [17131]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Keith Hellawell will take up his post early in the New Year. His immediate priorities will be to review existing action against drug misuse across the board and to submit proposals to Ministers for a new strategy as quickly as possible, aimed at tackling drug problems through effective enforcement, treatment and education.

40. Mrs. Ballard: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the current programme of work being undertaken by her Inter-Departmental Committee on Drugs. [17132]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: It is not normal practice to give details of the work of Cabinet Committees, but the Committee will in due course be considering plans for a new anti-drugs strategy, on the advice of the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the budget proposed for the office of Drugs Tsar in relation to the purposes intended; and if she will make a statement about how that money will be spent. [18218]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and his Deputy are special advisers to the Government. Accordingly they have no direct responsibility over any budget. The issue of resources for the Co-ordinator's work will be examined further as the Government consider plans for the next phase of the anti-drugs strategy.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Council how many public appointments she has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) received remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16784]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: My Department is responsible for the formal procedures leading to a large number of appointments by the Crown, the Privy Council and myself, the majority of which are part-time and unpaid. Since 1 May I have made nine appointments to the governing bodies of Higher Education institutions and have been involved in a further six such appointments. All of these appointments are unpaid. Additionally I have been involved in six unpaid appointments to statutory medical and similar bodies. Information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all departments in an aggregated form.

Prayers

41. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Council if she will meet the Speaker's Chaplain to discuss Prayers preceding the day's business. [17133]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: While I would be happy to meet the Speaker's Chaplain to discuss the temporal aspects of modernisation of the House, the content of Prayers is a matter for Madam Speaker.

Sitting Hours

42. Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has for reform of the hours which the House sits; and if she will make a statement. [17134]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The hon. Member will be aware of the significant change to sitting hours achieved since the Jopling report was implemented in 1994. The Modernisation Committee is looking again at this matter.

Special Standing Committees

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received concerning increasing the use of Special Standing Committees. [17121]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The use of Special Standing Committees was mentioned in the debate on modernisation on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1061–1129. I have not received any more recent representations.

Chamber Modernisation

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has relating to the redesign of the Chamber. [17126]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None. I told the House on 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 152 that I did not think the House would be willing to change its layout unless there was a broad measure of agreement to do so.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Commission in relation to passive smoking; and what actions are being taken in consequence. [17125]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission is responsible for the terms and conditions of the staff of the House and their working environment. Currently individual heads of the six House departments seek to agree an acceptable smoking policy, including passive smoking, with staff. The Board of Management is carrying out a review of this policy, at the request of the Commission.

A policy on smoking in shared areas of the parliamentary estate, such as corridors and lifts, is a matter primarily for the Administration Committee. Smoking policy in restaurants is a matter for the Catering Committee. Smoking in the offices of hon. Members and their staff is a matter for Members themselves.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15265]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 12 November 1997]: The amount spent on publicity by the Department for International Development (DFID) (ODA in previous years) was:

1993–94: £1.20 million

1994–95: £1.35 million

1995–96: £1.27 million

1996–97: £1.30 million

1997–98 to date: £0.62 million

1997–98 full year estimate: £1.30 million

1998–99 planned expenditure has not yet been agreed

DFID does not carry out any advertising for publicity purposes. Recruitment advertising in these years amounted to:

1993–94: £472,263.37

1995–96: £625,928.42

1996–97: £665,276.68

1997–98 to date: £815,093.77

1997–98 full year estimate: £1.40 million

1998–99 planned expenditure has not yet been agreed

The amount spent on NRI publicity expenditure is as follows:

1994–95: £56,000

1995–96: £56,000

The figures for 1993–94 are not available.

On 1 May 1996 ownership of NRI was transferred to the University of Greenwich.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many public appointments she has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16787]

Mr. Foulkes: One unremunerated appointment has been made since 1 May.

The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all departments in an aggregated form.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list each of the overseas trips made by herself and other members of her ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if she will make a statement. [15264]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 12 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development and I have made a total of 20 trips overseas since 2 May. A breakdown is shown in the attached tables. The precise cost of each trip is not identifiable separately except at disproportionate cost. The total cost of the Secretary of State's trips is £53,845 (this will not include all the costs of the Ottawa visit). The total cost of my overseas visits is £31,802 (this does not include all the costs of my trip to Ukraine).

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums (Lottery Grants)

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) the number of grant applications received for museums, (b) the number of museums which have been awarded Lottery grants, (c) the amount each successful museum has received and (d) the ratio of successful/unsuccessful applications regions by region since the commencement of the National Lottery. [17155]

Mr. Banks: As at 21 November the National Lottery distributing bodies have announced awards worth almost £311 million to 225 museum projects throughout the UK. The following table 1 provides a breakdown, by distributing body, of applications and awards to museums. Table 2 shows the regional success rate to applications from museums. I have arranged for a full list of awards to museums to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Information on Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website www.lottery.gov.uk.

Green Belt (Carrington Moss)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions he has had with directors of Manchester United regarding its application to build on green belt land at Carrington Moss; [17328]

(2) what representations he has received regarding Manchester United's application for planning permission to build on green belt land at Carrington Moss; [17326]

(3) if he will list those organisations and individuals who have made representations to him (a) in favour and (b) against Manchester United's planning application to build on green belt land at Carrington Moss. [17327]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 24 November 1997]: My Department has received no representations about Manchester United's planning application, and I have had no discussions with the Directors of the club on this subject. The planning application itself is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to consider.

Cricket

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has to establish a network of centres of excellence for cricket. [17937]

Mr. Banks: We announced our proposals for the United Kingdom Sports Institute on 14 November. The headquarters will be part of a network of facilities throughout the United Kingdom. Many sports, including cricket, have indicated their desire to establish their own sports specific academies, as part of the Institute network. We are keen to see good proposals come forward for Lottery funding.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what data he has collated on the percentage of total employment accounted for by the tourism industry. [18170]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The latest available figures show that tourism accounts for approximately 7 per cent. of total employment in Great Britain.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his Department is doing to encourage the provision of training for employees in the tourist industry. [18166]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department is already working with the industry, and the Department for Education and Employment, to encourage employee training in the tourism, hospitality and leisure industries. Training is essential if these sectors are to have a world class work force of skilled individuals who can provide excellent service to meet consumer expectations. A working group of the Tourism Forum will be developing further ideas to promote training in the industry.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what data he has collected on Britain's international ranking in terms of international tourism earnings. [18169]

Mr. Tom Clarke: World Tourism Organisation figures show the United Kingdom as fifth in the world in terms of tourism earnings in 1996.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if darts will be treated as a recognised sport for the purposes of the tobacco advertising ban. [18153]

Mr. Banks: The proposed EU Directive would ban all advertising through sponsorship, including darts events. It also proposes a phase-out period to allow alternative sponsors to be found. The Government will actively support efforts to secure alternative sponsors.

Visitors (London)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what data he has collated on the number of United Kingdom visitors to London in the most recent available year. [18165]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The UK Tourism Survey indicated that in 1996, there were 12.2 million visits to London by UK residents who stayed at least one night.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by her Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18112]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has no offices outside central London.

The lowest hourly rate paid to full-time or part-time staff is £4.78p. This is paid to staff in grade D (Lower) (equivalent Administrative Assistant) who are mainly employed on administrative support activities.

The only persons employed under personal contracts in this Department are senior staff, the lowest hourly rate being £18.69.

The rates of pay of staff employed by firms undertaking contracted out services for the Department is a matter for the companies concerned.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take to inform prospective students of the changes in student and higher education financing. [17589]

Dr. Howells: We have sent leaflets on the new student support arrangements to all schools with sixth forms, sixth form colleges, further and higher education institutions, careers services and student unions. We are running a free telephone helpline to handle enquiries about the arrangements and to respond to requests for further copies of the leaflets. To date, over half a million leaflets have been requested. For mature students, parents and others who might not be aware of our leaflets, we are running national adverts in the press and on the radio to publicise the freephone number. Also, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to sixth formers and college students to encourage them to consider higher education in the future and to clear up any misunderstanding that they may have about what we are proposing. In the new year, we shall be issuing the annual student grants and loans booklet, which, amongst other things, will set out the grant and loan rates for 1998–99 and will give more details about the financial contribution expected from parents at differing levels of income.

Home-School Contracts

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many responses were received to the home-school contracts proposals in the White Paper "Excellence in Schools" and the consultation letter dated 8 August; how many (a) teacher organisations and (b) organisations representing the views of parents supported the introduction of home-school contracts; and if he will make a statement. [17763]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 25 November 1997]: Some 650 of the 3,500 respondents to the White Paper commented on our proposals for home-school agreements; 73 organisations commented on the details given in the Department's letter of 8 August. Taking the responses as a whole, four out of the six teacher associations supported the proposal that all schools should have written home school agreements. Of the six parent organisations who commented, three were opposed to home-school agreements and three expressed support for the principle but did not feel they should be made a requirement. 148 of the parents who returned the tear-off section in the White Paper summary leaflet indicated their support for home-school agreements.

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what special educational and welfare assistance is available to children suffering from cerebral palsy. [18147]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is the responsibility of local education authorities, schools and other local agencies (including health authorities and social services departments) to determine the support needed for individual children, in accordance with the guidance in the Code of Practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. The Green Paper on Special Educational Needs, "Excellence for all children", published in October, seeks views on ways in which the present arrangements might be improved for children with all types of special educational needs.

Cycling

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those local education authorities which have ceased to provide cycling proficiency courses. [18175]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 November 1997]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b), part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, listing the job title in each case. [18116]

Dr. Howells: In London, the lowest rate paid by the Department is £4.91 an hour; £3.59 per hour is the lowest hourly rate paid by the Department in all other regions.

These rates apply to all staff directly employed by the Department. Staff at this level do a variety of jobs including filing, photocopying and processing correspondence.

Rates of pay for people employed by firms undertaking contracted out services are a matter for the companies concerned.

Waiver Clauses

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy that fixed-term contract research staff (a) employed and (b) funded by his Department will not be required to sign waiver clauses in their employment contract. [18629]

Dr. Howells: There are no research staff currently employed on fixed term contracts by my Department. However, for fixed term contracts of one year or more, the standard DfEE terms includes a waiver to exclude claims for unfair dismissal on expiry of the contract. The Department has no plans to remove this waiver.

The terms and conditions of staff employed by organisations funded by the Department are the responsibility of the individual employer.

Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage and how many primary school pupils were in classes of over (i) 30, (ii) 36 and (iii) 40 in January in each local education authority and in total; and what was the actual and percentage change in numbers compared with January 1996 in each local authority and in total. [18807]

Mr. Byers: The available information is shown in the following table.

European Voluntary Service for Young People

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what study his Department has undertaken of possible promotional usage of the European Voluntary Service for Young People; what steps his Department will take to ensure that the activities involved do not substitute for existing paid jobs; and if the minimum wage will apply to the service. [18835]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply. I attended the European Council of Youth Ministers in Luxembourg on 28 October, at which a common position was reached on the Commission's draft proposal for a European Voluntary Service for Young People, subject to a UK Parliamentary Scrutiny Reserve. I refer the hon. member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Trickett) on 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 186.

The Commission's proposal states specifically that the activities undertaken by young people under this programme will in no way replace potential or existing paid jobs; the other points of detail raised will be addressed with other Member States when the precise arrangements for the Programme are being discussed over the next few months.

The Government is committed to seeing this programme under way as early as possible. The Government agrees with Article 1(2) of the draft proposal.

Officers of the Department have had general discussions with the British Youth Council about this programme, and we will draw on our experience of the pilot phase in determining the exact arrangements for the new EVS Programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he had with right hon. and hon. Members prior to taking the decision to introduce restrictions on the retail sale of higher dose vitamin B6 supplements; and what plans he has to meet right hon. and hon. Members to discuss the decision prior to laying the necessary statutory instrument. [17818]

Mr. Rooker: There was no consultation with right hon. and hon. Members prior to the Government taking the decision to introduce restrictions on the sale of dietary supplements containing vitamin B6. I have responded to each and every right hon. and hon. Member who has contacted me. Every request for a meeting has been agreed to.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to promote consumers' rights of access to safe vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements of their choice, (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in the European Union and (c) elsewhere; and what plans he has to meet representatives of (i) Consumers for Health Choice and (ii) the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to discuss these matters. [18081]

Mr. Rooker: The Government believes that consumers' access to supplements should only be restricted where this is necessary on safety grounds. This view has been made clear in the UK's formal response to the EU Commission discussion document on the addition of vitamins and minerals to food and food supplements and in discussions on the draft Codex guidelines for supplements containing vitamins and minerals.

I have no plans to meet representatives of either Consumers for Health Choice or the Society for the Promotion for Nutritional Therapy to discuss these matters, nor have I received any request from these bodies for such meetings.

Big Cats

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has responsibility for co-ordinating government responsibility for big cats. [17871]

Mr. Morley: A number of Departments have responsibilities in relation to "big cats". This Department is concerned with the safety of livestock, the Home Office for the safety of people and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions for the legal keeping of such animals by, for example, zoos and circuses. These Departments co-ordinate their actions according to the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sightings of big cats in Norfolk have been reported to his Department since 1993. [17872]

Mr. Morley: I am aware that, in common with several other areas, there have been a number of alleged sightings of "big cats" in the Norfolk area. However, I am not aware of any attacks on farm livestock attributed to "big cats" in the Norfolk area being reported to this Department.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation is available to farmers in the event of livestock being killed or injured by "big cats". [17873]

Mr. Morley: There are no funds available to pay compensation to farmers in the event of livestock being killed or injured by "big cats".

Set-aside

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the amount of public funding in 1997 for land put into set-aside. [18142]

Mr. Morley: Payments for land set aside under the Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) are funded from the European Community Budget. Based on provisional figures for claims under the 1997 Scheme, payments for land set aside in England are expected to be about £80 million. Land entered into certain environmental schemes can also be set aside for the purposes of the Scheme but does not attract any payment under the AAPS; farmers do, however, receive payments for meeting the conditions of the environmental scheme concerned.

Cattle Tagging

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken with regard to the new system for cattle tagging to be introduced in 1998; what assistance has been offered to farmers; and if he will make a statement. [18138]

Mr. Rooker: Double tagging of all cattle born or imported into the UK will become mandatory from 1 January 1998. The Department's officials issued an information note on this to farmers in August 1997, and are in close touch with representatives of the livestock industry and eartag manufacturers about the new arrangements.

Flooding

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance is available to farmers for change of agricultural use where current practices may give rise to flooding of adjoining residential areas. [18139]

Mr. Morley: There are schemes available to encourage farmers to convert arable land to grassland which may help to ameliorate run off from agricultural land; for example farmers can choose to enter eligible land into set-aside. Additional incentives may be available to farmers in Environmentally Sensitive Areas (ESAs) to convert arable fields into permanent grass. The ESA scheme also provides capital grants for the creation or re-instatement of dykes and ditches and for the construction of water penning structures.

Ministry grant aid might be available towards the cost of flood alleviation works undertaken by the Environment Agency or local authorities if those bodies could devise an engineered solution to the flooding problem which met established criteria.

Vacant Farm Buildings

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of (a) empty and (b) unused farm buildings. [18322]

Mr. Morley: The Department collects no information on the number of empty or unused farm buildings.

Farming (Young People)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage young people to enter farming. [18529]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, South (Mr. Jones) on 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 230.

Cattle Passport Scheme

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department's policy is towards passports for calves, in respect of (a) charges and (b) the timescale of registration; what changes his Department is planning to the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [18393]

Mr. Rooker: I announced on 12 November that the Government had decided to charge for the new computerised cattle tracing system via cattle passports. However decisions have yet to be taken about whether to charge for the temporary calf passport as well as the full cattle passport and as to how the movements of animals with temporary calf passports will be recorded on the cattle tracing system.

SCOTLAND

NHS White Paper

9. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the White Paper on the national health service. [17098]

Mr. Galbraith: Our White Paper on the future of the NHS in Scotland will be published shortly.

12. Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with professional health staff regarding the forthcoming White Paper on the NHS. [17101]

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with the health professionals regarding the forthcoming White Paper on the NHS. [17106]

Mr. Galbraith: I have had discussions with the Scottish Council of the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Nursing, the STUC and with Scottish representatives of the NHS Confederation on the future of the NHS in Scotland. I also received a number of written representations from health professionals and associations. Their views were taken into account when preparing the White Paper.

Scottish Parliament

11. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with Edinburgh district council on the site of the proposed Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office is working closely with the City of Edinburgh Council in considering the location of the Scottish Parliament.

13. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the cost implications of each of the potential locations for a Scottish Assembly. [17102]

Mr. McLeish: The estimated costs of providing a building for the Scottish Parliament at three potential locations in Edinburgh are being drawn up at present by independent consultants. The transport and environmental impacts are also being assessed.

18. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the location of the Scottish Parliament. [17109]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision on the location of the Scottish Parliament building around the turn of the year.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current estimate for the cost of the proposed Scottish Parliament building. [18157]

Mr. McLeish: As is explained in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament", the cost is dependent upon the site that is eventually chosen. The estimated costs of providing a building for the Scottish Parliament at locations in Regent Road, Leith and Haymarket are presently being drawn up by independent consultants.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library representations made to him by Historic Scotland about the siting of the Scottish Parliament on Calton Hill. [17630]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 December 1997]: No such representations have been made. Historic Scotland, as an executive agency within The Scottish Office, is fully and directly involved in the process of advising Ministers on the selection of a location for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the date of the first Scottish Parliamentary election. [17103]

Mr. Dewar: The timing of elections is being considered. I will make a further statement in due course.

Public Transport

14. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for increasing the role of public transport in urban and rural areas. [17104]

Mr. Chisholm: We intend to publish a White Paper in the spring setting out an effective, integrated and environmentally sustainable transport policy appropriate to the needs of Scotland. This will take account of the responses to the consultation document issued last August. Our proposals, which will recognise the important role of improved public transport will be published in the White Paper.

Inward Investment

15. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had recently with the President of the Board of Trade concerning inward investment policy. [17105]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave earlier to the hon. Members for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) and for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray).

Land Reform

17. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for land reform in Scotland. [17108]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Inverness, East, Nairn and Lochaber (Mr. Stewart), on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 875.

Household Incomes

19. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what adjustments he will make within the Scottish block to reflect the level of household income in Scotland. [17110]

Mr. Dewar: None.

Glasgow City Council

20. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Glasgow city council to discuss its economic situation; and if he will make a statement. [17111]

Mr. Chisholm: My right hon. Friend and I met the Leader of Glasgow city council on 18 November and had a useful discussion on the economic situation and a range of other matters.

NHS Bureaucracy

21. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in reducing bureaucracy int he NHS in Scotland. [17112]

Mr. Galbraith: Health Boards and Trusts were recently instructed to submit action plans for reducing further the costs of bureaucracy. The plans have still to be fully evaluated and the likely savings and administrative improvements determined.

Trunk Road Improvements

22. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his review of trunk road improvement projects. [17113]

Mr. Chisholm: The Strategic Review of the Trunk Road network, which I announced on 19 July this year, is a key part of our overall review of transport in Scotland, the results of which we intend to publish next year as a White Paper. The review is developing a revised framework for the appraisal of new trunk road schemes consistent with the integrated transport strategy to be set out in the White Paper.

The revised appraisal system will allow schemes to be assessed against the criteria of integration, accessibility, economy, safety and environmental impacts. Public transport solutions will be fully considered alongside new road building proposals. Scottish Office officials are currently developing the assessment criteria in parallel with colleagues from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The roads review is taking into account the full range of factors, including traffic growth, which will give rise to pressure for further major improvements over the trunk road network in Scotland.

We shall undertake public consultation early next year on the emerging findings of the review and it is expected that the outcome of the review will be announced in the Summer of 1998.

Public Expenditure

22. Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on per capita spending levels in Scotland. [17114]

Mr. Dewar: Identifiable General Government Expenditure in Scotland was £4,614 per head in 1995–96, the last year for which complete figures are available.

Higher Education

24. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students there were in higher education in Scotland in each of the past five years; and what estimate he has made of the number for the academic year 1998–99. [17115]

Mr. Wilson: The total number of students (full-time and part-time) in Higher Education in Scotland, for the last five years available, is provided in the following table. The latest published projections for 1998–99 are also included.

Number of students in higher education by year, mode and level

Year	Full-time			Part-time
	Total	Postgraduate	Undergraduate	Total	Postgraduate	Undergraduate
1992–93	120,483	13,095	107,388	46,700	8,638	38,062
1993–94	132,509	13,848	118,661	47,220	9,918	37,302
1994–95	142,722	15,428	127,294	59,158	17,701	41,457

Projection 1998–99[2]	163,140	14,372	148,768	60,183	18,926	41,257

[1] Figures for 1996–97 are provisional.
[2] Projections submitted to the Garrick Committee.

Regional Policy

25. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to attend an EC Council of Ministers meeting to discuss policy towards the regions. [17116]

Mr. Dewar: There is no formal Council devoted to regional policy. I plan to attend an Informal meeting of Regional Policy and Spatial Planning Ministers in Glasgow on 8–9 June as part of the UK Presidency of the EU Council of Ministers.

School Buildings

26. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new resources are being provided to improve the fabric of Scotland's schools in the current financial year. [17117]

Mr. Wilson: £8.9 million.

Secondary Education

27. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve secondary school education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [17118]

Mr. Wilson: Education is at the heart of this Government and raising standards is the key priority. Under our initiative to raise standards in Scottish schools, each school will have clear, realistic and achievable targets for improvement. Implementation will be overseen by my Action Group on Standards in Scottish Schools, membership of which is widely drawn from within and beyond education.

In September, with the endorsement of the Action Group, we issued for consultation a strategy paper for the development of a framework of school targets in key areas with national introduction in the school year 1998–99.

The outcome of consultation will be discussed at the next meeting of the Action Group on 15 December.

In addition, full implementation of the 5–14 curriculum development programme, including national testing, in the first two years of secondary school will contribute to improvement. The programme should be in place by 1999.

Higher Still—a new system of qualifications and assessment—will also contribute to improvement. Higher Still will be introduced in Scottish secondary schools and in further education colleges in 1999. It will replace the existing system of Highers, National Certificates, GSVQs and Certificates of Sixth Year Studies with a single system covering vocational and general education and offering courses at five different levels. This will provide better continuity and progression for all students and will play an important role in raising standards. Group awards will be available to encourage coherent programmes of study and set benchmarks for overall attainment and competence in the core skills—information technology, numeracy, communication, problem solving skills and working with others.

Local Enterprise Agencies

28. Mr Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to change the role of local enterprise agencies. [17119]

Mr. Wilson: The role of the local enterprise companies will take account of the strategies of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

The local enterprise companies will also have a major role to play in the delivery of the New Deal.

Further Education

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from Argyll and Bute (a) attended full-time undergraduate education at universities or equivalent bodies, (b) attended full-time education as mature students and (c) were in receipt of further education awards in the last year for which figures are available. [17599]

Mr. Wilson: Data on the number of undergraduates studying full-time in Scottish Higher Education Institutions are available only on the basis of the Old Regional Council boundaries and are therefore not available for Argyll and Bute. In 1995–96 there were 28,860 full-time undergraduate students in Scottish Higher Education Institutions from the Strathclyde Region.

The number of mature entrants studying full-time in Scottish Higher Education Institutions from Argyll and bute in 1995–96 is also not available. The number of mature entrants from the Strathclyde Region in 1995–96 was 2,491.

The number of mature entrants studying full-time in Scottish Further Education Colleges is set out in the table.

Mature [1] entrants studying full-time in Scotland

	Argyll and Bute	Strathclyde
Higher Education Undergraduate[2] Entrants in Further Education Colleges	45	3,920
Further Education Entrants in Further Education Colleges	61	4,298

[1] Mature entrants are aged 21 years and over.

[2] Undergraduate includes first degree and other higher education qualifications.

Around 150 students from Argyll and Bute (around 8,500 from Strathclyde) received local authority bursaries for further education courses in 1995–96.

University Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland starting undergraduate courses at Scottish universities for each of the last four years were given direct entry into the second year. [17844]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 November 1997]: Figures for the last three years are shown in the table below. Figures on a consistent basis are not available for 1993–94.

Proportion of all undergraduate entrants to Scottish Higher Education Institutions entering directly to the second year of their course

Per cent.

	1994–95	1995–96	[1]1996–97
Students from:
England	11	8	6
Wales	14	7	7
Northern Ireland	12	11	7

[1] Figures for 1996–97 are provisional.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of degree courses at Scottish universities allow for direct entry for (a) A-level, (b) CSYS and (c) HNC/HND students to the second year of the course. [17845]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 November 1997]: This information is not held centrally. The report of the Scottish Standing Committee of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education noted that this was a matter for individual institutions, and recommended that Scottish Higher Education Institutions examine the scope for a greater proportion of students to enter directly into the second year.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance will be given to students beginning courses in 1998 lasting longer than four years towards their tuition fees for the additional years. [17846]

Mr. Wilson: [holding answer 27 November 1997]: Eligible Scottish domiciled students will not be required to pay the £1,000 tuition fee for the final year of any degree course where that course is one year longer than the comparable course offered at institutions in England and Wales.

In addition, eligible Scottish domiciled medical and dental students will be relieved of paying the £1,000 tuition fee for the fifth and subsequent years of their courses. They will thus be on equal footing with their counterparts domiciled elsewhere in the UK.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that the means test level for the payment of full tuition fees is the same in Scotland as in England. [17851]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 November 1997]: Yes.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to offer loans to students to cover the cost of their tuition fees; and if he will make a statement. [17852]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 November 1997]: On 23 July, the Government announced that new students commencing higher education from 1998–99 onwards will be liable to contribute up to £1,000 towards their tuition, and that maintenance grants and the current loan arrangements will be replaced by loans on income contingent repayment terms. Loans will not be available specifically to cover tuition fees. However, for those students who are liable to contribute toward the costs of tuition, their entitlement to loans will be increased to ensure that no student has access to less funds for maintenance under the new system than they would have had under the existing system. This arrangement is the same in Scotland, as elsewhere in the UK.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has recently issued to Scottish local authorities regarding their duties to provide school transport for pupils under the Education Acts; and what plans he has to review that guidance. [17205]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Guidance on the statutory duties and powers of local authorities on the provision of school transport was contained in The Scottish Office Education Department Circular No. 5/95, issued on 24 May 1995; The Scottish Office Development Department Circular No. 17/1996, issued on 30 April 1996 and The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department Circular No. 8/96, issued on 19 September 1996. My right hon. Friend has no plans to review that guidance.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those Scottish local authorities which currently provide a level of school transportation beyond that required in the Education Acts. [17207]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Education authorities have a statutory duty under section 51 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to provide school transport as they consider necessary. This gives them wide discretion to take account of individual circumstances in each case. The Table below indicates the criteria used by each education authority in school session 1996–97 in determining provision of free transport or transport facilities. Information for 1997–98 school session is not yet available. In addition, all authorities provided free transport for children with special educational needs, and almost all authorities took account of medical and personal circumstances or hazardous road conditions to provide transport in individual cases.

Education authority	Distance criteria applied
Aberdeen City	2 miles (Primary) 3 miles (Secondary)
Aberdeenshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Angus	2 miles (Primary) 3 miles (Secondary)
Argyll and Bute	Statutory walking distance
Clackmannanshire	1 mile (under 8) 2 miles (8 and over)
Dumfries and Galloway	Statutory walking distance
Dundee City	Statutory walking distance
East Ayrshire	Statutory walking distance
East Dunbartonshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
East Lothian	2 miles all pupils
East Renfrewshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Edinburgh City	Statutory walking distance
Falkirk	1 mile (under 8) 2 miles (8 and over)
Fife	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Glasgow City	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Highland	Statutory walking distance
Inverclyde	Statutory walking distance
Midlothian	Statutory walking distance
Moray	2 miles all pupils
North Ayrshire	Statutory walking distance
North Lanarkshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Orkney Islands	1 mile all pupils in Winter and Easter terms
Perth and Kinross	Statutory walking distance
Renfrewshire	Less than the statutory walking distance (but not specified)
Scottish Borders	2 miles (Primary) 3 miles (Secondary)
Shetland Islands	1½ miles in Winter months
South Ayrshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
South Lanarkshire	1 mile (Primary) 2 miles (Secondary)
Stirling	1 mile (under 8) 2 miles (8 and over)
West Dunbartonshire	Less than the statutory walking distance (but not specified)
West Lothian	2 miles (Primary) 3 miles (Secondary)
Western Isles	1 mile all pupils

The statutory walking distance is defined under section 42(4) of The Education (Scotland) Act 1980 as being two miles for pupils under eight years of age and three miles for all other pupils. The statutory walking distance is defined for the purposes of reasonable excuse, i.e., it is considered a reasonable excuse for parents not to send their children to their designated school if no arrangements are made for them under section 51 of the 1980 Act. Section 51 does not itself set any distance beyond which transport should be provided.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the non-domestic rate poundage for Scotland will be in 1998–99. [19209]

Mr. Dewar: It will be 47.4p, the same as in England.

New Deal

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow local flexibility in the implementation of the New Deal. [17107]

Mr. Wilson: There will be significant flexibility within the overall national New Deal framework which allows for local solutions and partnerships which reflect local circumstances. Flexibility is therefore a prominent feature of the process.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications are currently awaiting determination at the Department of Trade and Industry. [16142]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 14 November 1997]: Licences to export strategic goods are issued by the President of the Board of Trade and the Export Control Organisation (ECO) of my department is the licensing authority. The ECO circulates all relevant individual licence applications to other Government Departments with an interest, as determined by them in line with their policy responsibilities. The Departments from which advice is sought include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development.

ECO management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four-week periods. At 17 October 1997, a total of 2,184 applications were awaiting a decision; these applications comprised applications for new standard or open individual licences to export strategic goods and applications for the renewal or amendment of existing individual licences. This compares with 2,085 outstanding applications at the end of October 1996. ECO is also the licensing authority for goods whose export is only controlled because of UN trade sanctions but data on the number of applications awaiting a decision are not compiled as most decisions are subject to UN authorisation, which can take some time.

Recommended Retail Prices

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy on the recommended retail prices for (a) newspapers, (b) books and (c) pharmaceutical products. [17558]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 24 November 1997]: Recommended retail prices are not contrary to competition law unless specifically proscribed. They have not been proscribed for these products.

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if her Department will undertake a study of potential costs to business of proposals contained in the final text of the Treaty of Amsterdam as concerns the (a) competitiveness of British industry and (b) foreign inward investment; and if she will make a statement. [17079]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 24 November 1997]: The Amsterdam Treaty represents a very satisfactory outcome for the UK. My Department will not undertake a separate study of potential costs of the Treaty but of course any legislative proposals consequential of the adoption of the treaty will be assessed carefully in terms of costs and benefits to business.

Power Generation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many new (a) gas-fired power stations and (b) other types of power station are awaiting licence determination at her Department; and what total capacity they represent. [18324]

Mrs. Beckett: Of the 28 applications currently before the Department;

(i) 22 relate to new gas fired stations (CCGT and CHP) totalling 8.2 GW of new capacity;

(ii) 5 relate to dual firing with gas of existing coal or oil power stations using 5.9 GW of existing capacity;

(iii) 1 relates to a windfarm.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plan she has to increase regional aid in areas affected by coal closures. [17957]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The Government recognise that communities hit by pit closures face distinctive problems. We have therefore established a Coalfield Task Force which will identify and develop a programme of action to assist coal closure areas.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tonnage of coal she estimates is displaced by a 1,200 MW gas-fired power station. [18042]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The impact of a new gas fire station will depend on its mode of operation, the competitive position of other stations and the level of demand that is required to be met. If run at baseload a 1,200 MW station might generate some 8-9 TWh of electricity per year. If it were fully to displace a coal fired station also running at baseload, as would have been the case for new plant five years ago when a substantial amount of coal fired plant ran at baseload, it would be likely to displace about 3.5 million tonnes of coal per year.

In today's market place displacement may be less than this if, as is possible, the new plant now displaces other plant rather than coal. Such impacts are complex and cannot now be more precisely assessed.

Funeral Industry

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her Answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 192, if she will list (a) the possible options for consumer protection which the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs has discussed with the Director General of Fair Trading regarding pre-paid funerals and (b) the actions further to protect consumers which she is discussing with Treasury ministers; and if she will make a statement. [18038]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: I have discussed a number of options with the Director-General of Fair Trading, and with Treasury Ministers.

There are two possible approaches to this issue. One would be to introduce a completely new regulatory regime, for the pre-paid funerals sector. The other involves bringing pre-paid funerals under an existing regulatory regime. Whichever approach is chosen, our objectives are to ensure that there will be sufficient financial provision available so that those consumers who have purchased their funerals in advance get the funerals for which they have paid, and to address the questions of transparency in marketing practices. Consideration of the various options is continuing at official level. It would be premature to make any further statement at this stage.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) main post offices and (b) sub-post offices have been closed in each of the last three years in the United Kingdom. [18167]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that closures of post offices in the United Kingdom in the last three financial years have been as follows:

	Main post offices closed	Main post offices converted to agency status	Sub-post offices closed
1994–95	—	101	115
1996–97	—	47	163

The numbers of sub-post offices closed are net of new openings.

Toys (Safety)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of (a) the levels of phthalates present in children's toys on sale in the United Kingdom and (b) the level of danger these may present to children; and if she will make a statement. [17781]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The DTI is at present carrying out research to develop procedures for testing the levels of exposure to phthalates from PVC toys in the light of criticism of current European guidance test methods, which show no evidence that Tolerable Daily Intakes (TDIs) are being exceeded. I am advised that the concentration of phthalates in children's toys is not a satisfactory indication of the exposure of children to these chemicals. This can be assessed by determining the migration of phthalates from these products. The Department of Health has advised, in the light of the most recent research conducted on phthalates, that there are unlikely to be any health risks to children from phthalates in toys and teething rings provided that exposure does not exceed the relevant TDIs for phthalates set by the EC Scientific Committee for Food. This advice takes account of all available information on the possible effects of phthalates, including recent studies concerning oestrogenic activity.

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will ban the sale of toys containing cyclobutanone. [17920]

Mr Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 28 November 1997]: I have no plans to do so. I am advised that cyclobutanone does not appear to be used to any great extent, if at all, in toy production. The essential safety requirements in the Toy (Safety) Regulations 1989 requires toy manufactures to supply toys that are safe when used as intended to be used or in a foreseeable way. Any chemical used in toys must comply with this requirement.

Minimum Wage

Jacqui Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of the minimum wage in EU countries, the USA and Japan in pounds sterling per hour, calculated in current exchange rates. [18567]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department does not systematically collect information on all countries. What information is available, is set out in the following table:

1997 local currency minimum wages in selected countries and their pounds sterling hourly equivaent converted at current exchange rates

Country	Local currency rate[1]	£ equivalent at 31 October 1997 current rate
Belgium	44,185 Belgian Francs per month	[2]4.61
France	39.43 French Francs per hour	4.02
Greece	5,746–6,321 Drachma per day	[3]1.61–1.77
Luxembourg	46,275–55,520 Luxembourg Francs per month	[2]4.33–5.79
Netherlands	2,243 Guilders per month	[2]4.29
Portugal	56,700 Escudo per month	[2]1.20
Spain	2,221 Pesetas per day	[3]1.16
USA	5.15 Dollars per hour	3.17
Japan	4,521–5,252 Yen per day	[3]2.99–3.48

[1] Local currency minimum wages as known at 28 July 1997. The definition of the minimum wage varies across countries. Also, exemptions may apply for some workers and different rates may apply for youth workers.

[2] Monthly rate converted to hourly rate assuming employees work 39 hour week for 49 weeks in the year.

[3] Daily rate converted to hourly rate assuming employees work 7¾ hours per day.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the potential for a national minimum wage to result in wage inflation. [18104]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received a number of representations which referred to the possible effects of the National Minimum Wage, including the impact on wage inflation.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice she has sought and from whom on the advantages and disadvantages of establishing a regionally varied minimum wage based on the precedents established by the wages councils. [18103]

Mr. Ian McCartney: From 1986 to their abolition in 1993 each Wages Council, in fact, set a single minimum basic hourly rate, which applied to all adult workers covered. The Low Pay Commission will take into account regional concerns expressed in the evidence it receives when formulating its recommendation on a single national minimum rate.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been made to the Low Pay Commission calling for the introduction of a regionally varied minimum wage; and how many of these called for a regionally varied minimum wage based on precedents established by the wages councils. [18102]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Low Pay Commission is an independent body. The representations it receives are a matter for the Commission.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes she has introduced to the conditions governing part-time workers in the United Kingdom since May; and if she will make a statement. [18409]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government have accepted the Social Chapter which will mean that part time and full time workers in the UK will be able to benefit from its measures. We have undertaken to implement the Part Time Work Directive once it has been agreed by the other member states. This will prohibit less favourable treatment of part-timers and promote part-time job opportunities. It will thus contribute to the flexible organisation of work while at the same time ensuring that part-timers receive the same contractual and statutory benefits as full-timers.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by her Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18110]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In London, the lowest rate paid by the Department is £5.16 an hour. £3.84 per hour is the lowest hourly rate paid by the Department in all other English regions and Scotland. In Wales, the lowest hourly rate of pay is £3.70 in a Departmental Agency where a pay award is pending.

These rates apply to all staff at the relevant level directly employed by the Department. Staff at this level do a variety of jobs including filing and photocopying.

Rates of pay for persons employed by firms undertaking contracted out services are a matter for the companies concerned.

Plutonium

Mr. Coaker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will published the international guidelines on the management of civil plutonium. [19121]

Mr. Battle: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a document recently agreed among an informal group of nine countries, including the United Kingdom, entitled "Guidelines for the Management of Civil Plutonium". The UK has informed the International Atomic Energy Agency of its intention to adopt these guidelines.

The background to the guidelines has been a general wish by some countries to improve transparency and public confidence in the management of national holdings of civil plutonium. Agreement was reached in the informal group, comprising the United Kingdom, the United States, China, Russia, France, Germany, Japan, Belgium and Switzerland, to publish guidelines that would provide an internationally-accepted framework for the management of civil plutonium. Under the guidelines, participating countries accept a new commitment to publish occasional statements explaining their national strategies for nuclear power and the nuclear fuel cycle, and, against that background, their general plans for managing national holdings of plutonium, together with annual figures for their holdings of unirradiated plutonium and of plutonium contained in spent fuel as at the end of each calendar year.

The UK has for the past 11 years published information on its national holdings of civil plutonium annually as at 31 March. In keeping with the guidelines, the UK will in future be publishing such information annually as at 31 December, as this will facilitate international comparisons on a consistent basis.

I have also today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the first set of figures for the UK under the new format showing national holdings as at 31 December 1996. Figures for our holdings as at 31 December 1997 will be published in June 1998.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are taken to ensure that money intended for training which is routed through TECs is used for the correct purposes. [16529]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

The primary responsibility for ensuring that public money is properly protected rests with TECs. The Permanent Secretary wrote on 23 October to all TEC Chairs to emphasise the importance of good financial controls between TECs and their training providers. Additionally the newly established Training Inspectorate will assess the quality of training provision right at the point of delivery.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Information

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the library a copy of the internal departmental guidance on the dissemination of information; and if he will make a statement. [16294]

Mr. Kilfoyle: A revised version of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information was published by the Office of Public Service in January 1997.

I have made arrangements for copies of internal departmental guidance issued in February 1997 to the members of staff within the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service to be placed in the libraries of the House.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the role of Sir Cameron Mackintosh in the Millennium Experience exhibition, indicating his remuneration. [16766]

Mr. Mandelson: Sir Cameron Mackintosh agreed, in June 1997, to advise the New Millennium Experience Company in respect of the arena show. He agreed to do this without remuneration.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will ensure that no (a) members of the Board and (b) other employees of the New Millennium Experience Company benefit financially from contracts made by the company. [16765]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is incorporated under the Companies Act and its Board members are subject to the duties of directors under company law. Additionally, all Chairman and Members of the Boards of non-departmental public bodies, a status applying to the NMEC, are required to comply with the requirements of the "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of Public Bodies" which was published following the 1992 Cadbury Report.

The NMEC Board operates under statutory requirements and best practice in respect of all its business, including contract decisions. I am confident that the individuals involved and the systems in place ensure that there is no room for personal financial benefit from the award of contracts.

As regards employees, the NMEC's Employee Handbook is an extension of terms and conditions of employment and precludes any financial gain of this kind. Contravention of these provisions would represent gross misconduct and could lead to dismissal.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the Advisory Committee on Advertising was consulted over the appointment of M and C Saatchi in respect of the Millennium Experience. [16764]

Mr. Mandelson: No.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how long advertising agencies were given to tender for the New Millennium Experience Company contract; and what factors governed the length of the consultation period. [16763]

Mr. Mandelson: There were 43 calendar days between the date of the advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities and the submission of bids. Interested companies were given 10 days within which to submit a request to pre-qualify. This request had only to contain standard corporate information—company profile, management structure and responsibilities, CVs for lead personnel and other staff, case histories of three projects of similar or analogous nature, scope of services, turnover and billings for the previous three years and the forecast for 1997, and experience of previous work for Government and other public sector bodies.

Following six days of consideration of the requests to pre-qualify, NMEC shortlisted those companies it considered should be invited to tender (ITT) and invitations were issued. The shortlisted companies were required to respond to the ITT with bids within 27 days.

These procedures were pursued in accordance with domestic and European regulations governing open competitive tendering. Under European procurement rules accelerated procedures can be undertaken. With the agreement of Treasury Solicitor the NMEC adopted accelerated procedures for the communications contract because of the urgency arising from need to prepare for the launch of the Millennium Experience's National Programme.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when the New Millennium Experience Company appointed M and C Saatchi to conduct its advertising. [16762]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company announced the appointment of M and C Saatchi on 22 August to develop and implement an integrated communications campaign including advertising, having received approval from the Millennium Commission on 21 August.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the role of (a) Mr. Bill Muirhead and (b) Mr. Jeremy Sinclair in the New Millennium Experience Company; what is their remuneration; when each was appointed; and what role they played in the appointment of M and C Saatchi as the advertising agency for the company. [16761]

Mr. Mandelson: Neither Bill Muirhead nor Jeremy Sinclair has a role in the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). They currently receive not remuneration from NMEC nor have they received any in the past. Mr. Muirhead and Mr. Sinclair assisted the Company (then called Millennium Central Ltd.) on a part-time basis as acting, unpaid communications advisers until June 1997 when they stood down from the role. Neither took any part in the competitive tendering process—from drawing up and preparing the brief, to selecting a communications advertising agency.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when the Millennium Dome is scheduled for completion; and when the Millennium Experience will be fully operational. [16971]

Mr. Mandelson: The construction of the Millennium Dome is scheduled for completion in September 1998. The Experience will open on 31 December 1999.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what compensation has been paid to the original contractor for the supply of the covering of the Millennium Dome. [17525]

Mr. Mandelson: None. Negotiations between the New Millennium Company and the contractor under the terms of the original contract are continuing.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what contingency plans he has made in respect of the Millennium Experience for the possibility that the Jubilee Line might not be fully operational by January 2000. [17590]

Mr. Mandelson: London Underground Ltd. have assured me that the Jubilee Line Extension will be able to cope with the number of visitors anticipated by the New Millennium Experience and that it will be open in good time to do so.

TREASURY

Tax and National Insurance Revenue

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the average tax and national insurance revenue generated each year by (a) a full-time job and (b) a part-time job. [16895]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 November 1997]: In 1995–96, the latest financial year for which final receipts are available, the total revenue for income tax was £68,049 million and the total number of income tax payers was 25.8 million, giving an average income tax contribution of £2,640 per annum. The total revenue from national insurance contributions in 1994–95, the latest year for which the number of people paying contributions is available, was £37,863 million and the total number of people who paid contributions was 24.2 million, giving an average national insurance contribution of £1,565. It is not recorded whether these contributions were for full or part-time work.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 620–21, what would be the effect on the number of people of working age who face combined marginal rates of withdrawal of tax, national insurance contributions and means-tested benefits of (a) under 50 per cent., (b) 50 to 59 per cent., (c) 60 to 69 per cent., (d) 70 to 79 per cent., (e) 80 to 89 per cent. and (f) 90 per cent. or above of introducing a 10 pence starting rate of income tax on (i) the first £1,000, (ii) the first £1,500 and (iii) the first £2,000 of taxable income if no other changes were made to the tax and benefit system. [16900]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 November 1997]: As the Chancellor has made clear, the Government are determined that the working poor should benefit from any move to a 10p income tax rate. They are therefore considering what action is necessary on tapers and other features of the benefit system to ensure that a lower starting rate of income tax benefits all the low-paid.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if tax payers on the basic or higher rates of tax will benefit fully from the reduction in tax to be paid upon the introduction of a 10p starting rate of tax. [18412]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 December 1997]: When the Chancellor introduces a 10p rate of tax, anyone whose starting rate of tax becomes 10p will benefit from its introduction.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the regulatory authorities responsible for the licensing and operation of banks and credit institutions in the even of UK entry to EMU. [17523]

Mrs. Liddell: The regulatory authorities responsible for authorising banks and other credit institutions would not change in the event of the UK joining the single currency.

Harmful Tax Competition

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 235, what his policy on the use of the veto on the EU Commission's proposals on "A Package to Tackle Harmful Tax Competition" (COM (97) 564). [17584]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 November 1997]: Direct taxation is primarily a matter for Member States at national level. Proposals for action at the Community level, including those in the Commission's Communication on harmful Tax Competition (COM (97) 564) are considered on their own merits, but must respect the principles of subsidiarity and unanimity.

Labour Market Statistics

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusions the Office for National Statistics has reached on the presentation of labour market statistics. [18027]

Mrs. Liddell: The information falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Jackie Ballard, dated December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on the presentation of labour market statistics.

In the summer, ONS launched a wide-ranging public consultation about the future of labour market statistics. The results of the consultation were published in October's edition of the ONS publication Labour Market Trends, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

As the Director of ONS I am responsible for deciding the form, coverage and timing of release of ONS statistics. I expect to make an announcement about ONS proposals for labour market statistics early in the New Year.

Pension Funds

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the use of interest on European Community pension funds to finance Community activities. [18490]

Mrs. Liddell: None. The pension scheme for staff of the Community Institutions is unfunded, so there is no accumulated fund earning interest. Payments are charged against the Community Budget, and contributions are treated as revenue, as they occur.

Unemployment

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown of the 20 per cent. of working age households who are not working into households made up of (a) students and trainees, (b) disabled people, (c) couples where one person is a pensioner, (d) single parents and (e) others. [18513]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Hill to Mr. David Willetts, dated 2 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question asking for a breakdown of workless households into various categories including disabled people.

Regrettably, I am unable to reply immediately because the data concerning disabled people are not yet available.

The focus and number of questions in the health and disability module of the Labour Force Survey (LFS) questionnaire changed in spring 1997 to reflect the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. As with any significant change in a part of the survey, the results needed to be evaluated before the data could be released. This review is now complete and the data will be publicly available from 17 December.

The new module has introduced a sizeable discontinuity which makes comparisons with earlier periods unsuitable. This is why it would not be appropriate to answer the question with data from the previous quarter (Winter 1996–97).

I will write to you again after these data are publicly released.

Funeral Industry

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of permanent jobs in the United Kingdom that are (a) directly and (b) indirectly related to the funeral industry. [18294]

Mrs Liddell [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 2 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on direct and indirect employment in the funeral industry.

Information from the Annual Employment Survey show there were 15,200 employees in funeral and related activities in Great Britain at September 1996.

No information is available identifying the number of these jobs which are permanent, nor other jobs indirectly related to the funeral industry.

Low Pay

Mr. Pond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for April 1997 the number and proportion of manual, non-manual and all full-time employees on adult rates earning less than (a) £174.85, (b) £233.13 and (c) £249.97 per week excluding overtime for (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) both sexes for (1) each county and unitary authority in England, (2) each unitary authority in Wales, (3) each London borough, (4) each unitary authority in Scotland, (5) Great Britain as a whole, (6) England as a whole and (7) each Government office region. [18277]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Pond, dated 2 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on earnings.

The available information, from the New Earnings Survey April 1997, is given in the attached tables. These tables are voluminous and copies of them are being placed in the Library of the House rather than reproduced in Hansard.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18109]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has no offices outside central London. The lowest hourly rates paid to full-time, part-time and short-term appointment employees are as follows:

	Lowest hourly rates in £s
Full-time employees	5.47
Part-time employees	5.95
Short-term appointments[1]	4.34

[1] Staff on fixed-term appointments and casual staff who are appointed on short-term contracts for periods of up to 12 months.

The rates above are paid to a small number of staff most of whom are engaged on clerical and administrative support work.

The hourly rates for staff employed by firms undertaking contracted out services for the department are a matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees in each of the regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices are paid an hourly rate of (a) less than £1.50, (b) between £1.50 and £2, (c) between £2 and £2.50, (d) between £2.50 and £3 and (e) between £3 and £3.50. [18105]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 2 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on earnings.

The available information, from the New Earnings Survey April 1997, is given in the attached table.

Percentage of people with an hourly rate (excluding overtime)

Government Office Region	Less than £1.50	Between £1.50 and £2	Between £2 and £2.50	Between £2.50 and £3	Between £3 and £3.50

Exchange Rate

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the benefits of linking sterling to the US dollar. [18840]

Mrs. Liddell: No.

DEFENCE

Espionage

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an inquiry into the role of officials in advising Ministers about the use of Hull trawlers for espionage and counter-espionage. [16688]

Dr. Reid: I do not believe this is necessary.

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the use of trawlers for espionage and counter-espionage in the late 1960s and 1970s. [16690]

Dr. Reid: A very limited number of trawlers assisted the Government in specific intelligence gathering in the 1960s and early 1970s.

At the time there was also a scheme whereby Royal Navy officers gained sea going experience in merchant ships, including deep sea trawlers. All RN personnel were encouraged to report back any opportunity sightings of interest, as indeed were the trawlermen themselves.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many procedures resulting in the deaths of animals carried out (a) at Porton Down and (b) elsewhere in the last five years were undertaken on behalf of (i) other countries and (ii) other EU countries; [17618]

(2) how many procedures on animals carried out at (a) Porton Down and (b) elsewhere, have resulted in the deaths of (i) rodents, (ii) pigs and (iii) monkeys and apes in each of the last five years; and what estimate he has made of these figures for each of the next five years; [17617]

(3) what is his estimate of the numbers of procedures on animals carried out at (a) Porton Down and (b) elsewhere, that will result in the deaths of animals in each of the next 10 years. [17619]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 25 November 1997]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 2 December 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your three recent questions requesting information on the numbers of procedures on animals carried out at Porton Down and elsewhere which result in the death of the animals. I am answering all three questions in this letter.

You asked how many procedures resulting in the death of animals are likely to take place in the next ten years. It is not possible to predict the number of such procedures as the size of the programme is based on MOD's research requirements which are reassessed on a yearly basis. However, as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) which carries out most of this work, I can predict that procedures on animals may well increase in the short term as DERA scientists at Porton Down are involved in a continuing programme to develop more effective protection against biological weapons.

You also requested the numbers of procedures which have resulted in the deaths of rodents, pigs and monkeys for the past five years. The number of procedures involving these species carried out by DERA at Porton Down, which undertakes most of this work for the MOD, during each of the last five years are listed in the table below.

Year	Rodents	Pigs	Monkeys
1992	3,791	132	72
1993	5,976	109	36
1994	6,844	102	17
1995	8,112	48	17
1996	10,129	48	14

Information on the number of procedures resulting in the deaths of such animals as a result of research conducted elsewhere is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

It is not possible to predict the numbers of deaths for the next five years for the reason given above.

All animals are disposed of humanely using an approved method under Schedule 1 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at the end of procedures in accordance with the specific Home Office licences.

Your third question asked about procedures on animals undertaken on behalf of other countries, including EU countries during the last five years. DERA has not undertaken any research projects on behalf of other countries in the last five years which have involved the use of animals.

DERA does, however, take part in collaborative research programmes which involve a sharing of data from experiments.. This can prevent the duplication of experiments and may well help reduce the numbers of animals used in defence research.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals were used in experiments carried out at Porton Down in each year since 1967 (a) in total, (b) by species and (c) by category of experiments. [17919]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 November 1997]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 2 December 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which has responsibility for the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) Sector at Porton Down, I have been asked to respond to your question about animal experiments.

CBD Sector has attempted to locate all of the information which you have requested. However, during the period from 1967 to 1980, records on the numbers and species of animals used for experimental work were returned to the Home Office by the individual Home Office project licence holders, and were not collated centrally. The information for this period could, therefore, only be provided at disproportionate cost. We can, however, provide data on the numbers and species of animals involved in experiments from 1980 to 1996, shown in the table below.

[1] Includes animals not normally returned as species, e.g. ferrets and gerbils.

Note:

Numbers of procedures carried out on animals from 1980 to 1996, by species and year, as returned to the Home Office by CBD Sector.

The current legislative requirements governing the use of animals in scientific experiments, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act, came into effect in 1986. Prior to this date all non-human primates were returned to the Home Office as "monkeys". Therefore, for the period 1986–96, we have incorporated the figures for Rhesus monkeys and marmosets into "non-human primates" for comparative purposes.

As far as the categories of experiments are concerned, it is the auspices of this Act that the categories are defined on individual project licences; prior to 1986 they were classified in a different manner. The Home Office does not require the numbers of procedures returned annually to be related to the categories stated on individual project licences. We do not, therefore, have these figures readily available and this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

I hope that the information we have been able to provide is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlie the increase in the numbers of animal experiments carried out at Porton Down between 1992 to 1997; and if he will make it his policy to review the range of experiments undertaken with a view to reducing their number [17921]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 500.

Soviet Navy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when trawlers were last used by his Department to track and monitor the former Soviet Navy. [18530]

Dr. Reid: The use by the Ministry of Defence of a very limited number of fishing trawlers for specific intelligence gathering operations against the former Soviet Navy ceased in 1973.

Territorial Army

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women are serving in the Territorial Army. [18168]

Dr Reid: As at 1 October 1997 (a) 45,867 men and (b) 8,386 women were serving in the TA. The figures exclude 1,394 male and 11 female Non-Regular Permanent Staff (NRPS).

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army officers there were in each of the last five years; what is the projected number for 1998; and if he will make a statement. [18364]

Dr. Reid: The number, or strength, of Territorial Army (TA) officers, as at 1 April in each of the last five years was as follows:

The officer establishment of TA officers planned for 1 April 1998 is 6,825, but the actual strength on that date will depend largely on recruitment and retention factors.

The Department is currently reviewing the future size and shape of the Regular and Reserve Forces as part of the on-going Strategic Defence Review.

Armed Forces (Women)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women are serving in each of the United Kingdom armed forces. [18578]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the monthly "Tri-Service Personnel Statistics", the most recent edition of which was published on 27 November 1997, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Fast Jets (Servicing)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that fast jets are serviced according to the highest standards [18531]

Dr. Reid: The RAF continually reviews its quality control and contracting processes to ensure that all of its aircraft are serviced in ways which meet the exacting quality standards which are required.

Agencies (Civilian Employees)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian employees there are within the (a) defence agencies and (b) defence executive agencies; and what is the projected number of civilian employees over the next three years. [18528]

Mr. Spellar: All defence agencies are Next Steps agencies and no distinction is now made between defence agencies and what were one defence executive agencies. At 1 October 1997 some 61,400 permanent and 1,400 casual full-time equivalent civilian personnel worked in defence agencies. This represented 58 per cent. of permanent and 52 per cent. of casual Ministry of Defence civilian personnel at that date. While it is anticipated that there will be a small reduction of about 5 per cent. in the overall number of civilian personnel employed by the Ministry over the next three years (including Defence agencies), no separate estimates are available for defence agencies.

Royal Irish Regiment

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current (a) full-time and (b) part-time establishment of the Royal Irish Regiment broken down by battalion; and by how much each battalion is under establishment. [18488]

Dr. Reid: The establishment of the 1st Battalion The Royal Irish Regiment is 611, comprising General Service soldiers only. At 31 October it was 136 under establishment.

The information requested with regard to the six Home Service Battalions is set out in the table.

	R Irish (HS FT)			R Irish (HS PT)
Battalion	Establishment	Strength	Under-manning	Establishment	Strength	Under-manning
3 R Irish	676	555	121	563	472	91
4 R Irish	631	516	115	510	427	83
5 R Irish	419	367	52	326	221	105
7 R Irish	469	414	55	402	329	73
8 R Irish	407	365	42	320	291	29
9 R Irish	466	413	53	315	239	76
Total	3,068	2,630	438	2,436	1,979	457

Figures as at 31 October 1997.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for Her Majesty's Yacht Britannia. [18394]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Mr. Godman) yesterday, Official Report, column 6.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18117]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested in respect of civilian staff is given in the following table. Most staff employed by MOD are paid either London or national rates of pay. The table therefore gives two figures for each of (a), (b) and (c). We do not hold information about the pay of staff employed by companies undertaking contracts for the department.

	London (£)	National (£)
(a) Full time[1]	4.03	3.36
(b) Part time[2]	4.59	3.82
(c) Personal contract	[3]—	[3]—

[1] The figures quoted relate to administrative assistants. In London, these are paid a minimum of £8,593 a year (including £736 recruitment and retention allowance) working 41 hours gross; and £7,344 in the national area working 42 hours a week gross.

[2] Annual pay rates used for calculating part-time pay are the same as for full-time staff, but hourly rates are then calculated on net 36 (London) and 37 (national) hours a week as part-timers have no paid lunch break.

[3] "Personal contract" is taken here to mean staff on standard fixed term appointments. The minimum pay rates for such staff are the same as for full-time or part-time staff.

In the case of the Armed Forces, pay is based on recommendations made by the independent Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB) and published annually. The 1997 Report (Cmnd 3537) is available in the Library of the House. There is no regional variation in the basic pay of the Armed Forces, whose pay is based on daily, not hourly rates.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings representatives of his Department have had with General Pinochet concerning sales of defence equipment to Chile in the last two years; and if he will make a statement. [17837]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 November 1997]: Since 1 May 1997, no representatives of my Department have had meetings with General Pinochet concerning the sale of defence equipment to Chile. I am advised, however, that in December 1996 the then Secretary of State for Defence met General Pinochet during his official visit to Chile.

HEALTH

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public appointments he has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16775]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has made 435 public appointments since 1 May 1997. Of these, 85 per cent. are remunerated. The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all departments in an aggregated form in his reply to my hon. Friend on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 669.

Kidderminster Hospital

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the catchment area is of Kidderminster hospital; and how many people are within it. [17181]

Mr. Milburn: The catchment area of Kidderminster hospital and how many people are within it as reported by the hospital are as follows:

	Population served (approximately)
Worcestershire	106,000
Shropshire	12,000
Other:
South Staffordshire, Dudley, Hereford	6,000
Total	123,000

Note:
Figures do not sum due to rounding.

Pathology Services (Kent)

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust to achieve Good Laboratory Practice accreditation in respect of pathology services. [17788]

Mr. Boateng: We understand from the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust that the departments of Haematology and Blood Transfusion, Clinical Biochemistry, Microbiology and Haemophilia applied for Clinical Pathology Accreditation in February 1997. Provisional approval was granted and a formal inspection is scheduled for January 1998. The Trust is also striving towards the attainment of the Good Laboratory Practice (GLP) standard.

Clinical laboratories generally seek accreditation by Clinical Pathology Accreditation (UK) Limited (CPA) rather than GLP accreditation. The former was developed specifically for clinical laboratories, whereas the latter is much more relevant to laboratories involved in clinical trials work.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust to address the recommendations of the 1995 report Review of Pathology Services at Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust. [17787]

Mr. Boateng: We understand from Kent and Canterbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust that the report highlighted a number of specific departmental issues to be addressed:

Of the 17 general issues, 12 have been fully implemented, five partially implemented.

Of the seven Haematology issues, four have been fully implemented and three partially implemented.

Of the five Chemistry issues, two have been fully implemented and three not implemented (these require further dialogue with neighbouring Trusts).

Of the six Microbiology issues two have been fully implemented and four not implemented (these require further dialogue with neighbouring Trusts).

Of the seven Histology issues, two have been fully implemented, four partially implemented and one not implemented (this requires further work by SKHT).

The overall recommendations (options) were as follows:

1. The options of doing nothing or of sending the work out to an external agency were rejected by the trust as being impractical and not in the best interests of the trust.

This was accepted by the trust.

2. Although refurbishment of the current Pathology facility would be possible we believe that this exercise would only lead to a moderate and intermediate term improvement in Pathology services, at relatively high cost. It is also clear that it would not be possible to perform all those Pathology functions that ought to be carried out on site in the refurbished structure.

This was not implemented by the trust, as refurbishment was not a cost effective long term solution.

3. The most appropriate way of improving Pathology services is to plan and construct a new Pathology facility on site. This ensures the provision of an essential service and this development would have the potential of attracting technical and medical staff of the highest calibre. There would also be significant opportunities in marketing Pathology services externally as the development, once established, would be exceptionally competitive.

This was not implemented by the trust, for reasons outlined under 2, and demonstrated ability to recruit staff at high calibre.

4. A new development would incorporate the latest technologies in term of automated equipment and robotics, which would significantly reduce day to day costs. This would also enable a full assessment of staff functions and skill mix to be performed.

This was not implemented by the trust, for reasons outlined under 2 and 3.

The refurbishment was completed in April 1997. Refurbishment addressed outstanding Health and Safety issues and enabled the Pathology laboratories to apply for Clinical Pathology Accreditation (CPA). CPA was then considered desirable by the local purchaser and became a requirement from April 1998.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been published by the Pathology Services of the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust, other than the Haemophilia Centre, since 1995. [17790]

Mr. Boateng: We understand from Kent and Canterbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust that Medical and Scientific staff employed by the Trust Pathology Directorate have published in a variety of national and international journals since 1995.

In addition, presentations at national meetings by staff employed within the Pathology Directorate have been published in abstract form. My hon. Friend is advised to contact the Kent Postgraduate Centre at Canterbury for a complete list of current and forthcoming publications.

A full list of the recent publications will also be available in the Trust's Research and Development Annual Report, 1997.

London Strategic Review

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what period for consultation there will be between the publication of the report by the independent advisory panel of the London Strategic Review, and the publication of the Government's response to this report. [17737]

Mr. Milburn: We will be announcing details of the publication in due course.

Worthing and Southlands NHS Trust

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the non-executives serving the Worthing and Southlands National Health Service Trust in September and November, listing their occupations; when he intends to announce re-appointments or appointments; and for what reasons he did not make his decisions earlier. [18119]

Mr. Milburn: The non-executive members of the board in September were as follows:

Member	Occupation
Mr. Geoffrey Withrington (Chair)	Managing Director
Miss Thrine Hely	Project Manager and Business Consultant
Mr. Graham Hill	Former Policeman
Ms Barbara Myers	Media Specialist
Mr. Paul Savage	Retired Chartered Accountant
Professor Michael Whiting	Consultant Chiropodist and University Dean

The terms of office of Mr. Hely, Ms Myers, Mr. Savage and Professor Whiting came to an end on 31 October. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State subsequently wrote on 25 November inviting four candidates to serve on the board for terms of three and four years. All four have now accepted the invitations to serve, as a result of which the new board is as follows:

Member	Occupation
Mr. Geoffrey Withrington (Chair)	Managing Director
Mr. Graham Hill	Former Policeman
Mr. Paul Savage	Retired Chartered Accountant
Mrs. Lindy Stannard	Teacher
Mrs. Nicola Thompson	Financial Services Officer
Professor Michael Whiting	Consultant Chiropodist and University Dean

As a consequence of our commitment to introduce new criteria for appointments and to widen the pool of candidates, some appointments have unfortunately been delayed. We recognise the importance of giving serving and newly appointed board members advance notice of appointments and we expect to be able to achieve this in future appointment rounds.

Anaesthetists

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are proposed in the regulations governing entry to the Specialist Register for Anaesthetists to conform with the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995; and if he will make a statement. [17951]

Mr. Milburn: Entry to the Specialists Register is governed by the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995. There are no specific or separate arrangements for Anaesthetists.

The Government are considering amendments to the Order to introduce greater flexibility in the transitional provisions for assessing doctors for entry to the Specialist Register. The proposed amendments to the Order would apply to all medical specialities.

Leukaemia

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government plan in response to the report from the Independent Advisory Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation concerning the incidence of leukaemia among children whose fathers have been exposed to radiation at work. [17891]

Ms Jowell: The study to consider any possible effects on the health of the offspring of parents occupationally exposed to radiation was funded by the Department of Health and the Health and Safety Executive in response to recommendations from the Government's independent advisory Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE). The findings of the study were referred to COMARE and their statement has been placed in the Library. COMARE agree with the authors that there is no evidence of a link between radiation dose in parents prior to conception and the incidence of leukaemia or non-Hodgkin Lymphoma in their children. COMARE will reserve further comment until the results of a further study, which is investigating the health of all the children born to workers in a large part of the nuclear industry, is completed. The study is expected to be published early next year.

The Government are committed to investigating the causes of leukaemia and will continue the programme of radiation protection research and seek guidance from COMARE about the direction of any additional future research. They will also continue to require employers to keep radiation exposures as low as reasonably practicable.

North and East Devon Health Authority

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve patient care in (a) North and East Devon Health Authority and (b) Northern Devon Healthcare NHS Trust. [18219]

Mr. Milburn: It is the responsibility of North and East Devon Health Authority and local National Health Service trusts, including Northern Devon Healthcare NHS Trust, to work together to ensure that the residents of the health authority receive the best possible patient care. Improving the overall quality of patient care will be an underpinning theme of our plans for replacing the internal market, which we shall be publishing shortly.

New Drugs

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to improve scrutiny of new drugs before their clearance for routine use in the NHS; over what timescale; and if he will make a statement. [18486]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently considering these issues.

NHS Charter

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards developing a new NHS charter. [18484]

Mr. Milburn: We announced on 8 October that Greg Dyke, chairman and chief executive of Pearson Television would lead the work to develop a new National Health Service Charter. Mr. Dyke met with his team of advisers, drawn from health professions, patient representative and user groups, trade unions, the NHS and other organisations on 10 November. The King's Fund has also been commissioned to undertake some evaluation work on the current Patient's Charter. The plan is to publish a draft Charter next summer.

Breast Cancer Treatment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funding is being provided for (i) breast specialist units, (ii) oncologists and (iii) breast care nurses in the NHS. [18521]

Mr. Boateng: Ten million pounds of additional money is being used specifically on breast services. The extra funding is supporting over 300 initiatives around the country to improve the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer. Particular emphasis has been given to supporting projects that give rapid access to diagnostic services through the provision of "one stop" clinics, speeding access to treatment by reducing waiting times and the provision of high quality care delivered in line with published guidance by specialist multi-professional, multi-disciplinary teams.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18114]

Ms Jowell: Department of Health staff are paid within national paybands. The minimum of the lowest payband is £8,000 per annum. This represents an hourly rate of £3.74 in London, where staff work 41 hours a week and £3.65 elsewhere, where staff work 42 hours. The figures for part-time staff are £4.26 and £4.14. The Department holds no record of salaries paid to persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out work, nor is anyone employed under a personal contract.

Terminally Ill Patients

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the average number of terminally ill patients in the United Kingdom; [18676]

(2) what is the average monthly total of patient deaths in hospices; [18678]

(3) how many hospice beds for terminally ill patients are available in the United Kingdom; [18677]

(4) what is the average monthly total of deaths of patients on palliative care. [18679]

Mr. Boateng: The National Council for Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care Services defines as terminally ill those people "with active and progressive disease for which curative treatment is not possible or not appropriate and from which death can reasonably be expected within twelve months".

"Ordinary and day case admissions for England" and "Outpatients and ward attenders for England" contain data on Finished Consultant Episodes and Outpatient Attendances under the main specialty function of Palliative medicine. Copies are available in the Library. These data do not include all terminally ill patients as some of these patients may be receiving treatment in a variety of settings, including the voluntary sector, and information is not collected centrally on the number of patients who are terminally ill at any one time.

There are about 60,000 admissions to hospices and palliative care units in the United Kingdom every year. There are approximately 29,000 deaths in hospice and palliative care units (both voluntary sector and NHS), giving an approximate monthly figure of 2,500 deaths. (Data provided by the Hospice Information Service). Whilst it is possible to give figures for the number of in-patient deaths in the NHS under the care of a palliative care specialist, many other patients who die under the care of the NHS will have received some palliative care. The palliative care approach should inform the care of all NHS patients. The following table shows the number of deaths for patients receiving treatment from a consultant in palliative medicine in the NHS.

Department of Health, Hospital Episode Statistics (HES).

According to information from the Hospice Information Service there were 3,134 hospice and palliative care beds (both NHS and voluntary sector) in the United Kingdom in January 1997, of these 595 were in NHS managed units.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average NHS waiting time for a wheelchair; how many applications for wheelchairs have been made for each NHS trust in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [18304]

Mr. Boateng: Information on applications or waiting times for wheelchairs is not collected centrally. Information on the number of wheelchairs issued by individual health authority Wheelchair Services is available in "Wheelchairs and artificial limbs—England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what money is allocated in the Standard Spending Assessment for personal social services for 1998–99. [18866]

Mr. Dobson: £7,814.651 million will be distributed by Personal Social Services Standard Spending Assessments in 1998–99, compared with £7,392.117 million in 1997–98. Total Standard Spending on Social Services (including specific and special grants) will be £8,292.969 million in 1998–99, compared with £7,846.030 million in 1997–98 plans; an increase of 5.7 per cent.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific and special grants and what capital resources he is making available to local authorities for personal social services in 1998–99. [18867]

Mr. Dobson: The information is as follows:

	£ million
Specific grants will be available in 1998–99 for:
AIDS and HIV services	13.7
Services for alcohol and drugs misusers	2.5
Mental illness services	73.3
Social services training	35.5
A special grant will be available in 1998–99 for:
Community care services	350
Services for unaccompanied asylum seeking children	3

The capital grant for secure accommodation for young people will be £8.2 million in 1998–99.

Annual capital guidelines of £45 million will be notified to local authorities. Supplementary credit approvals will again be available for mental illness services (£11.6 million) and AIDS/HIV services (£3.1 million).

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the special transitional grant in 1998–99. [18868]

Mr. Dobson: There will be a Special Transitional Grant of £350 million in 1998–99 for community care services. Unlike previous years, councils will not be required to spend 85 per cent. of the grant in the independent sector. It will, however, have a condition requiring local authorities to work closely with the National Health Service and to spend a part of the money on preventing people being unnecessarily in hospital, or being unnecessarily in residential or nursing home care following discharge from hospital.

Departmental Report

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update table 2.1 of his departmental report. [18626]

Mr. Milburn: Table 2.1 will be updated in the next Department of Health Departmental Report. Such information as is currently available will be placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Independent Tribunal Service (Wales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current waiting period for a hearing with the independent tribunal service in Wales; what plans she has to reduce waiting times; and if she will make a statement. [13765]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Appeals to Social Security Tribunals in Wales which were cleared in the first quarter of this year took on average 28.7 weeks to clear in the first quarter of this year took an average 28.7 weeks to clear. The comparable figure for Great Britain is 29.9 weeks.

We are determined to reduce the current delays and complexity in the appeals system. On 9 July we introduced the Social Security Bill, which paves the way for the creation of an active modern Social Security system. The Bill includes several measures which will enable us to provide a quicker, simpler and more efficient appeals service for customers.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take personal responsibility for the administration of the appeals system, set and publish demanding targets to shorten the time it takes for appeals to be heard and report on the results.

Supported Housing

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to her answer of 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 456, what assessment she has made of partial capacity benefit as a means of assisting disabled people to gain employment; [16359]

(2) pursuant to her oral Answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) of 17 November 1997, Official Report, columns 2–3, what assessment her Department has made of the role which a partial capacity benefit could play in the New Deal for disabled people. [17540]

Mr. Denham: The Government's view is that work is the best form of welfare. Many people with disabilities or long-term health problems want to do some work and the aim of the Welfare to Work programme for sick and disabled people is to allow them to do so. We wish to develop ways to give sick and disabled people the advice, help and support they need to achieve their aspirations and to move towards financial independence.

As part of our welfare to work proposals, which will improve opportunities for sick and disabled people, we are also considering what changes might be made to the benefit system to improve work incentives and reduce disincentives.

Benefits

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social (1) what measures she proposes to take account of the gap between recent rises in benefits and the current rate of inflation; and what will be the source of any increase in funding; [16725]

(2) what will be the impact on Government spending plans of the increase in her Department's expenditure arising from increases in inflation since 1 May. [16729]

Mr. Field: I refer to the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 247.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will set out the new rates of benefit proposed from April 1998. [19161]

Ms Harman: I have reviewed Social Security benefits in accordance with section 150 of the Administration Act 1992. My proposals for the revised rates of benefit are set out in the schedule. The new rates will take effect in week beginning 6 April 1998.

The statutory instruments to implement the changes will be laid before both Houses for debate in the new year.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland proposes to introduce similar changes for Northern Ireland.

National Insurance benefits will be uprated in line with the annual increase in the Retail Prices Index (RPI) up to September, which this year is 3.6 per cent.

Jobseeker's allowance and income-related benefits will generally rise by 2.4 per cent. in line with the increase in the Rossi index. The Rossi index is RPI less certain housing costs.

The total cost of uprating for 1998–99 will be £2.45 billion.

The key points of my review are as follows:

Retirement pension

The basic rate of retirement pension will be increased by £2.25 to £64.70 for a single person and by £3.60 to £103.40 for couples.

Child benefit

The rate for the eldest child will be increased to £11.45. The rate for each subsequent child is increased to £9.30.

Income support

The couple rate of income support for those aged 80 and over will increase by £2.75 to £117.90.

War pensions

War pensions will be increased in line with the RPI.

Earnings top-up

Benefit rates for the pilot Earnings top-up scheme will be increased by the Rossi index.

Benefits for lone parents

The higher rate for lone parents in child benefit will be £17.10, and the higher rates of family premium in income support and jobseeker's allowance will be £15.75 and in housing benefit and council tax benefit will be £22.05.

Non-dependent deductions

New rates of deduction in respect of non-dependents living in the household are shown in the schedule. The rate of deduction for housing benefit, income support and income based jobseeker's allowance in respect of those not in work, or with gross income below £78, remains unchanged.

Protecting benefits from inflation underlines our commitment to the elderly and the most vulnerable in society.

War Pensions

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many United Kingdom civilians employed in war-related work have received war pensions for asbestosis since 1967; and what factors led to their award. [16714]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It is unlikely that any award of War Pension in respect of asbestosis has been made to any civilian. However, a civilian may be entitled to a war pension if he was disabled as a result of his work as a member of a civil defence organisation or under the other provisions of the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme.

Broadly, under those other provisions, an award of war pension may be made where disablement is caused either by enemy action or by action taken to combat or repel an imagined attack by the enemy during World War Two.

Compensation might be available under the industrial injuries scheme, via an employer's liability insurance or, for an ex-civilian employee of the Ministry of Defence, from that Department.

Benefit Reviews

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the conclusions of the Department's benefit by benefit review will be taken into account in (a) the Department's study of public expenditure and (b) the Treasury's review of tax and benefits. [17037]

Mr. Field: The Government are committed to a far-reaching overhaul of the Social Security system that will modernise the welfare state and prepare it to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century.

My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury announced the Comprehensive Spending Review being co-ordinated across Government on 11 June 1997, Official Report, column 1143–57. The Department of Social Security's review will be based on our clear objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency and strengthening community and family life. It will also consider how best the system can be reformed to contribute to the achievement of Government objectives including the need for restraint in public expenditure. The Review is expected to take about a year to complete.

The review of tax and benefits, headed by Martin Taylor, Chief Executive of Barclays Bank, involves officials from the Treasury, the Department for Education and Employment, the Inland Revenue and the DSS. There has been close liaison between the tax benefit review and the DSS Comprehensive Spending Review.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Minister is responsible for co-ordinating her Department's benefit by benefit review; and when, and by what means, she expects its conclusions to be reported to the House. [18810]

Mr. Field: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to him on 20 November 1997, Official Report, columns 406–07.

Income Support

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the extra money for pensioners on income support will be distributed. [18738]

Mr. Denham: Precise operational arrangements will depend on the Regulations currently being drafted. Regulations will be laid as soon as possible.

"The Law Relating to Social Security"

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when "The Law Relating to Social Security" was withdrawn from circulation; and what are her plans for replacing it. [18833]

Mr. Field: "The Law Relating to Social Security", or "Blue Books", is still available from the Stationery Office and bookshops. Three amendments have been issued this year.

Ex-servicemen (Hearing Review)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received on her review of the Government's decision on the aging effect of bilateral sensori-neural hearing in respect of former members of the armed forces. [18839]

Mr. Denham: We have received 36 representations from hon. Members and 46 from national organisations and members of the public.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by her Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18111]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

1. Hourly rates include allowances and includes staff on payroll as at 30 September 1997 in their current substantive grade.
2. Except for staff in the Senior Civil Service the department does not employ staff on a personnel contractual basis. Staff shown in column four are casual staff and those on fixed term appointments.

New Deal

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the allocations in each of the next four years for programmes under the New Deal for Disabled People. [18809]

Mr. Denham: No decisions have been taken on the allocation, in each of the next four years, of the £195 million set aside for the New Deal for Sick and Disabled People.

Wisconsin Project

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 538, (1) if she will make a statement on her discussions with an official from Wisconsin on matters relating to (a) welfare and (b) compulsion for lone parents seeking work; [18673]

(2) if she will publish the agenda and minutes to her meeting with an official from Wisconsin about welfare policy. [18674]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the meetings with officials from Wisconsin that she had during the summer. [15755]

Mr. Keith Bradley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had one meeting with an official from Wisconsin who was in this country for a Conference at which both were due to speak. There was no formal agenda. The official concerned described the various changes made to the welfare system in Wisconsin over the past several years, gave an informal assessment of their effect and described what she saw as the main lessons to be drawn about the process of implementing major change in this area.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will ensure the Child Support Agency does not reply to an hon. Member's inquiry relating to a constituent's case with a copy of its response to the constituent. [18225]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are determined to ensure that the Child Support Agency provides an efficient and effective service to all its customers, including their representatives.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 1 December 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about replies from the Child Support Agency to inquiries from Members of Parliament.

The Agency's policy in dealing with an inquiry from an MP is to provide a full, up-to-date and accurate reply to the issues raised. Each case is treated individually and the Agency aims to answer correspondence in line with the Departmental target of responding within 20 days.

In the course of dealing with children's maintenance, correspondence between the Agency and customers is to be expected, and indeed necessary. Where this coincides with an inquiry from the customer's MP on their behalf, in order to be as helpful as possible and to ensure that the full facts are available, the Agency may copy relevant letters to the MP particularly where an identical issue has been raised by the constituent both directly with the Agency and through their MP. This has proved to be a useful, cost-effective and efficient mechanism, which helps avoid any misunderstanding and ensures that the MP is fully aware of what has been said to their constituent.

I am very conscious that there are still far too many justified complaints about the standards of basic customer contact and the service we provide. Over the next few years, I am committed to bringing high quality levels of performance to every part of our operation as a matter of routine, thereby reducing the number of complaints received and enhancing the public perception of the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she has completed her review of national insurance contributions of 1998–99. [19162]

Ms Harman: I have completed the annual review under Section 141 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. My proposals will take effect from 6 April 1998.

Employers and employees

In line with the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, the lower earnings limit for Class 1 contributions is to be raised to £64 a week. It is set at the level of the Basic Retirement Pension rate for a single person from April 1998, rounded down to the nearest pound.

The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £485 a week which is slightly less than $7\frac{1}{2}$ times the new basic pension rates as provided by the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992. These new earnings limit will replace the current ones of £62 and £465 respectively.

Employees whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit will continue to pay an initial contribution of 2 per cent. of that limit and standard rate contributions of 10 per cent. on that portion of their earnings which exceeds the lower but not the upper earnings limit.

The contribution rates for employers will remain unchanged at 3 per cent., 5 per cent., 7 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively, as will the earnings brackets for the three lower rates.

Not contracted out employees and their employers

Neither employees nor employers will have to pay any contributions if earnings are less than £64 a week. Employees whose earnings do not exceed £465 (the former upper earnings limit) will pay 16 pence a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £2 of their weekly earnings will be subject to the 2 per cent. rate rather than 10 per cent. For employees with earnings above £465 the maximum possible increase will be £1.84 a week.

There will be no change for employers where earnings are £64 or more a week.

Contracted-out employees and their employers

Employees whose earnings do not exceed £465 (the former upper earnings limit) will pay 13 pence a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £2 of their weekly earnings will be subject to the 2 per cent. rate rather than 8.4 per cent. For employees with earnings above £465 the maximum possible increase will be £1.55 a week.

Employers who operate a Contracted-Out Salary Related Scheme (COSR)

Where earnings are between £64 and £465 employers will pay 6 pence a week extra. This is due to the increase in the lower earnings limit which means that a further £2 of earnings is not subject to the contracted-out rebate. Where earnings are more than £465 a week employers will pay £54 pence a week less. This is mainly due to the increase in the upper earnings limit which means that a further £20 of earnings is subject to the contracted-out rebate.

Employers who operate a Contracted-Out Money Purchase Scheme (COMP)

Where earnings are between £64 and £465 employers will pay 3 pence a week extra. This is due to the increase in the lower earnings limit which means that a further £2 of earnings is not subject to the contracted-out rebate. Where earnings are more than £465 a week employers will pay 27 pence a week less. This is mainly due to the increase in the upper earnings limit which means that a further £20 of earnings is subject to the contracted-out rebate.

Self-employed people

The flat rate Class 2 contribution will be raised by 20p to £6.35 a week.

Self-employed people with profits less than a specified amount, known as the small earnings exception limit, can apply to be excepted from paying Class 2 contributions. This limit will be raised by £110 to £3,590.

There will be no change to the rate of Class 4 contributions which will remain at 6 per cent. The annual limits of profits between which Class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £7,310 and £25,220 from £7,010 and £24,180 respectively.

Self-employed people who pay only Class 2 contributions will pay an extra £10.40 a year in 1998–99.

For people with profits between £7,310 and £24,180 (the former upper profits limit) Class 4 contributions will be reduced by £18 a year assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the new upper profits limit the annual charge for Class 4 contributions will be £44.80 higher.

Class 3 (Voluntary) contributions

The rate of Class 3 contributions will be raised by 20p to £6.25 a week.

National health service allocation

The allocation to the National Health Service is unchanged at 1.05 per cent. from employees and 0.9 per cent. from employers.

Treasury grant

Although benefit expenditure from the National Insurance Fund will broadly match income, I need to ensure that the Fund maintains a prudent working balance throughout the coming year and, in accordance with Section 2(2) of the Social Security Act 1993, I propose to do so by means of a grant from the Treasury. I estimate that the maximum grant required will be approximately £800 million.

I shall by laying a Draft Order before Parliament together with a report by the Government Actuary describing the effects of my proposals.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Service

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the estimated percentage change in the Probation Service budget in England and Wales for the next two financial years; and if he will make a statement. [18635]

Ms Quin: We are still considering probation service revenue grant for 1998–99 but expect to make an announcement very shortly. The level of funding in 1999–2000 and beyond will be considered in the comprehensive spending review.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average annual case load per probation officer for the last two years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [18638]

Ms Quin: The average annual caseload per officer for 1995 and 1996, excluding community service, was 25 and 27.7 respectively.

These figures are given in table 8.13 of the Probation Statistics England and Wales 1996, a copy of which is in the Library.

Community Penalties

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has undertaken on the degree of knowledge and awareness among the judiciary about community penalties and their effectiveness; and if he will make a statement. [18636]

Ms Quin: Home Office Research Study 144, "Measuring the Satisfaction of Courts with the Probation Service", published in 1995, reported that 70 per cent. of the judges questioned thought that the probation service kept them very well or quite well informed about its work; 37 per cent. considered the quality of supervision for probation orders to be very good or quite good; and 45 per cent. were very satisfied or quite satisfied with current arrangements for enforcing probation orders.

Further relevant information will feature next year in the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate's evaluation of the community sentence demonstration projects in Teesside and Shropshire.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) have notified the police in relation to the Sex Offender Register and (b) are yet to notify the police in relation to the register for the last date for which figures are available. [18639]

Mr. Michael: On 2 October, the latest date for which figures are available, 2,170 sex offenders had notified the police of their details in accordance with the Sex Offenders Act 1997.

Police records indicate a further 567 sex offenders who had yet to notify the police of their details by this date. These include both those who are within the 14 day period allowed for registration and those who have gone beyond this period.

A survey of registrations over the first three months of the operation of the sex offender register is currently being carried out. The figures will be available in mid December.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the measures under consideration for the forthcoming Crime and Disorder Bill for extended supervision of sex offenders will extend to all serious sex offenders. [18217]

Ms Quin: We envisage that the courts should have the power to require sex offenders to undergo an extended period of supervision, of up to ten years, to be added to whatever sentence the court would currently impose. The power will apply to all sex offenders who receive custodial sentences, including those imprisoned for less than 12 months, who are not liable, under the current law, to supervision following release. It will not, however, apply retrospectively to offenders already sentenced under the current or previous law.

Radar Speed Trap Detectors

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the use of radar devices to avoid police radar speed traps. [18140]

Mr. Michael: The use of such detector devices without a licence is an offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 and successful prosecutions have been taken out by the police against motorists who have used them. My Department has carried out tests which showed such devices to be largely unreliable and ineffective but we have asked the Association of Chief Police Officers' Traffic Committee to keep us informed of any significant increase in the use of these devices and of any difficulties which forces experience. In addition, where an advertisement for such a device is brought to my department's attention we lodge the papers with the Advertising Standards Authority so that the Authority can ensure that the advertising copy makes the legal position clear.

CS Gas

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have suspended their use of CS gas sprays in the last six months; and if he will make a statement. [18344]

Mr. Michael: None in England and Wales, so far as I am aware. Trials of CS sprays by Strathclyde Police and Tayside Police were suspended between 2 and 20 October but have since resumed. Responsibility for deciding whether to issue CS spray equipment rests with individual chief police officers.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18890]

Mr. Straw: Since 1 May, my Department has made 234 announcements by press release, including ones relating to public speeches. All major announcements are made to Parliament first when it is sitting. Such recent major announcements include a statement on Home Detention Orders, the White Paper on Youth Justice and the Bill to incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into British Law. Press briefings are usually held to give further explanation to announcements, after they have been made public.

Vivisection

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to alter the law relating to vivisection; and if he will make a statement. [18681]

Mr. George Howarth: An Order will be made shortly to add "pigs, if genetically modified" and "sheep, if genetically modified" to Schedule 2 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Following the recommendation made by the Animal Procedures Committee in its interim report on the review of the operation of the 1986 Act, the same Order will add ferrets and gerbils to Schedule 2. This will take effect from 1 January 1999.

An Order will also be made under the European Communities Act 1972 to make minor amendments to introduce into the face of the 1986 Act some controls which are currently exercised through administrative measures (such as standard licence conditions).

Perjury

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for a new offence of aggravated perjury to apply where persons have brought an action in the courts and have lied on oath. [18532]

Mr. Michael: We see no need to bring forward proposals for a new offence of aggravated perjury. The law enables those who have brought a civil action and are then found to have lied to be liable to prosecution and conviction for perjury, which could result in a prison sentence for up to seven years. In addition, a person who intentionally swears a false affidavit could be charged with perverting the course of justice. As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 16 July 1997, Official Report, column 181, the serious common law offence of perverting, or attempting to pervert, the course of justice is committed where a person acts or embarks upon a course of conduct which has a tendency to, and is intended to, pervert the course of justice. It is a matter for the prosecuting authorities to decide in any such case whether there is sufficient evidence to mount a prosecution and whether it would be in the public interest. As a common law offence, the maximum penalty for perverting the course of justice is at large, which means that the court would be free to impose any penalty that they considered appropriate.

Hand Guns

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) timetable and (b) guidelines exist for compensating the owners of unusual hand guns; and what arrangements exist for paying interest on delayed compensation. [18619]

Mr. Michael: Those handguns not listed under options A and B of the Firearms Compensation Scheme will have been claimed for under option C, which required owners to attach evidence of value. These particular claims, because they require individual assessment of the evidence provided, are being deferred to allow faster processing of claims submitted under the first two options. Many option C claimants have also claimed under other options and so will receive a part payment of their claim first. It is expected that most, if not all, option C claims will have been dealt with by the end of 1998. This position is in accordance with our earlier expectations and was made clear in the information sent out to potential claimants in June. There are no arrangements in the Scheme for the payment of interest on claims.

Safer Cities Projects

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds (a) were allocated to safer cities projects in each year since their commencement and (b) will be allocated to safer cities projects in the year 1998–99. [18600]

Mr. Michael: (a) the Grants paid to safer cities projects in each year from 1988–89 to 1997–98 are listed[1]. These figures include the payments made by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to the Phase 2 English projects between 1994–95 to 1997–98.

	£ million
1989–90	2.403
1990–91	4.569
1991–92	5.178
1992–93	5.271
1993–94	3.738
1994–95	2.168
1995–96	3.848
1996–97	3.124

At the beginning of this financial year, the Home Office also paid an exit grant of £40,000 to the one Welsh project which closed on 31 March 1997.

(b) All the remaining safer cities projects are due to close by 31 March 1998 and there is no provision for further projects in 1998–99. However, £60,000 has been set aside by the Home Office for exit grant payments to the two remaining Welsh safer cities projects on condition that they have good exit strategies.

[1] These figures do not include the management fees for the projects as this information is commercial-in-confidence and cannot be disclosed.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries (Wheelchair Access)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of access for disabled people in wheelchairs to the museums and galleries for which he has responsibility. [17169]

Mr. Fisher: Access to the museums and galleries for which this Department is responsible is generally good, though some constraints are imposed by the historic buildings in which the collections are located. Many already allow full access to wheelchair users, and in most other cases nearly all of the collections are accessible. Among the facilities provided are: designated parking, ramps, lifts, specially designed lavatories, low-height telephones and low-height labelling of exhibits. Many institutions also have wheelchairs available for use and provide special training for staff.

However, there is no room for complacency. Recent advances in information technology have been used to provide visual displays where access to the actual display itself is not available. Where new building is underway, special attention is being paid to the needs of wheelchair users with the aid of expert advice.

My Department is carrying out a review of access to the national museums and galleries and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be reporting shortly on the progress of that review.

PRIME MINISTER

UN Security Council

18. Mr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the leaders of other member states of the European Union to discuss matters relating to the membership, structure and functions of the Security Council of the United Nations. [17516]

The Prime Minister: I have not discussed this issue with my European Union counterparts. However, there are regular discussions between officials at the United Nations in New York and in Capitals.

SCOTLAND

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public appointments he has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16777]

Mr. Dewar: Since 1 May I have made 105 Public Appointments. Of these, 77 or 73 per cent. receive remuneration.

The information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has provided information for all departments in an aggregated form.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals or organisations, corporate or otherwise, he and his ministers have met in their official capacity since 21 May 1997 who have or had donated £5,000 or more to the Labour Party in the last two years; and if he will list them. [17729]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 25 November 1997]: The Labour Party's policy on disclosure is to declare the identity of any individual or organisation which, in the course of one calendar year, makes donations in the aggregate in excess of £5,000. Donations made during 1997 will be declared in 1998. Therefore, the following information refers to qualifying donors in 1995 and 1996.

Scottish Office Ministers have met representatives of Unison, the Mirror Group, the Daily Record, the AEEU, the FBU, the GMB and the T&GWU. Ministers have also had meetings with the Paymaster General.

Maternity Services

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of the impact on obstetric services in South Lanarkshire and surrounding areas of the closure of Bellshill and Rutherglen maternity hospitals. [18151]

Mr. Galbraith: In considering the closure of Bellshill and Rutherglen maternity hospitals, Ministers have taken fully into account the impact on obstetric services in South Lanarkshire. I am confident that both Greater Glasgow and Lanarkshire Health Board's Maternity Strategies will greatly improve the maternity services available to the mothers and babies in these areas.

Transport Policy

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if paragraph 9 of his Department's consultation document, "Developing an Integrated Transport Policy", represents Government policy. [18195]

Mr. Chisholm: The definitive statements of Government transport policy for Scotland will be contained in the Government's White Papers on Integrated Transport for Scotland, and for the UK generally, that we intend to publish in Spring 1998. In developing that policy we are currently considering the many responses to the key broad issues set out in the consultation document.

Asbestosis

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were diagnosed to be suffering from asbestosis in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996 broken down by (i) parliamentary constituency and (ii) local authority unit. [18156]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is not available in the form requested by the hon. Member. However, it is possible to provide figures for the numbers of patients discharged from hospital, whose diagnosis includes asbestosis, for the year 1995, broken down by Health Board of residence, as follows:

Health Board of residence	Patients discharged in 1995
Argyll and Clyde	6
Ayrshire and Arran	3
Borders	1
Dumfries and Galloway	0
Fife	9
Forth Valley	4
Grampian	3
Greater Glasgow	43
Highland	4
Lanarkshire	3
Lothian	12
Orkney	1
Tayside	1
Western Isles	0
Scotland	90

These figures include both newly diagnosed and longer term cases of asbestosis. The equivalent information for 1996 is not yet available.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at what (a) net and (b) gross parental or household income level Scottish students will be required to pay the full £1,000 per annum tuition fee. [17850]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The rates for student awards and loans, and the associated contribution scales, for academic year 1998–99 have not yet been determined.

Had tuition fee contributions been in effect in academic year 1997–98, eligible Scottish domiciled students with a net parental income after allowable deductions of about £26,500 would have been assessed as due to pay the full £1,000; the comparable figure for a spouse contribution would have been in the region of £22,250.

It is not practicable to give individual figures for the equivalent gross income since this would depend on the circumstances of the family concerned though, typically, the figure would be about £35,000 per annum.

Means-testing will be carried out in exactly the same way north and south of the border, using the same sealer, as now.

Smoking

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount spent on smoking cessation initiatives for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 devoted to (i) visits by primary health care professionals and (ii) prescriptions; and what are the estimated figures for 1997–98. [17854]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Information on the amount of expenditure specifically on smoking cessation initiatives devoted to visits by primary health care professionals is not held centrally. Similarly, there is no information available on the amount spent on prescriptions in respect of smoking cessation. In terms of Schedule 10 of the NHS (General Medical Services) (Scotland) Regulations 1995, substances such as nicotine replacements cannot be supplied by general medical practitioners or prescribed for supply under pharmaceutical services. All such products have to be purchased over the counter.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent research his Department has evaluated on (a) the total cost to the National Health Service in Scotland of treating people with smoking-related diseases and (b) the prevalence of smoking-related diseases among the Scottish population broken down by (i) sex, (ii) age, (iii) socio-economic class and (iv) health board area. [17856]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The most recent national research study on smoking related diseases was the 1991 Report, "The Smoking Epidemic—Counting the Cost in Scotland", a publication produced jointly by HEBS and ASH (Scotland). It estimated that the costs to the NHS in Scotland were approximately £69 million per year. There was no breakdown of this figure by sex, age, socio-economic class or health board area. The prevalence of all diseases in Scotland is monitored by routine ongoing surveillance rather than by specific research projects.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount spent on smoking cessation initiatives for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and what are the projected figures for 1997–98, broken down by health board. [17853]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The information requested is detailed in the tables below. This includes expenditure by the Health Education Board for Scotland (HEBS) and the annual grant provided by The Scottish Office to ASH (Scotland) for the same period.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current estimated cost to the NHS in Scotland of treating people with smoking-related diseases (a) in total and (b) by health board. [17855]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 1 December 1997]: There is no simple classification of diseases into those which are smoking related and those which are not. Smoking is only one of several causative factors in many diseases. In 1991, the ASH (Scotland)/HEBS publication "The Smoking Epidemic—Counting the Cost in Scotland" estimated that the NHS costs of treating smoking related diseases were of the order of £69 million per year. A more recent study, commissioned by ASH (Scotland) in 1994, estimated an annual cost to the NHS in Scotland of £83 million. No information is held centrally on the breakdown of these figures by health board area.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18107]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Based on a net working week of 37 hours the information is (a) £3.69 in respect of Administrative Assistants and equivalent grades (although there are two individuals—a Receptionist and a Messenger who are paid £3.37 and £3.63 respectively), (b) £3.69 in respect of Administrative Assistants and equivalent grades, (c) £3.69 in respect of Administrative Assistants and equivalent grades employed on a short-term casual basis and (d) this information is not available.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his plans for allocating total expenditure within his responsibility for 1998–99 including details of the 1998–99 Local Government Finance Settlement. [19298]

Mr. Dewar: The attached table outlines my plans for allocating the total expenditure for Scotland within my responsibility.

I have been able to improve significantly on the plans for the local government settlement. Following extensive consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, I propose to increase the level of Government Supported Expenditure by 2.2 per cent.—over £133 million—and the level of Aggregate External Finance by 0.6 per cent., or £33.1 million, in both cases after adjustments for the transfer of responsibility for funding nursery education and the additional resources provided in the current year for policing the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

Next year, Scottish local authorities will receive Government support through AEF of nearly £5.3 billion, £91 million greater than the published plans, which represents over 37 per cent. of the total Scottish Office budget. On top of that local authorities will receive a further £75 million of support to fund pre-school education, £9 million more than the published plans, £7 million for Early Intervention and £1 million for Alternatives to Exclusion, plus £325 million of non-housing capital allocations.

I am also announcing today provisional capping principles which will allow local authorities to increase their capped expenditure by 3.4 per cent. or £191 million, almost £150 million more than the inherited plans. The proposed regime is tiered to allow councils spending close to GAE a greater increase in expenditure than those spending well above GAE.

Government Supported Expenditure

I propose that Government Supported Expenditure (GSE) for 1998–99 should be set at £6,223.9 million. This compares with previous plans of £6,132 million.

Grant Aided Expenditure

Local authorities will incur an estimated £728.8 million on loan and leasing charges in 1998–99. After deducting this sum from the GSE total, £5,495.1 million is available for allocation as Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE). This GAE amount is 3.7 per cent. or almost £198 million higher than that for the current year (after making the above adjustments). I shall announce GAE figures for individual local authorities as soon as possible.

Aggregate External Finance

I further propose that Government support for local authority current expenditure-that is, Aggregte External Finance (AEF) which consists of Revenue Support Grant, Specific Grants and Non-Domestic Rate Income—for 1998–99 should be set at £5,271.3 million, which compares with the previous plans of £5,180 million. Proposals for the distribution of AEF to individual local authorities are likely to be isued to councils before Christmas. I announced yesterday that the National Non-Domestic Rate poundage would be 47.4p, the same as in England.

Capping

I have the power to cap a local authority either where I consider that its planned expenditure is excessive or where there is an excessive increase in its planned expenditure as compared with the previous year. My provisional capping principles for 1998–99 are:

any increase in budget between 1997–98 and 1998–99 of more than 1.75 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the council's GAE for 1998–99;

any increase in budget between 1997–98 and 1998–99 of more than 1.25 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is more than 2 per cent. above the council's GAE for 1998–99;

any increase in budget between 1997–98 and 1998–99 of more than 0.75 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is more than 4 per cent. above the council's GAE for 1998–99;

any budget for 1998–99 more than 12.5 per cent. above the Council's GAE assessment (as admusted if necessary) will be excessive save that if that budget is no greater than the budget set by that council for 1997–98, the council will not be capped.

[1] Reflects the repayment of loans to the National Loans Fund which will fall due in 1997–98 following the delayed disposal of Scottish Homes portfolio of loans to housing associations.

[2] Scottish Homes' repayment of debt from capital receipts.

[3] From 1998–99 departments will take on responsibility from PRS for the buildings which the government owns and occupies. From 1998–99 they will no longer pay rents to PRS, but will pay capital charges on the value of the property. This has resulted in a reduction in planned expenditure for 1998–99 of some £10 million on the LOPS programme, relating to the Scottish Courts estate, and £10 million on Other Public Services, relating to the Scottish Office, GRO(S) and SRO estates.

[4] Includes Housing Support Grant of £15 million/5 million.

[5] AEF comprises revenue support grant, income from non-domestic rates (NDRI) and grants to local authorities for specific purposes.

[6] Specific grants include–police £334 million/£339 million, urban £45 million/£43 million, mental illness £13 million/£13 million.

[7] Includes Caledonian MacBrayne and Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

[8] As a result of rounding, the figures may not sum to the totals shown.

[9] The Scottish Block comprises all expenditure within the responsibility of the Secretary of State with the exception of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and nationalised industries' external financing requirements.

Renewables Obligation

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about a third round under the Scottish Renewables Obligation. [19299]

Mr. Wilson: A consultation exercise held earlier this year by my Department showed broad support for the Government's approach to developing renewable energy. I am therefore proposing a third order under the SRO to oblige ScottishPower and Hydro-Electric to secure the availability of more capacity from new renewable sources in Scotland.

The first two orders led to 56 renewables projects with a combined capacity of 189MW securing contracts with ScottishPower and Hydro-Electric, although many of these have not yet been commissioned. I am very keen to see SR03, which will come into force in early 1999, again attracting technically sound yet innovative projects which must be extremely competitive on price, with the downward trend in prices seen under SRO2 being continued in so far as that is possible.

Capacity will be made available to those technologies that are able to demonstrate these qualities. On that basis I am minded that the third order should cover wind, small hydro, waste to energy and biomass projects, and that it should also make limited capacity available to small wind schemes and wave power projects. I hope that community-based projects will take advantage of this opportunity.

The Government is committed to a new and strong drive to promote renewables and a review of renewable energy policy is underway. I intend that the SRO3, which represents the culmination of the current programme in Scotland, should be for around 110–120MW in capacity, i.e. about the same size as SR02.

I am aware of certain concerns about the local environmental impact of particular renewables projects, and for that reason I expect prospective developers to consult interested parties, including local planning authorities, at an early stage. Evidence of having done so will be required as part of the application process. Developers are further reminded that the award of a contract under the SRO in no way implies preferential treatment when it comes to the planning process and planning permission will still have to be sought in the usual way.

My Department will shortly be writing to ScottishPower and Hydro-Electric setting out these proposals in more detail and will also issue detailed guidance to prospective applicants under SR03. Developers who are interested in bidding are invited to register their interest with my Department as soon as possible.

Coastal Waters (Radioactive Material)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss the report of the National Radiological Protection Board Assessment of the Radiological Implications of Dumping in Beaufort's Dyke and Other Coastal Waters from the 1950s with representatives of (a) the Clyde Fishermen's Association and (b) other fishermen's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [18640]

Mr. Chisholm: The National Radiological Protection Board report concludes that any doses of radiation from the past dumpings identified would be well within the International Commission on Radiological Protections's recommended limit and that further additional monitoring is not required. However, the Board recommended that advice should be drawn up against the possibility, which it acknowledges is remote, that two anti-static devices dumped off Arran in 1958 might be trawled up and washed ashore. My officials will be in touch with the fishermen's association once that advice has been finalised.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Contaminated Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the estimated acreage of contaminated land in England; and what proposals his Department has to encourage the reclamation of contaminated land. [18143]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency has estimated that there may be some 300,000 hectares of land across Britain as a whole which is affected, to some extent, by industrial or natural contamination. However, much of this contamination will be relatively minor. In only a small proportion of cases will there be a need for detailed investigation, assessment or remediation either with respect to current risks to human health and the environment or to facilitate the redevelopment of the land.

A range of policy programmes are already in place to encourage the reclamation of derelict and potentially contaminated land. My Department, together with other public bodies including the Environment Agency and the research councils, funds research and development for site investigation and remediation techniques, as well as publishing technical advice and guidance. Planning policies and guidance seek directly to encourage the recycling of brown-field sites rather than permitting the development of greenfield sites, and also seek to ensure that contamination risks are properly dealt with as particular developments are taken forward. Significant sums of public investment in the regeneration of vacant, derelict and contaminated land are committed each year by the statutory regeneration agencies, such as English Partnerships.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment will be announcing shortly proposals for the implementation of legislation providing a statutory regime for the identification and remediation of contaminated land which is not necessarily subject to development proposals, but which is currently causing significant risks to human health or the environment.

Worthing By-pass

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the plans for a Worthing by-pass; and if he will make a statement. [18144]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently undertaking a strategic Roads Review. It is intended that the output of the Roads Review should include, firstly, a short-term investment programme; and, secondly, a programme of studies to look at the remaining problems—from which we will develop the medium and longer-term investment programme.

Once the Roads Review has been completed, we expect to be able to set out what future work is needed on plans for the A27 at Worthing.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the original projected costs to public funds and what are the latest forecast outturn costs of the Jubilee Line extension. [18221]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At project commencement in October 1993, the estimated overall cost of the Jubilee Line extension was £2.1 billion at cash outturn prices. This included £1.9 billion ring-fenced cost, funded by Government grant, the rest being costs for associated works, funded by the London Transport core business. A further £100 million in ring-fenced grant was later added to mitigate the rise in costs following the New Austrian Tunnelling Method collapse on the Heathrow Express project in 1994. London Transport now estimate outturn cost at £2.76 billion. Of this total, £2 billion will be directly funded by ring-fenced grant; the remainder will be met from London Transport's core resources (which include substantial Government grant) and from private sector contributions of over £400 million, over £100 million of which have already been received.

South Yorkshire Supertram

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were (a) the projected and (b) the outturn costs to public funds of the South Yorkshire Supertram. [18220]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The South Yorkshire Supertram scheme was forecast to cost £240.610 million in outturn prices. The final outturn expenditure reported by South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Executive in March 1997 was £240.609 million.

Fatal Accidents at Work

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what long-term measures his Department (a) has in place and (b) proposes to reduce the number of fatal accidents at work; and if he will make a statement. [18574]

Angela Eagle: The Government share my hon. Friend's concern about the increase in the number of fatal accidents at work in 1996–97. In July, I approved the Health and Safety Commission's Plan of Work for 1997–98. The Plan of Work sets out the actions that the Commission and the Health and Safety Executive have agreed with me should be taken now and in the longer term to reduce fatalities, and more generally to promote health and safety in the workplace.

Nuclear Sites (Emergency Plans)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive on nuclear site emergency plan extendability; and if he will make a statement. [18367]

Angela Eagle: Yes. A copy of the report of the review, commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and undertaken by WS Atkins Science and Technology on the extendibility of local authority plans for responding to nuclear emergencies, will be placed in the Library.

Extendibility was one of many issues considered by the Hinkley Point C Public Inquiry. In response to the recommendations, HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate published in 1990 a quantified scenario against which extended plans could be drawn up and tested. The scenario was last used to drive the Heysham Level 2 emergency exercise "Madonna" in September 1997. The review report was part of a process of evaluation which, together with the experience of the Heysham exercise, will be fed into a paper on outline planning for extendibility which will be considered by the Nuclear Emergency Planning Liaison Group (NEPLG) for issue during 1998.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the likely effects on each local authority of returning non-domestic rates to local government; [18346]

(2) what plans he has to incorporate a resource equalisation scheme into the SSA in respect of the return of non-domestic rates to local authorities. [18347]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government will be publishing shortly a consultation paper on options for the localisation of non-domestic rates. The effects on individual authorities will depend on the specifications of the scheme, which will not be decided until after we have seen the responses to the consultation. However, resource equalisation between authorities will clearly remain essential.

Housing Associations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much funding has been allocated in 1997 to housing associations for the conversion of properties to meet housing needs. [18570]

Mr. Raynsford: Allocations are made by financial year, rather than calendar year. In 1996–97 £191 million public funding was allocated to housing associations through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme and local authorities' Social Housing Grant for the acquisition and rehabilitation or conversion of properties to meet housing need.

A further £43 million was allocated to housing associations for improvement or conversion works to their existing stock.

New Housing (Water Supply)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of procedures to take account of local water supply in respect of planning for new housing. [18524]

Mr. Raynsford Planning Policy Guidance Note 12 (PPG12) already requires local planning authorities to take account of the capacity of existing infrastructure and the need for additional facilities in preparing their development plans. However, we are currently considering the need to revise and update PPG12 and we will consider whether further advice is required on this issue as part of that review.

Construction and Agriculture Industries

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inspections have taken place of working conditions in the construction and agriculture industries in 1997 to date. [18572]

Angela Eagle: In the period 1 January 1997–21 November 1997, the Field Operations Directorate of the Health and Safety Executive made 31,843 inspection contacts in the construction industry. Inspection contacts in the agricultural sector over the same time period were 11,946. In addition to inspections, contacts are made for other purposes, including the investigation of accidents and complaints and for enforcement.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inspectors are employed by his Department to inspect working conditions in the construction and agriculture industries in England and Wales. [18573]

Angela Eagle: For England and Wales, the Field Operations Directorate of the Health and Safety Executive has allocated 103 operational inspectors to the construction sector and 65.9 to the agricultural sector.

Radioactive Materials

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list all those locations licensed by his Department for the use of radioactive materials; and if he will make a statement. [18368]

Angela Eagle: There are 40 nuclear licensed sites, which are licensed and regulated by the Health and Safety Executive under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended). As required under Section 6 of this Act, a list of these sites is held by the Department of Trade and Industry and is available for inspection by members of the public. Copies are also available for inspection at the Health and Safety Executive's Regional and other main offices.

In general, radioactive materials and waste are regulated under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 (as amended by the Environment Act 1995) and the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985. Under the Radioactive Substances Act, the keeping and use of radioactive material, other than on nuclear licensed sites, must be registered with the appropriate Agency (that is, the Environment Agency in England and Wales, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency in Scotland, and the Environment and Heritage Service in Northern Ireland). In addition, the Act also requires that the disposal of radioactive waste from nuclear licensed sites, and the accumulation and disposal of radioactive waste from all other sites, are authorised by the appropriate Agency. Certain classes of users and radioactive material are exempted from some or all of these requirements, by Exemption Orders which are Statutory Instruments made under the Act, or, in the case of certain Ministry of Defence sites, as a consequence of Crown Immunity.

The Environment Agency advise that in England and Wales there are currently in force approximately 5,700 registrations for the keeping and use of radioactive material and approximately 1,100 authorisations for the accumulation and/or disposal of radioactive waste. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency advise that in Scotland about 700 premises are registered for the keeping and use of radioactive material, and about 400 premises are authorised for the accumulation and/or disposal of radioactive waste. The Northern Ireland Environment and Heritage Service advise that in Northern Ireland approximately 120 sites are registered for the keeping or use of radioactive materials, of which approximately 25 are authorised to accumulate and dispose of radioactive waste.

Applications and certificates for registrations and authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act (except any information specifically excluded by virtue of Section 39(1) of the Act on national security or commercial grounds) are available for public inspection at the area offices of the Environment Agency (in England and Wales); at the regional offices of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (in Scotland); and at the Head Office of the Environment and Heritage Service in Northern Ireland. No centrally held list is available. Subject to Section 25 of the Act, the appropriate agencies are also required to provide copies of registration and authorisation certificates and applications to relevant local authorities, which must themselves—subject to the provisions of Section 39(2)—make publicly available the information which they hold.

Marine Accidents

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch report on the accident involving the vessels "Seahorse" and "Exodus". [18499]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This accident, which took place in Irish territorial waters, was investigated by both Irish and UK accident investigators in full co-operation. The Irish authorities intend to publish their report.

The UK's Marine Accidents Investigation Branch conducted the investigation under their "Inspector's Investigation" procedure whereby the report is not formally published but is made available to involved and interested parties. A short summary of the report will be included in the forthcoming MAIB "Safety Digest". The next edition will be published early next year. Copies will be placed in the library of the House.

Accidents (Passengers and Crew)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the last 10 years, by incident, the number of passengers and crew killed in accidents involving (a) the rail network, (b) UK registered aircraft or aircraft within United Kingdom airspace, (c) ferries in the United Kingdom waters or registered in the United Kingdom and (d) river craft operating in the United Kingdom. [18173]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 November 1997]: Individual accidents could be listed only at disproportionate cost. The number of fatalities in each year are as follows:

Passenger and staff/crew fatalities in transport accidents[1]

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Railways[2]	4	36	12	1	6	1	0	8	2	1
UK registered aircraft or aircraft in UK airspace[3]	62	278	76	45	23	40	27	38	30	43
UK registered passenger ferries or passenger ferries in UK waters	190	[4]0	[4]0	0	0	2	0	0	0	0
River craft operating in the UK[5]	[6]—	3	51	[6]—	2	2	1	1	3	4

[1] As far as possible the fatalities included in the table are those due to an aircraft, train or vessel accident, for example a collision. Fatalities due to the movement of a vehicle etc, for example due to the opening or closing of a carriage door at a railway station, are excluded.
[2] For railways, figures for 1991 are for the period January 1991 to March 1992. Those for the subsequent periods shown relate to financial years. Railways includes all railway undertakings in Great Britain.
[3] Figures cover both public transport flights and general aviation (executive, club and group, private and training flights). Most fatalities occur in this latter group.
[4] There were in addition six fatalities in 1988 and two in 1989 involving a United Kingdom registered merchant vessel. Available records do not indicate whether the vessels were ferries.
[5] Accidents reported to British Waterways.
[6] Not available.

Railways (Public Accountability)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of public accountability for the railway system. [18799]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to establishing more effective and accountable regulation of the railways to ensure that the system is run in the public interest. As a first step towards improving public accountability, we have introduced new Objectives, Instructions and Guidance for the Franchising Director and a concordat with the Rail Regulator, designed to strengthen railways regulation. We are also conducting a wide ranging review which will look at all aspects of the rail industry, including the shortcomings of the sanctions already available to the regulators.

Government Buildings

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Government policy on insuring their building estate against fire and other risks. [18837]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The policy on insurance is set out in Chapter 27 of Government Accounting. There is a requirement to consult HM Treasury before taking out commercial insurance, except for:

(a) building insurance where insurance is a condition of a lease and the lessor will not accept an indemnity;

(b) overall site insurance; and

(c) insurance in respect of boilers and lifts.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions since Crown immunity was lifted Government buildings have been insured against fire and general risks; if he will list the buildings involved. [18838]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 December 1997]: My Department does not keep a central record of building insured against fire or other risks.

Political Donations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings he or his ministers have had with individuals who are connected with housebuilders or construction companies and who have made donations to the Labour party of more than £5,000. [18979]

Mr. Prescott: My Ministers and I have met representatives of the construction and housebuilding industries on numerous occasions as part of our policy responsibilities for efficient construction, land use planning, housing, transport and environmental sustainability.

Information on donations to the Labour Party at more than £5,000 is published in the Labour Annual Report Donations to the Conservative Party are not of course disclosed.

Thorne and Hatfield Moors

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the area of Thorne and Hatfield Moors is currently in the process of being returned to the legal ownership of English Nature; and when this will be completed. [18972]

Angela Eagle: In 1992 Fisons, the predecessor of Levingtons, gave the freehold ownership of 1,175 hectares at Thorne and Hatfield Moors to English Nature. Legal arrangements for the management of the sites for their nature conservation interest were concluded in 1994 and in 1995 this area of land was declared a National Nature Reserve.

Two further areas of 205.7 hectares and 80 hectares were handed back to English Nature in 1996. Legal arrangements for the handback of these two areas is not yet complete.

These areas represent 56 per cent. of the SSSI.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to issue new guidance on the conduct of compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement. [19448]

Ms Armstrong: I have today published a new Departmental Circular No. 16/97 (Welsh Office 62/97) which gives authorities guidance on the conduct of compulsory competitive tendering (CCT).

The guidance reflects the new regulations on CCT laid before Parliament on 21 November. These amended the existing framework for CCT in England and Wales to make it more flexible and encourage local authorities to move to a Best Value-based approach to service delivery. The new guidance will allow authorities to pursue the principles of Best Value in a manner consistent with the purpose of the CCT legislation (that is that local authorities carry out work only if they do so competitively) and provide more flexibility to tendering.

A draft of the guidance formed part of a package of proposed changes to CCT which went out to consultation on 25 July. The new Circular takes account of the views of 112 local authorities and related organisations, professional bodies and private sector interests who responded specifically to the draft. A further 19 responses were received by the Welsh Office. Copies of the responses are held in the DETR's Library.

The guidance sets out the Government's views on how CCT should be carried out in the period before Best Value is implemented. It emphasises the importance of ensuring that competition is undertaken in an open and transparent manner and that service users and providers are consulted on the level and standard of services to be provided. Local authorities should secure services which are economic, effective and efficient and in which considerations of price and quality are properly balanced. Competing bids need to be evaluated objectively and authorities need to deal fairly with potential contractors to ensure that tendering practice does not advantage any one potential supplier or suppliers.

The new guidance applies immediately to those services currently subject to CCT. The Secretary of State will take into account the extent to which there has been a contravention of the guidance in determining whether or not authorities have acted anti-competitively.

Local Authorities (Best Value Duty)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce his decision about which local authorities will pilot the duty of best value; and if he will make a statement. [19462]

Ms Armstrong: I intend to announce these decisions later this week. My Department will write to all local authorities and other organisations that submitted proposals to pilot Best Value. I shall place a list of proposals, together with a record of the decision taken on each proposal, in the Library on the day of the announcement.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had concerning the principle of state liability for damages to citizens and the environment from an accident involving the shipment of nuclear materials. [18403]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

I have had no such discussions. Under UK law, which is in line with international conventions, the nuclear operator is exclusively liable for nuclear damage. All nuclear operators are required to have third party insurance arrangements, which include risks associated with nuclear material in transit.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Berlaymont

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current costs of the Berlaymont renovation and connected expenses; what was the original projected cost; if he will make a statement on the presence of asbestos in that building; and which other Community institutions are in the process of relocation. [18480]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Berlaymont building was evacuated in 1991, after the discovery of asbestos. The cost of renovation is estimated at ECU 325 million. The cost of asbestos removal is estimated at ECU 90 million. These costs will initially be borne by the Belgian Government (which owns the building). The Commission will reimburse the renovation costs (but not the cost of asbestos removal) over 27 years and will pay ECU 50 million for the building's shell. Legal ownership of the Berlaymont will then pass to them.

The only Community institution in the process of relocating is the European Parliament, which recently moved into a new building in Brussels and is constructing new premises in Strasbourg.

Decrypting Powers

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if decrypting powers resulting from discussions centring on COM (97) 503 will be available to (a) Europol and (b) agencies of the European Community; and if he will make a statement. [18489]

Mr. Robin Cook: COM (97) 53 is a consultation document. It does not propose specific legislation but seeks comments on the basis of which the Commission intends to come forward with detailed proposals. Its primary focus is on digital signature rather than on encryption. It makes no prescription for decryption powers.

Agenda 2000

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his Department's policy towards the EU Commission's Agenda 2000. [18856]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Enlargement of the European Union (EU) will enhance stability and prosperity across Europe and is strongly in the national interest. Reform of the EU's main policies is essential for enlargement to be successful. That is why we broadly welcome the proposals made in the European Commission's Agenda 2000 document, in particular:

- to begin EU accession negotiations as soon as possible with those candidate countries that are ready while ensuring an all-inclusive enlargement process.
- to maintain the ceiling on the Community budget's Own Resources at 1.27 per cent. of EU-GDP throughout the next financing period from 2000–2006.
- to reform the CAP by cutting support prices and increasing targeted measures for rural areas and the environment.
- to reform the Structural and Cohesion Funds while maintaining their budget ceiling at 0.46 per cent. of EU-GDP and treating new and present Member States fairly.

The Luxembourg European Council on 12–13 December 1997 will receive a report from the General Affairs Council on Agenda 2000. We expect the European Council to invite the Commission to open accession negotiations and to table draft legislative proposals early in 1998.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts Government Ministers have maintained with the representatives of missing persons from Srebrenica in Bosnia and Herzegovina; and if the British Government will be providing specific assistance in order to determine the fate of the missing persons. [18826]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I met representatives of the "Women of Srebrenica" group of relatives of victims Srebrenica on 19 November. We are currently considering an appeal for donations to the 1998 exhumation project, launched on 26 November by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government have provided to the international programme to identify and exhume mass grave sites in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to identify the bodies of missing persons. [18827]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are currently considering how to respond to an appeal of 26 November for donations to the International Criminal Tribunal's exhumation programme for 1998. The British contingent of SFOR provides a secure environment within which ICTY's forensic teams operate.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral Answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 765, what estimate he has made of the proportion of the decline in youth unemployment in the United Kingdom over the last four years which is attributable (a) to the fall in numbers in that age group and (b) to other factors. [18569]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 December 1997]: About 30 per cent. of the reduction in unemployment among young people in the last four years has been due to a decline in the overall population in this age group. The rest is due to a rise in the proportion of young people remaining in full-time education and to the economic upswing, which started earlier in this country than in other major European countries.

EU Council

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for

December; and if he will list the major European Union events for the next six months. [19231]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information is as follows:

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legal advice he has received over the challenge to the Protocol on asylum in Title VI of the Amsterdam Treaty based on Article 14(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and if he will make a statement. [17913]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any formal legal challenge to the Asylum Protocol. As we have made clear, we will, in accordance with United Kingdom asylum law, continue to give individual consideration to asylum applications from European Union nationals as we do to other nationals. We do not therefore consider that any question arises as to the United Kingdom's adherence to Article 14(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the Aid and Trade Provision projects currently in place by country, their costs and their expected dates of completion. [18950]

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the number of jobs which will be lost in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland as a result of the discontinuance of ATP. [18949]

Mr. Foulkes: As there has been no change in the overall volume or tying status of the aid programme we would anticipate that closing the ATP scheme would have no impact on UK jobs.

Street Children

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the aid and advice currently provided by her Department to countries which have street children. [18968]

Mr. Foulkes: As most of Department for International Development's (DFID) bilateral projects cover the wider population it is not possible to isolate expenditure on specific target groups within them. Although data may be readily available for projects designed specifically for children, expenditure on all areas which impinge on children cannot be separated from more general expenditure.

DFID is currently supporting the following non-governmental projects aimed at assisting street children through our Joint Funding Scheme (JFS):

Agency	Country	Project name	1996–97	1997–98	1999–99	1999–20
Childhope	Brazil	Judicial and Institutional Protection of Child and Adolescent	£13,714	£30,713	£30,745	£30,779
Childhope	Brazil	Projeto Ibeji for the Streetchildren	33,062	50,636	49,132	49,744
Childhope	Philippines	Development of Education in the Street	34,920	19,275	—	—

International Children's Trust	Ecuador	Street Children of Guayaquil	85,500	86,200	99,000	—
Jubilee Action	Brazil	Street Girls' Education, Training Centre and Residential Home	—	86,247	61,239	44,911
Teesside Council for Voluntary Service	Peru	Care, Education etc for Street Children	13,272	30,451	—	—
Toybox Charity	Guatemala	The Tower—Rehabilitation Centre for Streetchildren	18,822	19,055	—	—
			£257,352	£378,713	£297,819	£125,434

Funding has also been provided to those agencies which receive block grants through the JFS in support of a variety of street children initiatives in Bangladesh, Brazil, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, Rwanda and Tanzania.

Mixed Credits

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which countries she expects to qualify for assistance using mixed credits. [18951]

Mr. Foulkes: We would expect to use mixed credits only in the poorer countries. Any mixed credit projects will be subject to the agreed strategy and sectoral focus for each country which would have the primary aim of helping to eradicate poverty.

NGO Projects

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the number of people employed (a) full time and (b) part time by the NGO projects which are funded by her Department. [18954]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development (DFID) is supporting a very substantial number of NGO projects across a range of programmes. This includes our volunteer programme through which we are funding around 2,500 volunteers working full time in developing countries, as well as support staff in the UK. We are unable, however, to give an estimate of the total number employed as this information is not held centrally.

Cuba

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what European Community humanitarian aid is currently being supplied to Cuba. [17892]

Mr. Foulkes: In 1997, the European Community has provided humanitarian aid worth 8.6 million ecu (about £6 million) to the Cuban population. This was mostly in the form of medicines, medical and stomatological equipment, food stuffs, textile material, and hygiene and maintenance products, provided through international NGOs to support medical services in the country. A further 8 million ecu (£5.7 million) is to be provided under a similar programme in 1998.

UN (National Curriculum)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make representations to her Ministerial colleagues to include the topic of the United Nations within the National Curriculum. [18790]

Mr. Foulkes: We hold ongoing discussions with the Department for Education and Employment on the place of development education in the national curriculum. This includes the role of the United Nations in development.

Aid Assessment

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she will publish the list of countries in which her Department has assessed the UK to be not well placed to make an impact. [18952]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department has not produced such a list. The impact the UK can have in a particular country depends on a number of factors including the nature and quality of the relationship and the extent to which we share policy objectives. These may change over time and will be reviewed in our country strategy papers and in the annual resource allocation round.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if she will make a statement about her Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18899]

Mr. Foulkes: No tally is kept of ministerial announcements, which come in many forms. Announcements are made in the first instance to the House when it is appropriate to do so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Ian Magill

Mr. Walker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will refer the case of Mr. Ian Magill, sentenced at Belfast Crown Court on 14 November, to the Court of Appeal on the ground of undue leniency. [18503]

The Attorney-General: The Criminal Justice Act 1988, which creates the power to refer a sentence I consider to be unduly lenient to the Court of Appeal, limits that power to sentences imposed for certain offences specified in the Act or in Orders made under it. My power does not extend to the offences for which Ian Patrick Magill was sentenced.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Further Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the average weekly income of (a) students in further education as part of the New Deal and (b) students in further education. [17398]

Dr. Howells: Young people in the full-time education and training option within the New Deal for 18–24 year olds will receive an allowance equivalent to their usual benefits. No figures are centrally available in respect of other students in further education.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the impact on student numbers in further education by 1999–2000 of the funding announced on 12 November. [17397]

Dr. Howells: The additional funding announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is for 1998–99 and provides for an additional 20,000 full-time equivalents which could equate to between 70,000 to 80,000 actual students. Decisions on funding for financial year 1999–2000 and beyond will be announced next summer in the light of the Government's comprehensive spending review.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the funding for further education he announced on 12 November. [17394]

Dr. Howells: The additional funding, announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, for further education in England next year provides for the resumption of growth on a financially sound basis. The funding provides for an additional 20,000 full-time equivalent students, with the efficiency squeeze on the sector restricted to the costs arising from inflation.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what potential additional sources of income for the further education sector he has assessed; and if he will make a statement; [17403]

(2) if he will make a statement on the sources of the additional funding for further education for the year 1998–99. [17413]

Dr. Howells: On 12 November my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced additional funding for the Further Education sector next year totalling £83 million. This includes an extra £20 million from employers in respect of employer-led provision. Colleges will also have the opportunity to bid for well over £100 million worth of the New Deal education and training budget next year and, in 1998 and 1999, for some £140 million available from Objective 4 of the European Social Fund to help prepare workers for industrial change.

Diving Courses

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was spent by the Further Education Funding Council on funding courses leading to PADI levels 1 and 2 qualifications in each year since 1992–93. [17823]

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when funding by the Further Education Funding Council for the provision of diving courses leading to PADI level 1 and 2 courses was cancelled. [17821]

Dr. Howells: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Further Education Funding Council to write to my hon. Friend concerning these matters.

Disability Rights Task Force

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will announce the terms of reference and membership of the Disability Rights Task Force. [19471]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Rights Task Force's Terms of Reference are:

"To consider how best to secure comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people within the context of our wider society, and to make recommendations on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission. To provide the latter by March 1998 and to provide a full report of its recommendations on wider issues no later than July 1999.

The Task Force will take full account of the costs as well as the benefits of any proposals, so far as is quantifiable and practicable, and in particular ensure that its recommendations for a Disability Rights Commission achieve value for money for the taxpayer."

The following have been invited to serve as members of the Task Force:

Name
Stephen Alambritis	Head of Press and Parliamentary Affairs, Federation of Small Businesses
Bob Benson	Director of Disability Scotland
Jane Campbell	Member of the National Centre for Independent Living and British Council of Organisations of Disabled People
Caroline Gooding	Member of Trades Union Disability Alliance
David Grayson	Chair of the National Disability Council, Business Links National Advisory Panel, a director of Business in the Community
Rachel Hurst	Chair of Rights Now
David Jenkins	General Secretary of Welsh TUC
Su Jenkins	Legal Adviser, J. Sainsbury Plc
Brian Lamb	Assistant Director and Head of Public Affairs, SCOPE

Name
James Strachan	Chief Executive, Royal National Institute for Deaf people
Richard Taylor	Chief Executive, Lifespan NHS Trust
Keith Welton	Group Chief Executive, Mid Yorkshire Chamber of Commerce and Industry Limited
Monica Wilson	Chief Executive of Disability Action
Richard Wood	Chief Executive, British Council of Organisations of Disabled People

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the threshold exempting employers with fewer than 20 employees from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [19449]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am pleased today to announce such a review. It will provide an early opportunity to seek views on one way in which the position of disabled people in society might be improved. A key aspect of the review will be a consultation exercise aimed at gleaning views and information from a wide range of disability and employer organisations, especially those representing small firms, as well as individual disabled people and employers. It will include meetings with interested parties.

The Act requires a review to be held, begun immediately after the fourth anniversary of the commencement of the exemption provision if not held sooner, and allows the threshold to be lowered, but not removed completely, following the review. Any change must come into force within a year of the review starting.

The Government will consider carefully the responses to the consultation before deciding whether the threshold should be lowered to extend the Act's employment rights to more disabled employees and job applicants and, if so, to what level. We shall take account of any problems which may particularly apply to smaller employers, as well as looking at the wider costs and benefits of change.

TREASURY

Tax (Self-assessment)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he plans to take to correct errors in the instructions in tax self-assessment forms in connection with single premium bonds. [17231]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 November 1997]: This has been discussed with Tax Offices and Taxpayer Representative Bodies and corrective procedures put in place. It affects a very small number of people.

Dividends (Tax Credits)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 111, if he will list (a) the representations his Department received from (i) trade associations, (ii) major corporations and (iii) others, (b) the concerns raised in those representations and (c) the nature of the technical clarifications sought by the United States Government. [17973]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Confirmation was sought and given, informally, to the US Government that their understanding of the Budget changes to the UK's CT legislation was correct, insofar as it related to payments of tax credits on dividends received by US residents. It would not be appropriate to publish the identities of others who have made representations, or the nature of their comments, without their prior consent.

Alcohol Duty

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the results of the review of duty on alcoholic drinks. [18185]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The review team, which is looking into the effects on the Exchequer and industry revenue of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping, are due to report by the end of December. After considering the report, I will decide when to publish.

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the review of alcohol duties is taking into account projections on the Treasury economic model of the effects of differential duties. [18184]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The review is looking into the effects on the Exchequer and industry revenue of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping. The effects of differential duties on the Treasury economic model is a separate issue.

Duty Free Trade

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received supporting the continuation of the duty free system after June 1999. [18158]

Dawn Primarolo: My Treasury colleagues and I have received 257 letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents in support of the continuation of intra-EU duty free sales after June 1999.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to eradicate the smuggling of tobacco from the continent into the United Kingdom [18546]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of front-line Customs staff to deal with Single Market excise smuggling has been significantly increased in the last 15 months. An extra 70 have been allocated throughout the country under the Spend to Save initiative. In addition, a further 30, backed up by specialist investigation officers, are currently being deployed at Dover to intensify the drive against the illegal trade. Customs announced new measures on 26 September 1997 to crack down on hired vehicles used for smuggling.

My right hon. Friend announced in his Budget a review of the effects on the Exchequer and the industry of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping. The review, which is being conducted in partnership with all the trade sectors concerned and with key Government departments, will report to me by the end of the year with options for dealing with these issues.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the seizures of (a) alcohol, (b) cigarettes and (c) rolling tobacco at ports of entry to the United Kingdom in 1994, 1995, 1996; and what are the latest available figures. [18371]

Dawn Primarolo: Detections throughout the UK of goods smuggled from the Single Market were as follows, in terms of the duty (in £ million) that should have been paid.

	1993–94	1994–95	1996–97	1996–97
Alcohol	0.8	2.75	8	11.8
Cigarettes	0.3	0.9	1.2	5.3
Handling Rolling Tobacco	1	3.1	5.6	12.3

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions have taken place between the European Monetary Institute and the United States Federal Reserve over joint management of global currency matters after Economic and Monetary Union. [17219]

Mrs. Liddell: Treasury Ministers cannot answer for any discussions that may have taken place between these independent bodies.

International Monetary Fund (Korea)

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the negotiations between the IMF and Korea. [19463]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I am pleased the Managing Director of the IMF has reported today agreement with the Korean authorities to a strong programme, which he will recommend to the Board of the IMF. If the programme is agreed, the UK is prepared with some of our European and other G7 partners to consider, if needed, supplementary finance in support of the programme. The UK would consider an amount up to the equivalent of $1.25 billion. Any loan would depend on a financing need and would only be made with agreement by the IMF. Were such a loan to be made it would be advanced by the Bank of England to the Central Bank of Korea. The Treasury would provide to the Bank of England an indemnity under the International Monetary Arrangements Act 1983 .

Export Initiative

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the Minister for Firms, Trade and Industry was informed of the termination of the Home Office Export Initiative. [16213]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 17 November 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

I wrote to the hon. Member about this matter on 19 November and I have placed a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will itemise and place in the Library copies of RUC correspondence, submissions and monitoring returns to the Fair Employment Commission in the past eight years. [13072]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Correspondence and submissions between any organisation and the Fair Employment Commission are confidential. As such it is not considered appropriate to make this information public.

However the monitoring returns for the past eight years will be placed in the library.

Personal Security

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been advised about personal safety by the RUC or notified that their personal details may have come into the possession of paramilitary organisations in each of the last four years, indicating where possible the community affiliation of the individuals affected. [15896]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 18 November 1997]: The information sought is not readily available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Artificial Breasts and Limbs

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the shortest current waiting time for (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients for the fitting of a prosthesis following (i) the amputation of a leg and (ii) breast reconstruction following a mastectomy. [17893]

Mr. Worthington: No one is waiting outside the three week timescale for the fitting of a prosthesis. Information relating to breast reconstruction is not available centrally.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Eastern Health and Social Services Board treats (a) breast reconstruction following a mastectomy and (b) the fitting of a prosthesis following amputation of a limb as a cosmetic procedure. [17904]

Mr. Worthington: (a) Breast reconstruction following a mastectomy is generally regarded by the Eastern Board, as a cosmetic procedure. The Board and the surgeons who carry out this operation are however very aware of the deep distress which patients who wish to undergo reconstruction may suffer while waiting.

(b) The Board takes a different view of the fitting of a prosthesis following amputation of a limb and does not regard that as a cosmetic procedure.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients are currently waiting for the fitting of a prosthesis following the amputation of (i) an arm and (ii) a leg. [17900]

Mr. Worthington: No distinction is made between non-fundholder and fundholder patients. Fitting is completed within three weeks of a patient being ready to commence prosthetic treatment following amputation. No one is currently waiting outside this timescale.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Eastern Health and Social Services Board has to commit additional resources for breast reconstruction following mastectomies. [17882]

Mr. Worthington: The Eastern Board, following receipt of additional funding, has agreed, at the request of the Royal Group of Hospitals, to purchase a further seven breast reconstruction procedures there. The Board also intends to pay for a further 100 plastic surgery procedures and 340 general surgery procedures at the Ulster Hospital. These may include post mastectomy reconstruction but this will depend on decisions by the appropriate consultants about clinical priority.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many GP fundholder patients have had a mastectomy in 1996–97; [17902]

(2) how many GP non-fundholder patients had a mastectomy in 1996–97. [17883]

Mr. Worthington: The number of inpatient episodes involving procedures for total or other excision of the breast in health service hospitals in Northern Ireland during the year 1996–97 was 1,652. Of these episodes, 728 involved patients of GP fundholders and 895 involved patients of non-fundholders. Central records do not distinguish whether the GP was a fundholder or a non-fundholder for the remaining 29 episodes.

Source:

Hospital Inpatients System. Figures for 1996–97 are provisional.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many breast reconstructions following mastectomy the Eastern Health and Social Services Board has contracted for in the current financial year; and what funds have been committed to purchase these services. [17901]

Mr. Worthington: In the normal process the Eastern Board does not contract specifically for breast reconstruction as this is commissioned as either a general surgery or plastic surgery procedure. It is not therefore possible to say what funds have been committed to purchase procedures of this kind in 1997–98.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many GP fundholders patients who have had a mastectomy have been advised to have breast reconstruction in 1996–97; and how many have had their operation for reconstruction delayed by more than three months; [17887]

(2) what is the longest current waiting time for (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients for reconstruction of breast surgery following a mastectomy; [17897]

(3) how many GP non-fundholder patients who have had a mastectomy were advised to have breast reconstruction in 1996–97; and how many of these have had their operation for reconstruction delayed by more than three months; [17884]

(4) how many (a) non-fundholder and (b) fundholder patients are currently waiting for reconstruction of breast surgery following a mastectomy. [17899]

Mr. Worthington: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what consultations the Eastern Health and Social Services Board has had with medical experts in respect of the allocation of resources for breast reconstruction; [17880]

(2) what consultation the Eastern Health and Social Services Board has had with surgeons specialising in breast surgery over (a) delays in breast reconstruction treatment following mastectomies and (b) the priority accorded to this treatment. [17881]

Mr. Worthington: In August additional funding was made available, some of it for waiting list pressures. The Eastern Board approached the Trusts in its area to ask for proposals from them for waiting list work. The Royal Group put forward, inter alia a proposal for the treatment of seven additional patients requiring breast reconstruction to which the Board has agreed. The Ulster Hospital in its response indicated that it could undertake 100 additional plastic surgery procedures and 240 in general surgery. The appropriate consultants will consider the clinical priority of those waiting, including the one patient waiting for post mastectomy reconstruction on the plastic surgery list at the Ulster. The Board has also advised that it has not received any indication of concerns about this specific service from any of the Trusts providing it either in respect of waiting times or the level of investment in it.

Springvale Site

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the planning process for the provision of educational facilities on the Springvale site. [19300]

Mr. Worthington: The Government welcome the close collaboration between the University of Ulster and the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education which has brought forward consideration of new approaches to joint further and higher education provision at Springvale. These considerations reflect both the recommendations of the recent Dearing Report and local circumstances. They are currently subject to economic appraisal, the findings of which the Government await with interest. Any decision will take account of value for money, affordability and the potential attractiveness as a PFI project.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance her Department has given for the export of mixed oxide fuel from the United Kingdom within the last five years; what has been the cost of such assistance to date; what additional assistance is to be offered; and if she will estimate the future costs to be incurred during the next five years. [18498]

Mr. Battle: The Department has not given, or is scheduled to give, any financial assistance for the export of mixed oxide fuel from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total quantities of plutonium currently held (a) at Sellafield and (b) at Dounreay, indicating the form in which each category of plutonium is currently managed. [18411]

Mr. Battle: Details of the quantities of plutonium stored at United Kingdom nuclear facilities, including its form and ownership, are published by my Department each year. Copies of the latest annual plutonium figures for the year ended 31 March 1997 were published on 31 July 1997 and placed in the Library of House.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which states have signed the 1980 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material; which of these have confirmed their ratification to the International Atomic Energy Agency; what states have to date notified the IAEA of (a) reservations and (b) withdrawals under Article 17 of the Convention; which parties to the Convention have proposed amending the Treaty since it was opened for signature; and how many prosecutions have been conducted to date under the convention. [18404]

Mr. Battle: The Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material was signed in the 1980s by: Argentina*, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria*, Canada, Czechoslovakia*, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, European Atomic Energy Community*, Finland, France*, Federal Republic of Germany, German Democratic Republic*, Greece, Guatemala*, Haiti, Hungary*, Indonesia*, Republic of Ireland, Israel*, Italy*, Republic of Korea*, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Mongolia*, Morocco, Netherlands*, Niger, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland*, Portugal, Romania*, South Africa*, Soviet Union*, Spain*, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey*, United Kingdom, United States of America and Yugoslavia. Of these, all except Dominican Republic, Haiti, Morocco, Niger, Panama, Romania and South Africa have confirmed their ratification to the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Those marked with an asterisk notified the IAEA of reservations when signing the Convention. I am not aware of any of these reservations having been withdrawn or of any formal proposals for amendment to the Convention. There is no provision in the Convention for prosecutions to be conducted under it.

Plutonium and Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what values were set on the (a) plutonium and (b) uranium stocks held by (i) British Nuclear Fuels and (ii) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in the National Asset Register. [18666]

Mr. Battle: The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) National Asset Register records all material fixed assets owned and controlled directly by the DTI and those in executive non-departmental public bodies and public corporations for which it is responsible.

Stocks of plutonium and uranium do not form part of fixed assets held by British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) and United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA).

BNFL hold stocks of separated civil plutonium and uranium on behalf of UK and overseas customers, including British Energy and Magnox Electric who also own the vast majority. The UKAEA hold stocks of uranium. In view of this, no values of these materials appear in the accounts of BNFL and UKAEA. It is for the owners to decide on what value to place on these materials.

Textile Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to support the textile industry; and if she will make a statement. [18721]

Mr. Battle: My Department provides considerable support to the UK's textiles and clothing industries and is working with representatives of the sector to take forward a wide variety of sector-specific activities and initiatives which will both raise the profile of the industry and improve its competitiveness. Eleven separate textiles and clothing projects are currently being supported under the Sector Challenge. We support many of the highly successful supply chain activities of the Apparel and Textiles Challenge and provide financial support for young designers to show at London Fashion Week. The highly praised Education Pack for Schools received DTI funding and the textiles and clothing industry is one of the major beneficiaries under the Trade Fair Support Scheme. These examples give an indication of the breadth of our support for the industry covering areas as diverse as education and training, export promotion, supply chain development, and technology dissemination.

"Managing UK Nuclear Liabilities"

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the recent report, a copy of which has been sent to her Department, from the Sussex University Science Policy Research Unit, "Managing UK Nuclear Liabilities". [18656]

Mr. Battle: The SPRU report is a substantial piece of work that merits serious attention. My Department is currently considering it but I do not expect us to reach any conclusion about SPRU recommendations before the New Year.

Enterprise Zone Web Site

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the specifications are for the provision of the Enterprise Zone web site. [18564]

Mrs. Roche: The Enterprise Zone Internet has been designed to provide UK businesses with quick and easy access to relevant and authoritative sources of business related information on the World Wide Web. Only sites which are assessed by a group of business information experts as meeting quality criteria published on the Enterprise Zone will be linked to the Enterprise Zone.

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the results of the tendering process for the contract for her Department's Enterprise zone web site. [18566]

Mrs. Roche: Seventeen companies were invited to submit proposals to develop the Enterprise Zone. The proposals were assessed by a selection group that included representatives of the Department of Trade and Industry, Cabinet Office and the Business Link Network. The proposal from Microsoft was recommended by the group as best meeting the specification and representing best value for money.

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the role of her Department in the provision of information for the Enterprise Zone web site; and if there are any rules restricting use of the site for advertising particular products. [18563]

Mrs. Roche: The Enterprise Zone has been developed to provide UK businesses with quick and easy access to authoritative sources of business information on the World Wide Web. Sites linked to the Enterprise Zone are provided by a wide range of organisations. There is a link from the Enterprise Zone to the Department of Trade and Industry web site.

The Enterprise Zone does not provide links to sites that simply advertise business related products. To be linked to the Enterprise Zone, sites of commercial providers must give business users free access to useful and authoritative information, in addition to providing them with the opportunity to purchase further information or products.

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies tendered for the contract to provide the Enterprise Zone web site; and if she will list them. [18565]

Mrs. Roche: Of the 17 companies invited to submit proposals, the following 14 tendered for the contract to develop the Enterprise Zone web site:

Augusta Technology Ltd.

Brainstorm Computer Solutions

Brand ID

British Telecom

CMG

Complete Works Ltd.

IBM

ICL Multimedia Solutions

Infernet

Marketing Net Ltd.

Microsoft

Online Magic Ltd.

SAC Technographic Ltd.

SSA Softwright.

Nuclear Emergencies

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to review the (a) mechanism and (b) responsibility for informing the public of a nuclear emergency; and if she will make a statement. [18369]

Mr. Battle: Currently, the legislative requirements for informing the public of a nuclear emergency are given in the "Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992" (PIRER). Guidance has been published by the Health and Safety Executive in support of the Regulations and further relevant guidance has been issued to the emergency response bodies concerned by the Nuclear Emergency Planning Liaison Group (NEPLG).

Consultative proposals are at present being developed on the new "Radioactive Emergency Preparedness and Public Information Regulations" (REPPIR) which will subsume PIRER and implement the Emergency Preparedness requirements of the European Council Directive 96/29 EURATOM laying down Basic Safety Standards for the protection of the health of workers and the general public against the dangers arising from ionising radiation. These proposals will be published in a consultative document in Spring 1998.

In parallel with these activities, a National Steering Committee on Warning and Informing the Public is meeting to develop a view on the broad issue of informing the public in a variety of emergency situations.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportions of businesses eligible for the DTI Loan Guarantee Scheme were granted a loan by a bank during the last year for which figures are available. [15326]

Mrs. Roche: No figures on the proportion of eligible businesses successful in obtaining a loan are available. All applications are made direct to lenders who must consider whether or not conventional finance can be made available. Eligibility for the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme is considered only in cases where the lender would be prepared to lend but for a lack of available assets which could be used as security.

Motor Dealers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will include motor dealers who do not provide credit in the licensing system at present operated by trading standards departments. [17144]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: While there are legal provisions in Scotland for local councils to license second-hand car dealers, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has no plans currently to introduce similar provisions here.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the proposed extension of the Seventh European Council Directive on aid to shipbuilding. [17905]

Mr. Battle: The Government support the proposed extension of the Seventh Directive on aids to shipbuilding until the end of 1998 as it is conditional on the EU negotiating a tougher replacement regime. This will lead to an earlier reduction in EU state aids for this sector, which is a key Government objective.

The extension of the Seventh Directive is part of the EU contingency arrangements in the light of the continuing delay in US ratification of the OECD Shipbuilding Agreement and is accompanied by a Commission proposal for a replacement shipbuilding aids regime. The Government support the main thrust of this Commission proposal as its overall impact will be to reduce EU shipbuilding aids and it is a transitional regime leading to the final elimination of special shipbuilding aids after 5 years. It envisages the removal of contract related aid by the end of 2000 and switches the emphasis to improving the competitiveness of the shipbuilding industry. (Further details of these two proposals are contained in Explanatory Memorandum 11165/97 and 11167/97 which are available in the Library of the House).

The Government still believe that the OECD Shipbuilding Agreement offers the best multilateral basis for removing shipbuilding aids and for restoring normal competitive conditions to the world shipbuilding market and hopes that the US will be able to complete its ratification. However in the meantime it regards the EU contingency arrangements as the next best option.

Duty Free Trade

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the number of permanent jobs in the United Kingdom that are (a) directly and (b) indirectly dependent upon the trade in duty-free goods. [18062]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The figures requested are not available because statistics are not collected in that form. Moreover, because of the number of different factors affecting retail activity at ports, airports, etc., I do not consider it would be possible to arrive at an accurate estimate.

Fixed Term Contract Staff

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy that fixed term contract staff (a) employed and (b) funded by research councils will not be required to sign waiver clauses in their employment contracts. [18628]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The Research Councils fund research in higher education institutions and other organisations in which the institution is responsible for the terms and conditions of employment of staff recruited to carry out the research. With very few exceptions, the Research Councils already make no requirement on institutions to include waiver clauses in the relevant contracts of employment. The Research Councils also employ research staff directly in their own institutes and units. The Management Statement and Financial Memorandum which sets the framework for the relationship between the Councils and the Office of Science and Technology requires the Councils to use waiver clauses in certain fixed-term employment contracts. We will keep that document under review.

Business Links

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the business links that have been closed or amalgamated since 1 May. [13518]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 October 1997]: There were 89 business link partnerships on 1 May and there are still the same number of partnerships to date.

Business link partnerships reflect local business needs in their decisions on how they are organised to manage the delivery of business link services in their areas, including the number of local outlets within each partnership.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the performance of SMEs in Staffordshire. [13891]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 November 1997]: According to the Interdepartmental Business Register (IDBR) there are 3,328 SMEs in Staffordshire who fall into the 10–199 employee category.

VAT registration data suggest that new business generation in Staffordshire is slightly below the regional and national averages. In 1995 the Staffordshire business formation rate was 9.4 per cent., West Midlands 9.9 per cent. and the UK 10.3 per cent. However, there is evidence to show that Staffordshire Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs) are more likely to survive in business. Of the Staffordshire SMEs joining the VAT register in 1990, 43.4 per cent. were still registered 4 years later compared with 42.2 per cent. regionally and 41.9 per cent. nationally.

Of the 3,238 SMEs in Staffordshire,

1,099 (33 per cent.) have used the services of Business Link Staffordshire.

356 Staffordshire companies which have 3–250 employees are committed to attaining the Investors in People Standard.

A further 116 companies of this size have already attained the Investors in People Standard.

Power Generation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the amount of existing coal-fired generating capacity which will be replaced by the generating projects to be awarded under the 5th round of the non fossil fuel obligation order. [18323]

Mrs. Beckett: The size of the fifth non-fossil fuel obligation order will be decided next year in the light of the quality and cost of the bids received. The impact of the new renewable generating stations will depend on their mode of operation, the competitive position of other stations and the level of demand that is required to be met. It is probable that little NFFO–5 capacity will come on stream before 2002–03.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will meet representatives of (a) mining unions and (b) the coal mining companies to discuss the future of the coal industry. [18326]

Mrs. Beckett: DTI Ministers have had several extensive meetings with miners' representatives and the coal mining companies to discuss the important future role that the coal industry can play.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to complete her discussions with the territorial Secretaries of State on co-ordinating inward investment packages; and if she will make a statement when agreement has been reached. [17064]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 21 November 1997]: Discussions with my colleagues are continuing. Parliament will be informed when those discussions have been concluded and the Concordat on financial assistance to industry has been published.

Meetings

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which business directors and executives she has met in her official capacity in her London offices. [17950]

Mrs. Beckett: I have regular meetings with business executives both in my office and elsewhere.

Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will ask the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe to disclose which charities received the profits from the sale of his BP shares. [17563]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 24 November 1997]: No. The distribution is being managed by a trust on the Minister's behalf.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many public appointments she has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16786]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Since 1 May 1997 Ministers have made 92 new appointments to Public Bodies. Forty of these (43 per cent.) receive some remuneration and I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 669.

Overhead Power Lines

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when an application for a 33Kv overhead line from Butt Yeats to Tatham Bridge and from Wennington Station to Lower Ravens Close Wood Wennington in the Lune Valley was received from Norweb; and if she has determined it. [18904]

Mr. Battle: The application was received on 11 November 1997. It is now under consideration by the Department in line with the statutory procedures designed to permit interested parties to make their views known. As part of this process, we shall have regard to planning guidance relevant to areas of outstanding natural beauty and will consider the company's argument for the need for such a line, and the views of the local community, the local planning authorities, individuals and hon. Members.

HEALTH

George House Trust

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to letters to him dated 28 May, 3 July and 28 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to the George House Trust. [13713]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 27 November 1997, with a full explanation for the delay in replying.

Superannuation Schemes

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on requests for early retirement resulting from the delays in processing requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to (a) the Universities Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme; and if he will make statement; [17055]

(2) what is the average time for processing a request to transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to (a) the Universities Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme; and if he will make a statement; [17059]

(3) if he will make a statement on the staffing levels necessary to process applications for transfers from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to (a) the Universities Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme to avoid delays to applicants; [17057]

(4) how many requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to (a) the Universities Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme have been subject to a delay of (i) three months, (ii) six months, (iii) one year, (iv) 18 months and (v) two years; and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority; [17054]

(5) how many cases involving miscalculations in the amounts involved in transfers from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to (a) the Universities Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme have led to (i) overpayment, (ii) court orders and (iii) referral to the Ombudsman; and if he will make a statement; [17056]

(6) how many requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to the Universities Superannuation Scheme involve staff currently employed at (a) Nottingham and (b) Trent universities; and how many have been subject to delays of (i) three months, (ii) six months, (iii) one year, (iv) 18 months and (v) two years; and if he will make a statement. [17058]

Mr. Milburn: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the National Health Service Pensions Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to my hon. Friend.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. John Heppell, dated 3 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions, as their substance falls within my area of responsibility. The answers to each question are set out below. I am afraid they are not all in the precise format you have requested. I also need to place them into the broader context of College of Education Transfers.

Background

When NHS staff were moved to Colleges of Education it was agreed that the most favourable available transfer of pension rights should be given. For those transferring to the Universities Superannuation Scheme (USS) a bulk transfer arrangement was agreed. Bulk transfers are more favourable than individual transfers because their transfer value is based upon movement in wages rather than prices. By its nature, however, a bulk transfer is not finalised until every case has been calculated. There have been many delays; while some of these have been unavoidable some were the result of poor performance by this Agency. With the benefit of hindsight we would have treated them differently. The bulk transfer of funds has not yet been completed; however the individuals pension entitlements are secured because the liabilities are accepted in full by the USS. To underpin this, significant payments on account have been made by the NHS Scheme to fund these liabilities. We are hoping, with the co-operation of the USS and their actuaries to be in a position within the next few weeks to be able to make the final payment to complete the transfers.

For those NHS staff who were transferring to the Teachers Superannuation Scheme (TSS) different arrangements were agreed, amounting to a 1:1 transfer of service. This involves no transfer of funds because both Schemes are notionally funded by the Exchequer. However the detailed work to complete the transfers has been undertaken on a case by case basis. To our knowledge all but a few of the 2,864 cases have been cleared.

Against this background the answers to your questions are as follows:

What assessment has the Secretary of State made of the impact on requests for early retirement resulting fro the delays in processing requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to:

(a) the USS; and

(b) the TSS.

While there have been significant delays in finalising the bulk transfer payment to the USS, the pensions entitlements of the individuals concerned have been safeguarded between the USS and the NHS Pension Scheme. The Schemes are not aware of any direct impact that the delay in finalising the bulk transfer payment has had on transactions involving early retirements.

In administering early retirements from the TSS, where a transfer was outstanding, both schemes have given such cases priority treatment conclusion. Again, the Schemes are not aware of any retirees who have been adversely affected by delays in the transfer process.

What is the average time limit for processing a transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to:

(a) the USS;

(b) the TSS.

The Agency only maintains figures for average clearance times for all transfers casework. We cannot distinguish between individual Schemes. Normal transfers go through two stages—provisional, covering an estimate and members option process; and final, which culminates either in a payment reflecting the capitalised value of the pension entitlement or confirmation of the service being transferred. The average times to clear, in working days over the past two years are:

	Provisional	Final
1997–98	68	47

A statement on the staffing levels necessary to process applications for transfers from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to:

(a) the USS;

(b) the TSS;

To avoid delays to applicants

All operational work is processed within the Agency by multi-skilled teams dealing with all aspects of the Scheme, not just transfers. In 1996–97 the equivalent of some 21 full-time staff were deployed on transfer cases, 22 in 1997–98. However at any one time the Agency can deploy many more staff than this, if it would help a particular situation. The delays in finalising the USS and TSS special exercises have not been attributable to staffing levels, but more to their complexity and difficulties with data. The TSS exercise is nearly completed. The USS exercise is expected to be completed by 31 December 1997.

How many requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to:

(a) the USS;

(b) the TSS;

have been subject to a delay of:

(i) 3 months;

(ii) 6 months;

(iii) 1 year;

(iv) 18 months;

(v) 2 years.

The USS bulk transfer was planned to be completed by the Schemes and their actuaries by May 1997. I should point out that this recognises that the completion date has had to be rescheduled to reflect each new college merger as it came within the ambit of the overall bulk transfer. The last such merger took place in November 1996. I am afraid the Agency does not hold separate clearance data about individual TSS cases related to the College of Education transfers.

How many cases involving miscalculations in the amounts involved in transfers from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to:

(a) the USS;

(b) the TSS;

have led to:

(i) overpayment;

(ii) court orders;

(iii) referral to the Ombudsman.

The USS transfers are covered by a bulk payment and this has not yet been finalised. The individual TSS cases do not involve transfers of amounts because the Schemes are both notionally funded by the exchequer. We are not aware that any transfer transaction has led to an overpayment, court orders or referrals to the Ombudsman.

How many requests for transfer from the NHS Superannuation Scheme to the USS involve staff currently employed at:

(a) Nottingham;

(b) Trent Universities;

and how many have been subject to delays of:

(i) 3 months;

(ii) 6 months;

(iii) 1 year;

(iv) 18 months;

(v) 2 years.

Staff at Mid Trent College merged with Nottingham University and transfer data about the 189 staff transferring to the University of Nottingham was released to USS just over 3 months later than planned. A query for one member of staff remains outstanding. Staff at North Trent College merged with Sheffield University and transfer data about the 198 staff transferring to the University of Sheffield was released to USS some 9 months later than originally planned. We are not aware of any outstanding queries relating to these cases.

Dental Services

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department takes to monitor the quality of private dental treatment. [18400]

Mr. Milburn: The General Dental Council is the regulatory body responsible for dental treatment provided outside the National Health Service. The Department, which provides funding for the continuing education and training of dentists who have an arrangement to provide general dental services under the National Health Service, gets regular feedback from the Council on matters like professional conduct and fitness to practise. The great majority of general dental practitioners carry out some NHS work even if they also undertake private practice.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure access to NHS dentistry for all residents of the South Staffordshire health authority district. [18487]

Mr. Milburn: On 9 September we announced the "Investing In Dentistry" initiative, which makes available up to £9 million in 1997–98 to help health authorities improve the availability of National Health Service dentistry in areas of the country where there are particular problems of access to NHS dental services.

Breast Screening

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to provide national guidelines on the introduction of two-view screening for each round of breast screening; [18506]

(2) what plans the Government have to improve the United Kingdom's detection ratio for those rounds of breast screening following the first screening; [18508]

(3) what assessment he has made of the advantages of two-view mammography for detecting small cancers. [18510]

Mr. Boateng: The Cancer Screening Evaluation Unit, which is funded by the Department of Health, is reviewing the advantages of two-view mammography. Recently published data suggest that for a woman's first screen, the use of two-view mammography increases by 45 per cent. the detection of invasive cancers of less than 15 millimetres, and for subsequent screens it increases the detection rate by 25 per cent.

All breast screening units currently take a second mammographic view of the breast at a woman's first visit to the screening programme. Breast screening units have discretion over the use of two view mammography at subsequent screening rounds. The case for requiring all units to take two views at every screening round will have to be assessed along with the outcome of research currently being carried out into other changes that might be made to improve the quality of the service offered to women, for example extending the screening programme to older women, and reducing the screening interval.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on extending the upper age limit of those automatically invited to breast screening; [18507]

(2) if he will assess the advantages of extending the upper age limit of those automatically invited to breast screening to 69 years of age. [18526]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are funding a pilot schemes in Northern and Yorkshire, Trent and South Thames regions to evaluate the effectiveness of extending the screening programme to include women aged 65–69. These pilots will run for three years to 1999–2000 to give a clear picture of likely uptake among older women, and effectiveness in terms of the number of cancers detected. We will base any changes to policy on the evidence emerging from these.

Screening every three years is currently available to older women on request. This is well publicised in a number of ways. Women who have already been screened through the programme are informed of their right to request screening after the age of 65. The booklet "Your Health: A Guide to Services for Women", which is widely available through general practitioner's surgeries, clinics, post offices and some shops, makes clear that women aged 65 and over will be screened free of charge three yearly if they request it.

Social Service Provision

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the incidence of patients forced to remain in hospital after they have been discharged because of a lack of appropriate social service provision. [18518]

Mr. Boateng: The incidence of patients who remain in hospital after they have been declared clinically fit for discharge is reviewed quarterly by the National Health Service Executive and the reasons for the delay in discharge are collected.

Dental Students (Tuition Fees)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what calculations his Department has made of the impact on the National Health Service budget of the introduction of tuition fees for dental students. [18360]

Mr. Milburn: Dental students will make a means-tested contribution to their tuition fees for the first four years of their course. The Department of Health will pay the contribution from year five onwards. This will not be at the expense of patient care—a transfer of resources from the Department for Education and Employment is being agreed to meet the cost.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to commission research into the physical causes of myalgic encephalomyelitis; [18660]

(2) what consultation the Government have carried out with those who suffer from myalgic encephalomyelitis; [18658]

(3) what assessment he has made of existing services provided by health authorities for those suffering with myalgic encephalomyelitis; [18662]

(4) what guidance has been given to GPs on the treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis; [18661]

(5) if he will commission a national epidemiological study into myalgic encephalomyelitis. [18659]

Mr. Boateng: Priorities for funding research in the Department are set very carefully, based on the burden of disease and other criteria. Bids for conducting research into chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS)/myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME) are therefore always considered on that basis. The Department continues to fund research into the management and treatment of CFS/ME through the National Health Service Research and Development Programme.

It is currently funding an on-going research project, costing about £60,000, which is looking at whether general practitioners are best placed to manage CFS/ME patients. A recently completed research project, costing over £65,000, considered whether a particular type of psychological treatment was effective in reducing disability in CFS/ME patients. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The Council currently provides support for one Small Project Grant in the area of Chronic Fatigue Syndrome entitled "The role of noradrenaline in the neuropsychological pathogenesis of the chronic fatigue syndrome". The total amount awarded was £37,000.

There are no plans to commission a national epidemiological study into CFS/ME. A number of small studies of epidemiology have indicated that prevalence is around 1–2/1000 of the population with a peak incidence in the 20–40 age group and a slight female predominance. Obtaining accurate epidemiological information is particularly difficult in the case of CFS/ME due to variations in definitions and the difficulties in making an accurate diagnosis. There is no single diagnostic test for CFS/ME. It is usually diagnosed by testing for and eliminating other conditions. People with CFS/ME can experience any or all of a wide range of symptoms, but chronic fatigue is a key factor in the syndrome.

The Government have not carried out a consultation of people who suffer from CFS/ME. However, we have funded CFS/ME voluntary organisations who have close contact with sufferers. Since 1988, we have made over £225,000 available to CFS/ME organisations and by 1998, this will have risen to over a quarter of a million pounds.

The NHS provides a wide range of services to which sufferers of CFS/ME have access and such patients are seen within a wide range of community services and hospital specialties. Patients can discuss the options available to them with their GP and they may also request an assessment of their needs by local authority social services departments. It is the responsibility of health authorities to decide how the needs of CFS/ME sufferers should be met and whether or not they should purchase dedicated services. All such decisions are made in the light of competing priorities and finite resources.

We consider that it is more appropriate for clinical guidelines to be produced by clinicians themselves or through their representative professional bodies. Establishing definitions of disease and the criteria for their diagnosis is also a matter for the professions. Furthermore, the Medical Royal Colleges point out that, whilst CFS/ME should be managed by GPs, it is inappropriate at present to issue clinical guidelines given the lack of methodologically sound research. There is no single effective treatment for CFS/ME. The condition varies significantly from one patient to another and therefore individual patients benefit from different treatment regimes.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18892]

Ms Jowell: The most important announcements of Government policy are made, in the first instance, to Parliament. A considerable number of announcements have been made in a variety of ways, often combining different approaches, reflecting the nature of the announcement. Our policy is to adopt the most appropriate vehicle.

Incontinence Products

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the extra cost to the NHS would be if VAT was applied to home-delivered incontinence products at 17.5 per cent. [18978]

Mr. Boateng: Under the Value Added Tax Act 1994, Schedule 8, Group 12, Item 2(g) incontinence products are zero-rated only when supplied to a disabled person or to a charity that makes them available to a disabled person. As the National Health Service falls into neither of these categories, it has always been the intention that supplies of these products by the NHS should have been standard rated and the NHS is funded on this understanding. Since there is no change to this intention, there will be no associated increased cost for the NHS. NHS trusts have been temporarily able to take advantage of a VAT reimbursement on these products due to a loophole which Customs and Excise are now seeking to close.

DEFENCE

Otterburn Ranges

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the local authorities with which he or his Department have held discussions about the future of the Otterburn ranges. [18800]

Dr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence has held discussions with the following local authorities about the future of the Otterburn ranges:

The Northumberland National Park Authority

The Northumberland County Council

The Tynedale District Council

The Alnwick District Council

The Castle Morpeth District Council.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the Menwith Hill base in North Yorkshire. [18792]

Dr. Reid: RAF Menwith Hill is a site owned by the Ministry of Defence and made available to the US Department of Defense as a communications facility. The station is an integral part of the US Department of Defense's world wide network which supports the UK, US and NATO interests.

Royal Military Police

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rationalisation studies affecting the Royal Military Police are taking place in his Department; and when these will report. [18787]

Dr. Reid: The Army Training and Recruiting Agency is currently conducting a study into the scope for rationalisation within the Adjutant General's Corps Training Group, which includes the Royal Military Police Training School at Chichester. The study is in two phases. Phase One is examining the feasibility of relocating the RMPTS to another AGC Training Group site or to the MOD Police Training school in Essex, or of leaving it where it is. Phase Two will examine the wider scope for rationalisation within the AGC Training Group as a whole. Phase One is expected to be completed early in the new year, and Phase Two in the spring.

Stabilisation Force (Women)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom women service personnel are serving in Bosnia as part of the stabilisation force. [18583]

Dr. Reid: On 1 December, there were 387 UK women Service personnel serving with the Stabilisation Force in former Yugoslavia: 47 officers and 340 other ranks.

Nimrod

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the improvements in performance of the Nimrod 2000 over the existing aircraft; [18616]

(2) when the Nimrod 2000 aircraft will enter full service. [18594]

Mr. Spellar: The Nimrod Maritime Reconnaissance and Attack Mark 4, as the new aircraft will be known, should be significantly more capable, and cheaper to operate, than the current Nimrod MR2.

The in-service date is defined as the date when the first front line squadron of seven aircraft is declared operational. This is scheduled for April 2003. The final aircraft is planned for delivery in June 2006.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 153, about the fully automated digital engine control system, if he will place in the Library copies of the 70 incident signals relating to FADEL on the Chinook Mark II helicopter. [18983]

Mr. Spellar: The subject documents are a part of the flight safety reporting procedures and disclosure would harm the frankness and candour of internal reporting. I am withholding the information requested under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the Textron Lycoming White Paper on Chinook FADEL. [18973]

Mr. Spellar: The information provided by Textron Lycoming in their White Paper is commercially confidential. Accordingly, I am withholding the information requested under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the minute ref. D/DHP/HP1/4/3, dated 29 April 1994 covering the Textron Lycoming White Paper on Chinook FADEL. [18974]

Mr. Spellar: The subject document contains internal opinions and advice, disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion. Accordingly, I am withholding the information requested under exemption 2b of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare Reforms

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with other EU states to co-ordinate national policies on (a) animal testing, (b) animal husbandry and (c) other animal welfare reforms. [18680]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend, in his contacts with his colleagues in all the EU Member States in preparation for the Presidency, is seeking to establish how best to advance this Department's aim of promoting progress on farm animal welfare at the EU level. Officials of the relevant Departments also have frequent contacts with their counterparts in the other Member States and in countries who are parties to the Council of Europe conventions concerning animal welfare.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by regions defined by the boundaries of the regional government offices, the lowest hourly rate paid by his Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18118]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 December 1997]: I will answer for the Department, the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) and the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA). Chief Executives of the Department's other Agencies will be replying direct.

Staff in the Department, PSD and FRCA are salaried. They are not paid by the hour and, in common with other Government Departments, only two geographical rates of salary exist—London and National. However, I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by normal full-time working hours of 36 hours per week in London or 37 hours elsewhere.

(a) for full-time employees the lowest hourly rate using a formula based on the above is as follows:

Job Title

Administrative assistant

London pay rate

£4.13 per hour

National pay rate

£3.42 per hour

(b) for part-time employees in the same grade, the above rates are paid according to the number of hours they work.

(c) employees in the same grade on fixed term contracts are also paid at the above rates.

(d) the rates of pay of employees of firms in the private sector undertaking contracted-out services are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Letter form T.W.A. Little to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 December 1997:

The Minster has asked me to reply to your question about the lowest hourly rate paid to staff within the VLA.

Staff in this Agency are salaried and are not paid by the hour. However, I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by normal full-time working hours of 36 hours per week in London or 37 hours elsewhere.

In the VLA there are no geographical distinctions in pay.

(a) For full-time employees the lowest hourly rate using a formula based on the above is an follows:

Pay Band G

Working 37 hours per week received £4.27 per hour

Working 36 hours per week received £4.38 per hour

(b) For part-time employees in the same grade the above rates are paid according to the number of hours they work.

(c) Employees in the same pay band on personal contracts are also paid at the above rate.

(d) This information is not available.

At (c) we have regarded "personal contracts" as fixed term appointees.

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. David Chidgey, Dated 3 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food has asked me to reply to your question about the lowest hourly rate paid to staff within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA).

Staff in the FRCA are salaried and not paid by the hour. However, I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by normal full-time working hours of 36 hours per week in London or 37 hours elsewhere.

(a) For full-time employees the lowest hourly rate using a formula based on the above is as follows:

Job Title: Administrative Assistant

London pay rate: £4.13 per hour

National pay rate: £3.42 per hour

(b) For part-time employees in the same grade, the above rates are paid according to the number of hours they work.

(c) Employees in the same pay band on personal contracts are also paid at the above rate.

(d) This information is not available.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning the lowest hourly rate paid to employees.

Staff in CSL are salaried and are not paid by the hour. However, I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by the normal full-time working hours of 37 per week.

For full-time employees the lowest hourly rate, based on the formula above, is £3.62 per hour for a member of staff in the CSL Level 1 grade.

For part-time employees in the same grade the above rate is paid according to the number of hours worked. Employees in the same grade on fixed-term contracts are also paid at the above rate. There are no geographical distinctions in the rates of pay.

Letter from J.M. Rutter to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about lowest hourly rates of pay in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD), as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

Staff in the VMD are salaried and not paid by the hour. However, I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by normal full time working hours of 36 hours per week. For full or part time staff the lowest rate is for an Administrative Assistant earning £4.13 per hour. We do not employ any staff on personal contracts in this grade, and the rates of pay of employees working for companies contracted by VMD are not held by VMD.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 December 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Services (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food enquiring about the lowest hourly rate paid to full-time employees, part-time employees and others has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

MHS staff are salaried and not paid by the hour. However I am able to provide data based on salary levels divided by normal full time and part time working hours of 37 and 16 hours per week respectively. MHS pay levels are on a national (Great Britain) basis and not differentiated by regional boundaries.

For full time employees the lowest hourly rate is £4.00 per hour for the Office Junior post.

For part time employees the lowest hourly rate is £5.29 hour for the Executive Assistant post.

The MHS does not have any persons employed under personal contracts.

The MHS employs the services of contract Official Veterinary Surgeons (OVSs) to carry out the enforcement of fresh meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in licensed premises. The MHS has no information of the rates of pay of such contract OVSs employed by private veterinary practices.

Letter from P.W. Greig-Smith to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 December 1997:

In response to your Parliamentary Question on hourly rates of pay, I have been asked to provide you with the relevant figures covering the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Agriculture Science (CEFAS).

Staff in CEFAS are salaried and are not paid by the hour. However, we are able to provide an hourly rate, based on the salary level divided by normal full-time working hours of 37 hours per week.

(a) For full-time employees the lowest hourly rate using the above formula is as follows:

Job Title: Administrative Assistant

Hourly rate: £3.42

(b) For part-time employees in the same grade, the above rate is paid according to the number of hours they work.

(c) Employees in the same grade on personal contracts are also paid at the above rate.

(d) The rates of pay of employees working for companies contracted by CEFAS are not known.

WALES

Minimum Wage

11. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the impact of a minimum wage on inward investment in Wales. [17481]

Mr. Hain: None.

17. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from trade unions in Wales on the minimum wage. [17487]

Mr. Hain: We have received one such representation—from the National Farmers Union of England and Wales.

Youth Assembly

12. Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce proposals to create a youth assembly for Wales to act in an advisory capacity to the main Welsh Assembly. [17482]

Mr. Ron Davies: This is an interesting suggestion that the Assembly itself might wish to consider in its attempt to listen to and represent the whole of Wales.

Welsh Assembly

13. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the standing orders of the Welsh Assembly will be formulated; and if he will make a statement. [17483]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Assembly's first standing orders will be prepared by a multi-party Commission and submitted to me for approval. I propose to appoint the Commission following Royal Assent to the Bill.

14. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals the Government intend to make to accommodate the concerns of the areas that voted no in the referendum on the Welsh Assembly proposal. [17484]

Mr. Ron Davies: I propose to set up an advisory group to assist me in preparing guidance to the Commission which, subject to the provisions of the Government of Wales Bill, will draw up the Assembly's first standing orders. The advisory group will include people from different political parties and individuals with expertise in a range of fields such as business, local government and the voluntary sector. There will be opportunities for organisations and individuals from all parts of Wales to put their views to the advisory group.

24. Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to publish further details of how the Welsh Assembly will operate. [17494]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Government of Wales Bill was published on 27 November 1997. It establishes principles of openness, accountability and integrity under which the Assembly will operate. Standing Orders, prepared by Commissioners appointed by me and representing a wide range of political and other interests in Wales, will provide detailed working arrangements for the Assembly.

10. Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in establishing an independent body to advise on matters relating to the Welsh Assembly. [17480]

Mr. Ron Davies: The White Paper stated that a multi-party Commission would be appointed to draft the Assembly's first standing orders. I propose to appoint that Commission following Royal Assent to the Government of Wales Bill. In the meantime I propose to set up an advisory group to assist me in preparing guidance to the Standing Orders Commission. The National Assembly Advisory Group will consider matters such as: the Assembly's decision-making arrangements, its business procedures, and the responsibilities of Assembly members. There will be opportunities for organisations and individuals around Wales to put their views to the advisory group. The group will include members from different political parties as well as individuals with expertise in a range of fields such as business, local government and the voluntary sector. I am pleased to announce that the Chairman of the National Assembly Advisory Group will be John Elfed Jones CBE. He is currently chairman of International Greetings plc. and a former chairman of the Welsh Language Board and of Welsh Water. He has extensive experience of both the private and public sectors in Wales. I am sure he will make an excellent chairman of the group. I expect to announce the names of the other members of the group shortly.

Private Finance Initiative

15. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his review of the PFI will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [17485]

Mr. Ron Davies: I announced details of my priority PFI schemes together with local authority Pathfinder projects at the Welsh Grand Committee meeting in Mold on 30 June.

Opencast Mining

18. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental effects of opencast mining. [17488]

Mr. Hain: National planning policy on opencast mining is set out in Minerals Planning Guidance Note 3 "Coal Mining and Colliery Spoil Disposal". The guidance provides a policy framework for local authorities and the industry to ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account into assessing proposals for opencast mining. A consultation paper seeking views on opencasting has been distributed widely, inviting comments by 5 December.

All-Wales Agri-environment Scheme

19. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made in developing the all-Wales agri-environmental scheme. [17489]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South (Mr. Jones) on 18 November 1997, Official Report, Welsh Grand Committee, column 42.

Uniform Business Rate

20. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the uniform business rate from Welsh businesses. [17490]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We have received six representations from Welsh businesses regarding the uniform business rate on their own or other properties.

Health Service Waiting Lists

21. Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce hospital waiting lists in Wales. [17491]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Along with Emergency Admissions and ensuring that adequate intensive care facilities are available, cutting waiting lists and reducing waiting times continue to be a key priority for the Government and the NHS in Wales. I have recently announced plans to develop a strategy which will include fresh thinking and a new approach for a more effective means to tackle waiting lists and waiting times and their causes.

I expect the £9.548 million of additional money allocated to the NHS this year, will significantly help to ease the pressures on the health and social care system during the winter period while also restraining the growth in waiting lists and waiting times.

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the trend is in health service waiting lists in Wales; and what target he is working to for the next 12 months. [17493]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Between September 1996 and September 1997 the numbers of people in Wales waiting over six months for their first outpatient appointment have reduced by some 14 per cent., from 9,664 to 8,340 and since September 1994 by 74 per cent. from 31,825.

Those waiting over 12 months in Wales for inpatient or day case admission rose by 28 per cent. between September 1996 and September 1997 from 5,345 to 6,810 but since September 1994 decreased by 2 per cent. from 6,953.

Over 90 per cent. of patients are seen within the times set out in the Patient's Charter, but I am determined to improve on this and recently announced plans to develop a waiting times strategy which will include fresh thinking and a new approach to tackle the problems of waiting lists and waiting times.

Hill and Upland Farming

22. Mr Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce measure to assist the hill and upland farm sector in Wales. [17492]

Mr. Win Griffiths: An announcement on the outcome of the autumn review of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances will be made shortly. In addition, I am working to introduce an all-Wales agri-environment scheme, and to develop the Welsh Food Strategy so that Welsh agriculture is better able to compete in the long term.

Health Service Trusts

25. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the national health service trust reconfiguration exercise. [17495]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I launched the reconfiguration exercise to improve the quality of hospital and community health services in Wales through the establishment of a more effective and efficient structure of NHS Trusts. It is expected that the review will lead to improvements in the planning and delivery of services to patients, the replacement of competition between Trusts and a new collaborative approach and the transfer of considerable resources from management and administration towards direct patient care.

Rare Cattle Breeds

26. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to promote the farming of rare Welsh beef cattle breeds. [17496]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None—The Vaynol and White Park are the only rare breeds of cattle in Wales.

Inward Investment

27. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much inward investment there has been in Wales since 1 May. [17497]

Mr. Hain: In the period 1 May to 31 October 1997, the Welsh Development Agency has recorded inward investment projects which promise 4,939 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of just over £250 million.

Local Government Finance

28. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Local Government Association concerning next year's financial settlement. [17498]

Mr. Ron Davies: I discussed the 1998–99 settlement with the Welsh Local Government Association at the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance meeting of 27 October. I have given careful consideration to the Association's views in making the proposals for the revenue settlement which I announced to the House yesterday.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for LEAs in Wales being able to employ additional teachers; and if he will make a statement. [17949]

Mr. Hain: Staffing levels in schools are a matter for local education authorities and governing bodies in the light of their statutory duties and their perception of local needs and priorities. An additional £50 million is being made available for revenue spending in schools in Wales in 1998–99, the great bulk of which will be included in school budgets.

Smoking

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of NHS spending on treatment for people suffering smoking-related diseases in the most recent available year: and if he will make a statement. [17945]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Smoking contributes to a number of illness and disabilities, the treatment costs for which are not all readily identifiable from estimates of primary and acute service costs.

The last estimate of the cost was compiled for the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in 1993 on research and surveys carried out in the late 1980s and early 1990s. This indicated that the annual cost to the NHS in Wales was in the region of £34 million per annum at 1992–93 prices.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on smoking cessation initiatives in each of the last three years; what his estimate is of expenditure in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [17944]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Responsibility for national health promotion initiatives in Wales, such as smoking cessation initiatives, rests with the Health Promotion Authority for Wales. Expenditure on smoking cessation initiatives is as follows:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £	1996–97 £	1997–98 £
Campaigns	255,825	337,183	214,862	185,620
Pilot projects	154,837	13,213	140,828	—
Research	584	55,291	38,426	46,400
European funded work	—	—	34,542	36,000
Total	411,246	405,687	428,658	268,020

Plans for 1998–99 have yet to be finalised but expenditure is expected to be in the region of £300,000.

The above information relates to initiatives directed solely at smoking. Smoking cessation advice also features strongly in other general health promotion initiatives funded by the Authority.

Vandalism in Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to assist LEAs in combating out-of-hours vandalism in their schools. [17947]

Mr. Hain: £1.25 million has been allocated for school security measures, divided on a formula basis to the 22 LEAs under the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme in 1997–98. I recently announced the successful bids under the New Deals for Schools for which an additional £5.025 million capital funding is available this financial year; over £650,000 was allocated for improvements to school security.

Police Numbers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many police officers there are per head of population in (a) Wales and (b) the North Wales Constabulary area; and if he will make a statement. [17946]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Provisional figures as at 30 September 1997, provided by the Home Office, show that there were 226 officers per 100,000 population for Wales as a whole and 209 officers per 100,000 population in the North Wales police force area.

Windfall Tax (Education Authorities)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much Welsh local education authorities have received from the windfall tax; what that figure is expressed as a per capita figure for Welsh school students; and if he will make a statement. [18209]

Mr. Hain: £5.025 million capital funding for schools has been allocated in 1997–98 to Welsh local authorities from the windfall tax. This equates to £10.12 per capita for Welsh school students. A further £15.076 million per annum will be available each year between 1998–99 and 2001–02.

Government Estate (Sales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what items of the Government estate in Wales are planned to be sold; and if he will make a statement. [18210]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Of the items shown in the recently published National Asset Register as being in the ownership of the Welsh Office there are plans to dispose of the following properties.

Ely Hospital, Cardiff
1 Neville Street, Cardiff
Clinic at Gelli Deg
Mid-Wales Hospital, Talgarth
Brynhyfred Hospital, Forden
Land at Pen Y Groes Health Centre, West Glamorgan
Former ambulance station, Fishguard
Pen y Fal Hospital, Abergavenny
Oakdale Clinic
Former clinic, Meas y Cymmer
Former ambulance station, Bargoed
Land at Llanfrecha Grange, Cwmbran
Pontypool Hospital
Land, Griffithstown
Land, Brynmawr Clinic
Land, Bettws Clinic
Varteg radio mast site
Llynfi Hospital, Swansea
WHCSA Stores, Garngoch, Swansea
Bridgend Hospital
Garth Mor Neath
Druid Hospital, Llangefni
Valley Hospital

Broughton Hospital

St. David's Hospital, Bangor

North Wales Hospital, Denbigh

Groesfynydd Conwy

Land, Blackbridge, Near Holyhead.

In addition surplus land and buildings acquired by agreement or compulsory purchase in connection with Trunk Road improvement schemes are disposed of at the earliest opportunity.

The following NDPBs are involved in land acquisition and disposals as a normal part of their business:

Land Authority for Wales

Welsh Development Agency

Development Board for Rural Wales

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what net savings have been made since 1 May in administration within the health service; if he will itemise these; and what proportion they constitute of the target savings. [18504]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on health authority and Trust savings is not collected in year. Figures for this year will be available from the 1997–98 audited accounts, which will be available on 1 August 1998.

The general efficiency target of 2.7 per cent. that health authorities and trusts have been asked to meet should release £38 million into patient care, including some £1.8 million from trust management costs. In addition, there should be £2.3 million in ongoing savings from the reorganisation of health authorities, and the suspension of the 8th wave of GP Fundholding released £1.9 million immediately.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the level of public funding per year for each training and enterprise council in Wales since they were established. [18657]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is in the following table.

[1] 1990–91 was the development phase of TECs in Wales. The network was completed in April 1991.
[2] All figures are outturns except those for 1997–98 which show the funding initially contracted with each TEC.
[3] The boundaries between Gwent and Mid Glamorgan TECs changed from 1 April 1996 when Gwent took over responsibility for the Rhymney Valley.
[4] As from 1 April 1997 North East Wales TEC and North West Wales TEC merged to form CELTEC.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18896]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is not readily available, and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

It is my policy that major announcements should be made to the House whenever possible and this is usually the case. However there are cases, particularly when Parliament is not sitting, when this is not possible.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was spent on housing benefit for residents for (a) houses in multiple occupation, (b) the rest of the private rented sector, (c) council housing and (d) other social housing; and what was the average cost per person in each case. [16511]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Housing benefit expenditure in Wales

	Estimated expenditure 1996–97 £ million	Average weekly amounts 1996–97 £.p
Rent rebates for council tenants	280	34.20
Rent allowances for private rented sector tenants, (excluding housing associations)	163	46.40
Rent allowances for housing association tenants	78	41.80

Note:
There is no information available specific to tenants of houses in multiple occupation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit claimants have been required to complete form IB50 in relation to the all work test during the last 12 months; how many of these have then been required to attend for a medical examination; and how many claimants have been required to complete form IB50 and/or attend a medical examination on more than one occasion. [17030]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

	October 1996 to September 1997
Number of questionnaires (IB50s) issued	[1]1,465,120
Number of examinations performed	[2]675,424

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support who are also claiming support for mortgage interest payments there are currently in each government office region. [16637]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

GSS region	Income support	Jobseeker's allowance (IB)
London and South East	99,000	39,000
North	16,000	5,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	27,000	8,000
East Midlands	20,000	6,000
East Anglia	9,000	3,000
South West	26,000	8,000
West Midlands	31,000	9,000
North West	46,000	10,000
Wales	23,000	4,000
Scotland	17,000	5,000
Great Britain	313,000	98,000

Note:
The information in the table shows income support/income based jobseeker's allowance claimants with mortgage interest by Government Standard Statistical Region in November 1996.

National Insurance (Actors)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to alter the treatment of actors in respect of class 1 national insurance contributions. [16906]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 20 November 1997, Official Report, column 294.

Pensioners

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the administrative cost is of the disbursement of the extra money for pensioners announced by the Chancellor in his Green Budget, as a proportion of its value. [18975]

Mr. Denham: The information is not yet available. Precise operational arrangements will depend on the Regulations currently being drafted.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of lone parents on income support receive child maintenance; and what is the average amount of child maintenance received (a) by all such parents and (b) by those with non-zero receipt. [18885]

Mr. Keith Bradley: At February 1997, there were 1,020,000[1] lone parents receiving Income Support. Of these, 67,000[1] had maintenance taken into account in their Income Support assessment. In addition, there were 300,000[2] lone parents on Income Support with a full maintenance assessment using the Child Support Agency's collection service, of whom 160,000 had an assessment of more than nil.

Information on the proportion of absent parents actually paying maintenance is not separately available for these cases. But, where payments were made they were retained by the Secretary of State to offset Income Support.

Where maintenance was taken into account in the Income Support assessment, the average weekly payment was £27.76[1]. for those lone parents on Income Support using the Agency's collection service, average child support assessments were £16.60[2]. The average assessment excluding those where the assessment was nil was £32.30[2].

The receipt of regular maintenance is a key part of the Government's strategy for helping lone mothers move off income support into work. We are determined to ensure that the Child Support Agency provides an effective and efficient service in assessing and collecting the amounts of maintenance which are due.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if she will make a statement about her Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18900]

Ms Harman: The Department of Social Security has made 21 minor ministerial announcements by press notice since 1 May, which were not made in the first instance to Parliament; two of these were contained in speeches to outside bodies; three involved press briefings.

No other announcements have been made by the Department by other means.

When Parliament is in session, all significant announcements are made in the first instance to Parliament.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cabinet Office (Information Technology)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contracts for services the Cabinet Office (a) has entered into since 2 May and (b) is proposing to enter into with (i) the Digital Equipment Company and (ii) Microsoft Corporation, or any of their subsidiaries. [18982]

Dr. David Clark: Since 2 May, the Cabinet Office (including the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service) and its agencies have entered into the following contracts:

(i) With the Digital Equipment Company, the Prime Minister's Office has engaged some 4.5 days technical support to re-configure existing Digital equipment.

(ii) With Microsoft, an existing contract for the provision of telephone support services for the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate has been renewed. The Prime Minister's Office has entered into a contract for telephone support of Microsoft products used in No. 10.

In addition, the Central Office of Information, for which I also have responsibility, took out a Microsoft Annual Incident Contract and Technet Licence for support of Microsoft products.

The services of the Digital Equipment Company are being used to design a replacement CAB-E-NET system under the terms of a contract with the Cabinet Office awarded in 1996 after a full and open competition complying with EC and GATT rules, for which Digital are working with Microsoft. This work does not involve a new contract.

No new contracts with either organisation are presently foreseen.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contracts for installing or supplying a replacement to the CAB-E-NET information technology system have been put out to open tender. [18980]

Dr. David Clark: The services of the Digital Equipment Company are being used to design a replacement CAB-E-NET system under the terms of a contract with the Cabinet Office awarded in 1996 after a full and open competition complying with EC and GATT rules.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions Ministers have had with representatives of (a) the Digital Equipment Company or Microsoft Corporation or any of their subsidiaries, regarding the replacement of the CAB-E-NET information technology system. [18981]

Dr. David Clark: Ministers in my Department have had no discussions with representatives of (a) the Digital Equipment Company and (b) Microsoft, or any of their subsidiaries, regarding the replacement of the CAB-E-NET information technology system. Discussions about the design of such a replacement have taken place at official level under a pre-existing contract with Digital.

TREASURY

Tax Self-assessment

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the accuracy on Inland Revenue tax computations after self-assessment by taxpayers. [17230]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 November 1997]: The vast majority of around 3 million calculations so far issued are correct. However, errors can occur if the taxpayer provides incorrect information, or information is not properly keyed into Inland Revenue systems by staff. Inland Revenue offices have quality assurance processes in place to minimise the latter form of error, and these will be enhanced as experience is gained of the new system. Where an error is pointed out to the Inland Revenue, or where one is picked up during the inquiry process, it will be corrected.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the rules used to value North Sea gas for tax purposes. [19570]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government intend to introduce legislation which will ensure that the rules used to value North Sea gas for tax purposes will continue to operate in the way that the industry and the Inland Revenue have until now applied them. This will remove some doubts, arising from recent legal advice, about the current interpretation of the rules. The legislation will be included in the next Finance Bill and will apply to all gas disposals which have to be valued, including disposals which have already taken place. The Inland Revenue is issuing a Press Release today which contains details of the changes and draft legislation on which it will be consulting the North Sea oil and gas industry.

National Assets Register

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those assets listed in the National Assets Register which are located in the City of Norwich. [18148]

Mr. Darling: The National Asset Register was put together within five months, in order to meet the Government's promise to produce it by the end of November, from the data currently available to departments. And, as a result, the information is at a relatively high level of aggregation which does not easily allow a full geographic analysis to be undertaken. However, in order to increase openness and accountability, the Government will consider how to improve the information on the assets owned by the nation.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Railtrack (Communications)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if dedicated telephone links exist between all Railtrack zonal controls; and if he will make a statement. [18206]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate understands that all Zonal Controls are connected to the internal railway telephone system and have separate BT numbers. In addition, after the Ais Gill accident on 31 January 1995, the telephone access between the controls was enhanced by the installation of a number of auto diallers and emergency lines at some controls including York and Manchester. A further enhancement is currently being implemented by Railtrack so that there will be designated lines at each control centre for exclusive use by adjacent control centres.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if NRN radio is available for each Railtrack control office. [18205]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate understands that all Railtrack Control Offices, except one located at Derby, have direct access to the National Radio Network. The Derby control is a satellite office of the Birmingham control and there is a direct hot line between the offices. HM Railway Inspectorate is satisfied with these arrangements.

Rail Services (Safety)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to strengthen safety measures in respect of the provision of rail services. [18149]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is the safety regulator for the railways and advises Ministers on the need for measures to be taken to strengthen existing requirements and arrangements. Ministers expect the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive to ensure that safety standards are maintained, and improved where necessary.

Nuclear Fuel (Transport)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations exist covering the rail transport of mixed oxide plutonium-based nuclear fuel through the Channel Tunnel; and what safety and emergency planning exercises have been conducted in respect of accidents involving trains carrying radioactive material through the tunnel. [18520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The rules of Eurotunnel do not permit mixed oxide nuclear fuel to be transported through the Channel Tunnel.

Transporters of radioactive material within the United Kingdom must have contingency plans in place to respond to accidents. The United Kingdom Nuclear Industry

Road/Rail Emergency Plan (NIREP) has been established to enable an immediate response from the nearest participating organisation to a transport incident involving radioactive material: the plan is exercised annually. Eurotunnel also holds annual exercises to test its emergency procedures which would apply in the event of any incident in the Channel Tunnel. Eurotunnel's express permission must be sought before any shipment of radioactive material is transported via the Channel Tunnel and it may obtain advice/assistance via NIREP should radioactive material be present on a train involved in an accident.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amendments the United Kingdom proposed to the draft code covering the safe carriage of nuclear materials on board ships, as adopted by the International Maritime Organisation; and what mechanisms his Department has in place to monitor the application of the code to the sea transport of nuclear materials to and from the United Kingdom. [18405]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on board Ships (INF Code) was adopted by the Assembly of the International Maritime Organisation in 1993. The Assembly adopted amendments to the Code last month. The United Kingdom participated fully in the negotiations leading to the adoption both of the original Code and these amendments. While compliance with the INF Code is currently voluntary, UK registered ships engaged in the trade have documents of compliance issued by my Department's Marine Safety Agency. UK companies involved in transporting materials covered by the INF Code use ships complying with the Code. The UK is currently participating in work to make compliance with the Code mandatory. This will enhance our enforcement powers.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contribution his Department made to the preparation of the International Atomic Energy Agency Safety Series Number 6 (SS6) Regulations on the transport of radioactive materials; and what review he has undertaken of the application of the regulations to the air transport of mixed oxide fuel. [18406]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Officials from my Department participated fully in the meetings of the International Atomic Energy Agency during the development of Safety Series Number 6, Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material 1985 Edition (As Amended 1990). These multi-modal recommendations provide the basis for the mandatory requirements for air transport as incorporated into the current edition of the International Civil Aviation Organisation's Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air. The Department similarly supported the IAEA's continuous review and revision procedures leading to the latest edition of "Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material 1996 Edition", now known as Safety Standards Series No. ST-1. The transport of radioactive material in large quantity by air, including that of mixed oxide fuel, was considered in great depth and detail during the development of ST-1. The UK will continue to contribute to future regulatory developments through both the IAEA and the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Housing

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department and government regional offices have undertaken of the capacity of urban areas to accommodate extra housing; and what were its findings. [18603]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department and the Government Offices have commissioned and funded a number of projects on brownfield sites and urban capacity, most of which will report next year.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much land for new housing is currently identified as available by local planning authorities in each (a) region and (b) county. [18602]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is held by local planning authorities and not held centrally. Local authorities are required by PPG3 to maintain a continuous five year supply of land for housing.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has given local planning authorities about the size of windfall sites to be included in assumptions about future housing land supply in (a) development plans and (b) housing land availability studies. [18605]

Mr. Raynsford: Guidance on this matter is contained in Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 (PPG3). A copy of this document is held in the House of Commons Library.

Cycling

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses to his consultation document on developing an integrated transport system made reference to cycling. [18845]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The closing date for responses to the consultation on an integrated transport policy was 14 November. We have received a large number of responses which we are in the process of analysing. It is too early to give details of representations on individual subject areas although a number of respondents have mentioned cycling.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his timetable for developing a national cycling strategy. [18846]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The National Cycling Strategy was launched in July 1996. It aims to double the number of trips by bicycle by 2002, and double them again by 2012. My Department, along with many other partner organisations, is supporting the Strategy. Work to implement it is being co-ordinated by the National Cycling Forum, which I chair. A first annual report on progress will be published before Christmas.

Rental Housing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage the building of properties within the Greater London Authority area for low cost rent. [18587]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government recognise that the building of properties for low cost rent within London raises particular issues because of the scarcity of land for new social housing developments and the high cost of acquisition in what is a global property market. The Revised Strategic Planning Guidance for London Planning Authorities (RPG3) and the proposed revisions to circular 13/96 which details how the delivery of affordable housing may be assisted through negotiations with developers, both send out a clear message that the Government wish to ensure greater allocation of land for low cost rent properties in the capital than has been provided in recent years.

The main mechanism for the delivery of affordable housing is through the Housing Corporation of Local Authority Social Housing Grants. In 1997/98. some £161 million representing 65 per cent. of the Housing Corporation's London Region programme, is being directed to new build housing for rent.

Our early action to release capital receipts from council; house sales has injected an additional £53 Million into London's housing in 1997–98. Allocations for 1998–99 will be announced shortly. A significant proportion of this will be used by the London Authorities in enabling the provision of new or rehabilitated social housing partnership with registered social landlords.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the gross cost to public funds of a reduction in housing association rents of (a) 10 per cent., (b) nine per cent., (c) eight per cent., (d) seven per cent., (e) six per cent., (f) five per cent., (g) four per cent., (h) three per cent., (i) two per cent. and (j) one per cent.; and what would be the cost net of savings in (i) housing benefits and (ii) public expenditure linked to the RPI. [18595]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no powers under which the Government could impose a general reduction in housing association rents. The calculations below are on the hypothetical assumption that the cuts in rent could be achieved and that housing associations would be fully compensated for their loss of revenue. The estimated gross cost and the cost net of savings in Housing Benefit are as shown. The figures represent the annual costs calculated on the basis of average housing association rents in 1996–97. The Department does not have a model for calculating the RPI-related savings in public expenditure arising from reductions in housing association rents.

Reduction in rents per cent.	Cost of compensating HA revenue loss £ million per annum	Net cost after savings in Housing Benefit £ million per annum
10	298	86
9	269	77
8	239	68
7	209	60
6	179	51
5	149	42
4	119	34
3	90	25
1	30	9

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the gross cost to public funds of a reduction in local authority rents of (a) 20 per cent., (b) 19 per cent., (c) 18 per cent., (d) 17 per cent., (e) 16 per cent., (f) 15 per cent., (g) 14 per cent., (h) 13 per cent., (i) 12 per cent. and (j) 11 per cent.: and what would be the cost net of savings in (i) housing benefits and (ii) public expenditure linked to the RPI. [18596]

Mr. Raynsford: A reduction in Guideline Rent in 1998–99 for Housing Revenue Account local authorities in England would have the following estimated effects:

Present value (discounting to 1996–97) of effects from 1998–99 to 2027/28 1996–97 prices discounting to 1996–97

Guideline Rent reduction in 1998–99 (per cent.)	Loss of gross rental income, (£ million)	Saving in rent rebates, (£ million)	Saving in public expenditure linked to the RPI, (£ million)	Net public expenditure cost, (£ million)
11	6,402	4,816	1,476	110
12	6,984	5,244	1,610	130
13	7,565	5,675	1,744	146
14	8,147	6,104	1,878	165
15	8,729	6,527	2,012	190
16	9,311	6,954	2,146	211
17	9,893	7,379	2,280	234
18	10,475	7,799	2,415	261
19	11,057	8,222	2,549	286
20	11,639	8,643	2,683	313

Figures in the table have been rounded to the nearest £1 million. The calculations are derived from LAMOD, the Department's model for estimating the public expenditure effects of a change in Guideline Rent policy for local authorities. The results from LAMOD are sensitive to assumptions which are kept under continuous review.

Social Housing

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has produced of the need for social housing in each (a) region and (b) county. [18609]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has not in the past produced estimates of the need for social housing for either (a) counties or (b) regions. We are considering the scope for more detailed regional analysis of housing requirements including social housing needs.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link (Compensation)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to notify households likely to be eligible for the exceptional compensation payable as a result of Channel Tunnel Rail Link blight on their properties; and if he will make a statement. [18625]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The arrangements for the Scheme of Redress for Exceptional Hardship were advertised in a range of local newspapers selected to cover the various route options. In addition, details were sent to Members of Parliament, local authorities and Citizens Advice Bureaux for the areas concerned. As a reminder prominent newspaper advertisements have recently been re-published. Furthermore, the initial announcement of the Scheme attracted wide coverage including on local television news.

Thorne and Hatfield Moors

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received concerning the proposed de-notification of SSSI status on Thorne and Hatfield Moors, indicating how many were (a) supportive of the proposal and (b) opposed to the proposal. [18597]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State has received 725 representations against English Nature's proposals to de-notify parts of Thorne and Hatfield Moors Sites of Special Scientific Interest. There have been no letters of support to date. On 2 December English Nature's Council decided not to proceed with the de-notification.

Rail Operators (Fines)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much rail operators have been fined for failing to deliver an adequate service in the last 12 months. [18709]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator has imposed financial penalties totalling £350,000 on rail operators for failing to meet his standards for the National Rail Enquiry Service (NRES).

The Franchising Director has imposed financial penalties totalling £141,000 on two train operating companies for trains being run with fewer seats than required under the franchise agreements. The Franchising Director has also operated financial incentive regimes under franchise agreements which reward or penalise operators according to performance compared with historical benchmarks. Details of these appear in the Franchising Director's quarterly bulletins and in his Annual Report which are in the Library of the House.

Commuting

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on disincentives to commuting journeys in respect of his integrated transport strategy. [18876]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The closing date for responses to the consultation on an integrated transport policy was 14 November. We have received a large number of responses which we are in the process of analysing. It is too early to give details of representations on individual subject areas although a number of respondents have mentioned specific journey purposes including commuting in their responses. The importance of encouraging "Green Commuting" was a major theme in the regional consultation meetings held to discuss the consultation document.

A full report on the consultation exercise will be published with the White Paper.

Red Routes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the present mileage within the Greater London Authority area of the red route system. [18965]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The length of the red route network is 315 miles.

Building Control Inspectors

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measures are in place for the monitoring and control of approved building control inspectors from the private sector; and if he will make a statement; [18871]

(2) what measures are in place for the monitoring and control of local authority building control inspectors. [18870]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Local authority building control officers are answerable to the chief officers of the authorities for which they work, and through them to elected members. As regards private sector approved inspectors, the appointing body also has the power to withdraw approval. In the case of corporate bodies, approval is given by the Secretary of State, and, in the case of individuals, it is given by the Construction Industry Council. I am currently consulting the Local Government Association, the Construction Industry Council and the Association of Corporate Approved Inspectors on ways of securing consistent building control standards and better conditions for competition across the public and private sectors of building control.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet deputations from local authorities to discuss his provisional capping and grant settlement. [18976]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Yes. My Department wrote to local authorities on Tuesday 2 December with details of the provisional local government finance settlement 1998–99 and set out the arrangements we propose for discussions on our proposals.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has offered local authorities on millennium compliance and its cost. [18887]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Each local authority is responsible for ensuring its own millennium compliance. Authorities have access to high-quality advice on this issue, through the Local Government Management Board and other professional bodies. In addition, the Government have published best practice guidance on millennium compliance. We have taken the financial implications of millennium compliance into account in the proposed 1998–99 local government financial settlement.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total cost of millennium compliance to local government. [19202]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has not itself made an estimate of the total cost of millennium compliancy. The Local Government Association's estimate of the cost, for 1998–99, of information technology adaption for the year 2000 was taken into account in the Local Government Finance provisional settlement which was announced to the House on Tuesday 2 December.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Acts of Parliament require him to call in planning appeals for proposed developments involving more than 150 houses or flats for his own determination. [19036]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no statutory requirement for my right hon. Friend to recover planning appeals for his own determination. Under paragraph 3 of schedule 6 to the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, my right hon. Friend may, if he thinks fit, direct that a planning appeal will be determined by him rather than by an appointed person.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many planning applications for proposed developments involving more than 150 houses or flats were (a) approved and (b) rejected on appeal in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97; [19035]

(2) how many planning appeals for proposed developments involving more than 150 houses or flats were called in for his or his predecessor's own determination in each of the years (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97 [19038]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision of information on Planning Appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the Inspectorate's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 4 December 1997.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Questions about planning appeal decisions in 1994–95 to 1996–97 for proposed developments involving more than 150 houses or flats.

Our records, for those appeals where the number of dwellings were indicated, show the following:

Planning appeals involving more than 150 houses or flats

Year	Allowed	Rejected
1994–95	2	8
1995–96	3	3
1996–97	3	5

Task Force on Cleaner Vehicles

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Minister for the Environment was informed that Mr. Keith Taylor, Chief Executive of Esso, had been appointed to the Government's task force on cleaner vehicles. [19151]

Mr. Meacher: The members of the Task Force's steering group were nominated by the Minister for Transport, in close consultation with the Science, Energy and Industry Minister and officials from the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and Department of Trade and Industry. I, along with other relevant DETR Ministers, have been kept fully informed of developments in appointing members of the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force.

Regional Planning Guidance

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advice of the West Midlands Regional Forum of Local Authorities on housing provision; and if he will issue an amendment to Regional Planning Guidance II. [19508]

Mr. Caborn: The Forum is to be congratulated on the comprehensive nature of its advice and its involvement of the House Builders Federation and the Council for the Protection of Rural England in its formulation.

We have concluded that further Regional Planning Guidance on housing provision in the West Midlands is required. We expect to issue this early in the new year. I will write to the hon. Members at that time and place a copy of the amendment in the Library of the House.

We have concluded that provision should be made for 335,000 dwellings in the region between 1991 and 2011 including replacements and conversions to be redistributed as set out below. This is broadly in line with the advice received from the Forum but we take the view that the metropolitan area has the capacity to make slightly higher provision than they proposed. This would have benefits both for urban regeneration and protection of the countryside. In amending the guidance we will want to set out clear policies that authorities should pursue in their development plans to increase the amount of housing on previously developed land, to make provision for affordable housing and to ensure sustainable locations for housing development within transport corridors.

Annual average of housing provisions for west midlands region 1991–2011

Speed Cameras

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the speed cameras on the motorway system are active over a 24 hour weekday period. [18844]

Mr. Michael: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available centrally. The use made of speed cameras on motorways is an operational matter for each individual chief officer of police to decide, taking account of local priorities and resources. It is important to bear in mind that, even when the cameras are not taking photographs, their signs and presence are influencing driver behaviour. It is the driver's perceived risk of detection which makes him comply with the speed limit now. Prosecution may make him do so in future. The police do not want to detect and prosecute all speeding motorists. Their aim is to achieve driver compliance with speed limits with the minimum necessary prosecutions.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have taken place in West Yorkshire in 1997 as a result of information taken from speed cameras (a) on the motorway systems and (b) on trunk roads. [18843]

Mr. Michael: I have been asked to reply.

Information broken down by motorway systems and trunk roads is not collected centrally but I understand from the Chief Constable that provisional figures for West Yorkshire Police for 1997 so far indicate that some 9,400 offences have been detected by automatic cameras and dealt with either by fixed penalty or prosecution. Of these, I understand that some 5,300 arose from speed cameras on the motorway systems and 4,100 on trunk roads. Official, verified statistics for police action against speeding offenders detected by automatic cameras in England and Wales for 1997 will be published in the usual way next year.

Bathing Water Quality

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will announce the United Kingdom Bathing Water Compliance results for 1997; and if he will make a statement. [19301]

Mr. Meacher: The quality of UK bathing waters fell slightly this year, with 88 per cent. of identified waters meeting EC mandatory coliform bacteria standards. This compares with 90 per cent. of UK bathing waters meeting the standards in 1996. The proportion of bathing waters complying with the standards in England and Wales remained the same at 89 per cent.

The UK results are around the average for the EU but I want us to be among the leaders. We will only get there by urgent and targeted action on the small proportion of bathing waters which fail persistently. No Member State achieves 100 per cent. compliance consistently but I shall not be satisfied until we are achieving close to 100 per cent. regularly. There is still some way to go.

It is very disappointing that compliance with the Directive is not better than last year, as more improvement schemes have come on stream.

The results in the North-West are especially poor, with only half the bathing waters there passing the mandatory bacteria standards, compared with 61 per cent. last year. This is particularly disappointing when major bathing water improvement schemes have been completed in the area. I am asking North West Water to work with the Environment Agency as a matter of urgency to help to sort out the remaining problems, particularly in the Blackpool, Fylde coast area.

I am also writing to the Chairman of the Environment Agency for a detailed report on the prospects for compliance and the action needed on persistent failures. I know that only last month the Agency warned water companies that delays in programming major investments were putting Britain at risk of failing to meet EC deadlines for improved sewage treatment under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive. In addition to speeding up work to implement the UWWTD, I want to see concerted action by the Agency and the water companies to identify the causes of failure of bathing waters under the Bathing Water Directive, and give priority to tackling them in order to raise the level of compliance. However there is also good news in the results I am announcing today. I am encouraged to see that 180 UK bathing waters reached the higher guideline standard this year which is needed for a "Blue Flag" and I hope more local authorities than have done so in the past will be encouraged to apply for this prestigious award.

Furthermore, 397 is a record number of bathing waters meeting the required standard and nearly two-thirds of the 50 failures in England and Wales missed compliance by only one of the 20 samples. Some regions performed particularly well this year and Anglian region deserve to be congratulated for achieving 100 per cent. compliance.

The main results for the United Kingdom are summarised below. This information, together with details of English and Welsh bathing waters, will be placed in the Libraries of the House today. This will be supplemented by a report with more detailed results in due course.

Results for 1996 are in brackets.

[1] Northumbrian and Yorkshire, South West and Wessex Regions were amalgamated in 1993, results are recorded separately here to enable comparison to be made with earlier years.

[2] South West has one less bathing water this year due to engineering works on the cliffs at Beacon Cove between May and August, making sampling impossible. Beacon Cover is, therefore, not included in compliance assessment for 1997.

Coastguard

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on which date Ministers approved the five-year strategy for Her Majesty's Coastguard. [19203]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers approved, for consultation, the five year strategy on 13 November. The announcement was made on 17 November. Further discussions are underway. The first consultation meeting with the Trade Unions was on 24 November.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Portsmouth South, sent on 18 September concerning Miss Norford of Southsea. [18519]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I wrote to the hon. Member on 28 November.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the BMA's report on the therapeutic uses of cannabis; and if he will make a statement. [18560]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend and I were sent copies of the report by the British Medical Association on 17 November with an invitation to comment, and we are currently studying the recommendations which relate to Home Office responsibilities in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. When we respond, I shall place a copy of the reply in the Library.

Special Constables

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has completed his consultation exercise on the provision of compensation for special constables injured in the course of their duty; and when he expects to introduce the regulations recommended in the report of the Working Group on the Special Constabulary. [18562]

Mr. Michael: Proposals for new regulations were endorsed by the Working Group on 20 November and we are about to begin formal consultation with the police and local authority association. Subject to these consultations, we propose to implement the proposals as part of a comprehensive new set of regulations for the Special Constabulary. This will take account of other recommendations by the Working Group and we are aiming to lay the Regulations before Parliament before the Summer recess.

I have placed a copy of the consultation paper in the Library.

Slot Machines

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the increase in slot machine turnover from his decision to allow the £2 coin to be used as a stake. [18272]

Mr. George Howarth: Following a recommendation from the Gaming Board, the maximum stake for a single game on gaming machines was increased from 25p to 30p from 1 October 1997. Larger coins can already be used for multiple play.

We do not have any estimates of the effect of the £2 coin on machine turnover. It is unlikely to be in use in amusement-with-prizes and jackpot gaming machines until next year.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many slot machines are currently operated on premises licensed to sell alcoholic beverages; and what estimate he has made of the total annual turnover of these machines. [18273]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures kept centrally do not categorise gaming machines by different types of premises.

The British Amusement Catering Trades Association (BACTA), the trade association representing the gaming machines industry, has recently undertaken a study in conjunction with the Henley Centre. This suggests that at the end of 1996 there were around 75,000 amusement-with-prizes machines (maximum prize £10) in public houses in Great Britain; 700 jackpot machines (maximum prize £250) in casinos; 31,300 jackpot machines in members clubs registered under the Gaming Act 1968; and 25,000 machines in bingo clubs, the majority with £10 prizes.

BACTA estimates that in 1996 the amount spent in public houses was about £2.6 billion, with 80 per cent. returned as prizes. Total gross turnover on machines in the above premises is estimated at approximately £5 billion, with about £4 billion paid back to the players.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the organisations and individuals who have made submissions to the review of the detention of asylum seekers; and when he expects to (a) announce and (b) publish the findings of the review; [17419]

(2) what is the timetable for the inter-departmental review of the detention of asylum seekers. [17461]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At the beginning of September, I wrote to 12 non-governmental organisations inviting their comments on the major policy areas covered by the detention review. Submissions have been received from the following groups:

United Nations High Commission for Refugees

Amnesty International

Immigration Advisory Service

The Law Society

The Refugee Council

Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants

Churches Commission for Racial Justice

Refugee Legal Centre

Charter 87

Immigration Law Practitioners Association

A number of other bodies have put forward submissions on this issue, both before and during the review.

Consideration is now being given to the comments received. I expect to be able to announce the results in the new year.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what issues relating to asylum are currently under review; which Government Departments are involved; and what are the terms of reference of each review group. [17420]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All the issues relating to asylum are under review, especially the procedures for dealing with asylum claims and the means of supporting asylum seekers while their claims are being assessed. The Government Departments which have provided members of the study team are the Home Office; Department of the Environment, Transport and Regions; Department of Health; Department of Social Security; and the Cabinet Office. Departments represented on the Steering Group which is overseeing the study team's work, in addition to those already listed, are the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; the Lord Chancellor's Department; Department for Education and Employment; and Her Majesty's Treasury.

The terms of reference are: to carry out a scrutiny of the arrangements for dealing with and providing for asylum seekers to assess how these might be improved to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the arrangements taken as a whole, and to identify ways of minimising costs across government with a view to containing those costs well within the total provision for asylum seekers in existing Departmental programmes. In particular:

to evaluate whether the existing allocation of responsibilities between Departments for processing and provision is the most conducive to efficient and cost-effective management and to recommend any options for improvement; to recommend other changes to structures, incentives and information flow to enhance the overall efficiency of systems of processing and provision; to develop costed proposals to reduce significantly both the time taken from the beginning to the end of the asylum process and the number of unfounded applications; and to make recommendations on the most cost effective arrangements for providing for asylum seekers throughout the process, taking account of the impact of those arrangements on the numbers of applicants for asylum and the likely take-up.

We are also conducting internal reviews of detention policy and of the immigration and asylum appeals system.

Motoring Offences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to review the sentencing procedures for lesser motoring offences resulting in (a) deaths and (b) injury not taken into consideration in sentencing. [18589]

Mr. Michael: The Government have no plans to review sentencing procedure for lower level motoring offences resulting in death and injury. Sentencing procedure in individual cases is a matter for the courts. A range of offences exist to deal with those who commit motoring offences, with severe penalties available for serious offences. For example, causing death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs and causing death by dangerous driving carry maximum penalties of ten years' imprisonment.

The North Report in 1988 considered, but rejected, the creation of a new offence of causing death by careless driving. It concluded that it would be wrong to visit on a driver severe penalties for the tragic consequences of an act which amounted only to carelessness.

Sex and Violence (Offenders)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders convicted of offences including (a) sex and (b) violence were sentenced to periods of imprisonment of over four years in the last year for which figures are available. [18847]

Mr. Michael: For England and Wales in 1996 (latest available), of the 4,426 offenders convicted of indictable sexual offences, 635 were sentenced to periods of immediate custody of over four years, of whom 17 recorded life sentences.

Similarly, for the indictable offence group of violence against the person, 30,011 offenders were convicted, of whom 944 were sentenced to periods of imprisonment of over four years, including 267 life sentences.

Crime Victims

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the current policy and practice of the police in providing the media with the names of victims of crimes. [17933]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The Home Office is currently considering whether new central guidance to the police on relations with the media would be valuable. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has been asked for its views. Currently, the ACPO Media Advisory Group advises chief officers that, wherever possible, they should consider the wishes of the victim in deciding whether to publicise a crime and the identity of the victim and respect the victim's wishes if he or she does not wish his or her personal details to be given any publicity. Some police forces, as a matter of policy, do not release the names of victims. I understand that Greater Manchester Police issue guidance to all their officers to the effect that the names of victims should not be released to the press without their consent.

Firearms Acts

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) has been the total cost of compensation paid to date and (b) estimate he has made of that to be paid to the end of 1997–98 under the Firearms Acts. [19102]

Mr. Michael: As at 28 November, £25.4 million had been paid out in compensation. The current estimate of compensation payments in 1997–98 is £115 million. This figure will be reviewed in the new year in the light of further progress on the processing of payments.

Community Penalties

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has undertaken on the level of the public's satisfaction with the use of community penalties; and if he will make a statement. [18637]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 December 1997]: The Home Office has not itself recently undertaken research designed to investigate the level of public satisfaction with the use of community penalties. But studies such as that by Professor Hough published in the Howard Journal of Criminal Justice (Vol. 35 No. 3 1996) confirm that these penalties are not as widely understood or valued as they should be.

Rapid Draw Lotteries

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from charities regarding the introduction of rapid draw lotteries. [18811]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 3 December 1997]: As at 1 December, we have received representations from 22 charities; 20 of these stand to benefit from the introduction of Pronto and two do not wish to be associated with it.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to establish the national accreditation bodies for youth organisations recommended by Lord Cullen. [19000]

Mr. Michael: The recommendation for the national accreditation of clubs and groups voluntarily attended by children and young people is under consideration by the Government.

Parole Board Panels

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter the composition of Parole Board panels considering the release of mandatory life sentence adult prisoners. [19593]

Ms Quin: The Parole Board is facing a continuing and significant increase in its work load. A very important element of that overall work load is the task of advising Ministers on the progression and release of adult life sentence prisoners convicted of murder. At present, the panels considering these cases comprise four members of the Board, always including a judge and a psychiatrist.

By contrast, the panels that consider the release of discretionary life sentence prisoners and those sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure, and those that decide or advise on the release of long term determinate sentence prisoners, comprise only three members. The additional member in mandatory cases incurs costs to the Board of around £25,000 annually, and complicates the listing of cases, leading to delay.

I am satisfied, on the advice of both the current Chair and recently retired Chairman of the Parole Board, that the size of mandatory panels can now safely be reduced from four to three, without risking in any way the quality of advice which Ministers receive. I have asked that these panels should continue to include both a judge and a psychiatrist.

Schengen Acquis

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of Stat for the Home Department if he will make available to Parliament the full Schengen acquis. [19720]

Mr. Straw: The Government wish to make the fullest possible information available to Parliament in connection with the ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam. The key Schengen Treaties which form the framework for Schengen co-operation are available in the Library. We have been informed that Schengen states have now finalised a list of documents which, for the purposes of incorporation, are to be considered formally as the acquis. Once we receive the full set of papers which comprise the acquis, we shall make them, subject to the usual understanding about confidentiality, available to Parliament.

Lunar House Staff

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently based at Lunar House; and what was the number last year at the most convenient comparative date. [18396]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The total number of staff who were working in Lunar House as at 28 November 1997 was 1,628.

A comparable figure for the corresponding period in 1996 is not available as historical staff records are not maintained on a building specific basis.

Police (Video Cameras)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls apply to the use of hand-held video cameras by the police. [18914]

Mr. Michael: The use of hand-held video cameras is an operational matter and the decision to use them and in which circumstances comes within the responsibility of individual chief officers.

Guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations, including cameras, were issued by the Home Office in 1984. They make it clear that a senior officer should give authority for the equipment to be used and that he should first satisfy himself that its use will not involve any unwarrantable intrusion of privacy and is fully justified in all the circumstances of the operation in question.

Human Rights Convention

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for sentencing in England and Wales of the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights. [17703]

Mr. Michael: The Human Rights Bill is designed to give people direct access in the United Kingdom to the rights and freedoms guaranteed under the European Convention on Human Rights. After incorporation, people who are subject to a sentencing decision will be able to argue in our domestic courts that the decision is not compatible with the Convention, whereas at present, they are able to argue the point only before the European Court of Human Rights.

MI5

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time equivalent staff are dedicated to supporting the telephone-tapping function of MI5. [18698]

Mr. Straw: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to discuss operational matters relating to the work of the security and intelligence services.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has seen the files held on him by MI5. [18696]

Mr. Straw: I have not asked to see, nor have I seen, any file which the Security Service may hold on me.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards are in place to ensure that MI5 does not operate outside its legal remit. [18699]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service falls under my authority and I take a close interest in its work, by regular meetings with the Director General and otherwise. The Permanent Secretary and other officials in my Department deal regularly and directly with the Service across the range of its activities, and ensure that I am aware of any significant developments. I receive, annually, reports on the service's performance and plans, and I act as joint sponsor of the Single Intelligence Vote under which the Service is funded. Applications for warrants to intercept communications or interfere with property are submitted to me and are reviewed by independent Commissioners whose annual reports are published.

Complaints from individuals about the Security Service are investigated by an independent Tribunal which, together with the Commissioner, has full access to Security Service documents and information which they need. The service's accounts are scrutinised by the National Audit Office and its overall policy, administration and finance are subject to scrutiny by the Intelligence and Security Committee to which I give evidence from time to time. And finally—but very importantly—the Service has extensive internal procedures to ensure that its operations are properly authorised and comply with statutory requirements.

British Telecom

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many current British Telecom employees have been required to sign the Official Secrets Act 1911. [18695]

Mr. Straw: It is a matter for British Telecom to ensure that their employees comply with all legislation relevant to their work.

Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times those subject to investigation under (a) Article 7 and (b) Article 8 of the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (i) have been informed and (ii) have not been informed that they have been subject to investigation; [18701]

(2) how many requests have been (a) received and from whom and (b) made and to whom under Article 6 of the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters; [18700]

(3) how many video conferences have taken place under Article 12 of the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. [18684]

Mr. Straw: None. The draft Convention to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 39, is presently under negotiation.

MI6 and GCHQ

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department contributes to the budget of (a) MI6 and (b) GCHQ; and if he will make a statement. [18682]

Mr. Straw: No. The budgets of all the security and intelligence agencies are funded from the Single Intelligence Vote (Class XVIII Vote 2).

Official Secrets Act 1911

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many United Kingdom citizens have signed the Official Secrets Act 1911 since 1967. [18694]

Mr. Michael: Certain provisions of the Official Secrets Act 1911 were repealed by the Official Secrets Act 1989, which came into effect on 1 March 1990. Prior to that date, it had been the practice to require Government Ministers and members of the Civil Service and of the armed forces to sign a declaration certifying that they were aware of the provisions of the legislation. Information about the numbers of those who signed such declarations is not available centrally.

Current practice is to draw the relevant provisions of the Official Secrets Acts to the attention of those most likely to have access to the sorts of information covered by them.

The provisions of the Official Secrets Acts apply, and have always applied, irrespective of whether any formal declaration has been signed.

Telecommunications (Interception)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the scope of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 to cover automatic call tracing. [18915]

Mr. Straw: In my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 441, I said that it was my intention to introduce, in due course, legislation to bring interception on private networks into the statutory framework. Whether we should take that opportunity to introduce further measures relating to interception of communication; and, if so, what those measures should comprise, is currently under consideration.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure cordless telephones can be subject to legal interception only by means of a warrant. [18908]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 441.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that all residents within the Metropolitan Police District are treated equally for the purposes of consultation on proposals to create a new police authority. [18644]

Mr. Michael: The Green Paper 'New Leadership for London—the Government's proposals for a Greater London Authority' was published in July 1997 and included details of the proposals for a new police authority to cover the Metropolitan Police District (MPD). During the period of consultation, which ended on 24 October, the Green Paper was freely available to any interested individuals or organisations, including residents of the MPD. The Government Office for London received over 1,200 written responses, including ones from Hertfordshire County Council, the Boroughs of Broxbourne and Reigate and Banstead. I recently met members of the Outer London Metropolitan Police Group, which represents the interests of those districts which are not London boroughs, to hear their views and discuss the proposals. All comments and written responses will be taken into account.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated average annual payment which will be made to private sector contractors for each child detained in a secure training centre; and if he will make a statement. [18642]

Mr. Michael: It would be inappropriate to publish the average payment figure to contractors while there are contracts yet to be awarded. The Government will ensure that secure training centres offer good value for money through normal contract requirements for "best value".

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Torture Equipment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those European Union countries which (a) prohibit and (b) limit the export or transhipment of torture equipment. [17313]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: It is difficult to define torture equipment. Many items of equipment can be mis-used for the purposes of torture. We are in the process of consulting our European Union partners in relation to our intention during our forthcoming Presidency to encourage them to impose similar restrictions to those that we announced on 28 July, 1997, Official Report, 28 July 1997, columns 65-66, on the export and transhipment of equipment where there is evidence that it has been used for torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The picture is not yet complete, but it is already clear that there is no uniformity of practice within the Union. Some partners control equipment of the type described in our announcement, while others do not.

Overseas Staff (Telephone Numbers)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the Private Office of the Under-Secretary of State does not have the out-of-hours telephone number of the Deputy High Commissioner in Bombay. [18527]

Mr. Fatchett: It is our practice not to disclose the home telephone numbers of our staff serving overseas. All of our overseas posts operate a Duty Officer system which enables those who need to transact business urgently with our staff outside normal working hours to do so.

Ottawa Treaty

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom plans to ratify the Ottawa Land Mines Treaty; and what action Her Majesty's Government plan to take to encourage non-signing countries to ratify the treaty. [18936]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On ratification of the Ottawa Convention, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell), on 24 November 1997, Official Report, columns 398-99. We shall continue to take every opportunity to urge as many countries as possible to sign the Ottawa Convention and will press for complementary action, to promote a global ban on anti-personnel land mines, in international fora, including the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva.

The Late Mr. and Mrs. Wigham (Egypt)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate the circumstances in which the personal effects and valuables of the late Mr. and Mrs. Wigham of Swanley, Kent were not returned by the Egyptian authorities; what action the British Embassy in Cairo has been taking to secure their immediate return; and if he will issue a statement. [19003]

Mr. Fatchett: As soon as the Embassy heard that valuables were missing they asked the Egyptian authorities urgently to locate them. They have not yet found and the Embassy continue to press. The authorities released the luggage to the Embassy on 2 December. With Embassy assistance, the insurers will return it to the family immediately.

GCHQ

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) civilian and (b) non-civilian staff have been employed within GCHQ for each year from 1980. [18916]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is not our policy to provide detailed information on the staffing of the Intelligence and Security Services.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if GCHQ is required to apply for warrants each time it wishes to intercept overseas telegrams. [18690]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ obtains a warrant wherever necessary as required by the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1987 GCHQ has been involved in the surveillance of party political conferences. [18702]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Intelligence Services Act 1994 requires the Director of GCHQ to ensure that GCHQ does not take any action to further the interests of any UK political party. This was established policy even before the Act was passed. On a number of occasions GCHQ has provided advice and assistance to the police present at such conferences on the security of their communications, at their request and also as provided for under the Act. But GCHQ has not been involved in the surveillance of party political conferences.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if CCHQ is permitted to undertake (a) telephone tapping and (b) other interceptions of communications where the terminal points of the communication are both in Great Britain. [18686]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ's functions are set out in Section 3 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. Communications which GCHQ is permitted to intercept under the authority of a warrant are set out in section 2 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the range of responsibilities currently discharged by GCHQ. [18917]

Mr. Robin Cook: The responsibilities of GCHQ are set out in Section 3 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance has been given to employees at GCHQ in respect of the Data Protection Act 1984. [18688]

Mr. Robin Cook: All staff were informed in 1986 that personal data held by GCHQ are exempt from operative parts of the Data Protection Act 1984 because that exemption is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security. The guidance said that the spirit of the Act would be applied so far as serving staff members were concerned, in that they would be given access to personal data held on data bases in the same way as they would have been had the Act been in force.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff who were members of a union were seconded from (a) the DTI and (b) other departments to work in GCHQ Cheltenham during the period that a union ban was in place. [18691]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ estimates that about 10 people were seconded from other Government Departments to GCHQ between 1984 and 1997. It is not believed that any of these were from the DTI. GCHQ has no record of their union membership.

Diplomatic Privileges Act

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he takes to ensure there is no contravention of the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964. [18687]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 gave legal force in the UK to the Vienna Convention concluded in 1962. However, as a result of the 1985 Government Report on the Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges (Cmnd 9497), the Government's requirements and procedures were tightened. Stricter standards are applied, in particular on: size of diplomatic missions; notification of new staff; use of diplomatic premises; handling of diplomatic bags; breaches of criminal law and illegal parking.

Protocol Department within the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for implementing these requirements and monitoring any breaches. To this end, the Department issues a comprehensive memorandum on privileges and immunities to every Diplomatic Mission. A section of the memorandum states the action we will take in the event of any breach of privileges or abuse of diplomatic immunity. This section is given to each newly appointed diplomat with their identity card. All Heads of Mission are reminded regularly of their obligations by the Head of the Diplomatic Service and the Director of Protocol. Protocol Department also controls the duty-free privileges of each mission in relation to alcohol, tobacco and vehicles.

The Diplomatic Protection Group of the Metropolitan Police report all offences allegedly committed by diplomats to Protocol Department who in turn takes the necessary action with the relevant Head of Mission, asking for a waiver of immunity or in its absence the removal of a diplomat if the circumstances merit such action. Only six such requests were made in 1996. Diplomats who park illegally and incur fixed penalty fines are expected to pay them. All figures relating to alleged serious crimes committed by diplomats and unpaid parking fines are submitted to Parliament annually and published in Hansard.

Visa Applications

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what circumstances visa applications from United Kingdom citizens seeking to visit countries overseas are monitored by MI6; and what proportion of visa applications are thus monitored. [18697]

Mr. Robin Cook: Visa applications from United Kingdom citizens seeking to visit countries overseas are a matter between the individual and the Government of the country concerned. They do not involve any British Government agency. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about operational matters relating to the work of the intelligence and security services.

Lawyers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many trained lawyers are employed within (a) M16 and (b) GCHQ. [18692]

Mr. Robin Cook: Both the Secret Intelligence Service and the GCHQ employ qualified Legal Advisers. It is not our policy to provide detailed information on the staffing of the Intelligence and Security Services.

EU Agreements

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 754, on what previous occasions he has made statements relating to the bilateral agreement between Spain and the Dutch Presidency; and if he will make a statement. [19043]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the replies I gave him on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 122-23. I have referred to events surrounding the outcome on Article 4 of the Schengen Protocol on several occasions, as has my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, notably during the evidence he gave to the Foreign Affairs Committee on 4 November and during the Second Reading of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill on 12 November.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government has made to the government of Zimbabwe about the proposed confiscation of land. [19207]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We recognise the need for land reform in Zimbabwe but do not support that Government's present programme of land acquisition. We have expressed to them our concern that their current action will damage the economy, undermine investor confidence and do nothing to help the poor. We have urged them to follow a carefully planned programme that is fair and transparent and aimed at poverty eradication.

WALES

Out of School Clubs

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the current number of out of school clubs in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney; and how many he estimates will be established in (a) Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney and (b) Wales under the Government's new undertaking. [18505]

Mr. Hain: I understand that one out of school club is being developed in Merthyr Tydfil and there are Homework Clubs associated with each of the secondary schools in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney. During 1997 there were, in addition, 3 Summer Literacy Schools in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney. Under the Government's proposals, The National Lottery New Opportunities Fund will become an important source of funds for new initiatives in education. These will be carefully selected after wide consultation. The extra resources for child care announced by the Chancellor on 26 November 1997 is extremely welcome news and we will make sure that a fair allocation of the new money comes to Wales.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to consult the people of Wales on their preferred location for the Welsh Assembly. [18523]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am publishing a consultation paper on Monday. I am also arranging for pre-publication copies to be sent to all Welsh members and am making copies available in the Library of the House today so that members will have it in advance of Second Reading of the Government of Wales Bill.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that the Welsh Assembly has a duty to promote sustainable development; and in what form he will publish such proposals. [19117]

Mr. Ron Davies: Paragraph 1.24 of "A Voice for Wales" (Cm 3718) said that the Government would ensure that the Assembly promotes sustainable development. I plan to make an announcement to the House on this matter during Second Reading of the Government of Wales Bill.

Job Creation

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new policies he plans to introduce to encourage job creation in Wales. [18793]

Mr. Hain: Our proposals for stimulating the Welsh economy are set out in "An Economic Strategy for Wales" (Welsh Office October 1997). A copy is in the Library of the House. Comments are invited by 20 December.

Dentists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to protect the public from incompetent dentists. [18725]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Dental Practice Board has a statutory responsibility to the Secretary of State to monitor aspects of clinical probity in the General Dental Service in Wales and to initiate appropriate action in circumstances where acceptable standards have not been met.

Some 2,500 random examinations have been carried out in Wales since April 1997 by the Board's Dental Reference Service to provide assurance about the quality of diagnosis and treatment provided by individual dentists. About 1 per cent. of such examinations are referred to health authorities for consideration of appropriate action. There is also an established procedure for patient complaints. A health authority may refer complaints or matters of concern, whether from the Board or from a patient, to a Dental Discipline Committee for investigation. Only in a small proportion of such cases is the dentist found to be "in breach" of NHS Terms of Service.

A health authority can also refer allegations of a disciplinary nature to the General Dental Council, the NHS Tribunal or the local police authority.

The General Dental Council exercises statutory functions under the Dentists Act 1984 in relation to dentists' professional conduct and fitness to practise.

Section 27 of the Act provides that dentists shall be liable to have their names erased from the Dentists Register if they have been convicted of a criminal offence or have been guilty of serious professional misconduct. It is an offence for an unregistered person to engage in the practice of dentistry.

The Council at its November meeting approved the publication of new ethical guidance for dentists under the title "Maintaining Standards". This new guidance will be issued to all dentists on the UK Register.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the former NHS dentist, Mr. McDonald. [18723]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No. To do so may prejudice the appellate role of the Secretary of State for Wales in respect of Dental Service Committee Appeals.

Vaccination Reward Scheme

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of the National Vaccination Reward Scheme on the registration of children by GP practices. [18620]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No assessments have been undertaken. GPs are reimbursed for childhood vaccinations under the GP Target Payment Scheme. These targets are set at less than 100 per cent. in recognition of the fact that not all parents wish to have their children immunised.

Planning Regulations

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review planning regulations in Wales. [17587]

Mr. Win Griffiths [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Planning regulations are kept under continuous review. The key principles of planning policy are contained in Planning Guidance (Wales): Planning Policy (May 1996) (PG(W):PP): that document is currently under review and a revised version is likely to be published in early 1998. PG(W):PP is currently supplemented by thirteen Technical Advice Notes (Wales) (TAN(W)s) covering particular subjects: a further ten TAN(W)s are planned for publication in 1998.

CELTEC

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 639, what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) cost of (i) redundancies and (ii) resignations of managers of CELTEC as a result of the reorganisation of the TEC. [19147]

Mr. Hain: I am advised that the transfer of the assets and liabilities of the Alkemy and Business Advance companies is shortly to be completed, and the staff who transfer will then be integrated into the TEC. Following this transfer CELTEC will be undertaking a detailed review of all its resources against its prospective business requirements for the 1998–99 financial year. The outcome of this review will be presented to the CELTEC Board in the New Year, at which time the TEC will be able to finalise its business plans and staffing needs. I will write to my hon. Friend at that time with further details, and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

The cost of any redundancies of staff currently employed by the Hightown Holdings Group of companies which are not transferring to CELTEC is a matter for Hightown Holdings to determine.

Accounting Officer

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what circumstances; and on what dates. [19217]

Mr. Ron Davies: There have been no such directions in the Welsh Office in the last five years.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to abolish Tai Cymru; and how he will make its functions democratically accountable. [19573]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Following the publication of the Government of Wales Bill, which makes provision for the winding up of Tai Cymru, I am pleased to announce that Tai Cymru and Welsh Office Housing Division will be merged to form an integrated Housing Department of the Welsh Office. This will initially be accountable to my right hon. Friend and ultimately to the Assembly.

Subject to the enactment of the Government of Wales Bill we propose that the new Housing Department will be formed on 1 January 1999 and will cover all the existing functions of the two organisations. I estimate that the staffing structure of the new organisation will produce long-term pay bill savings of approximately £55,000 per annum, about 20 per cent. of the current pay costs of the two organisations. There will be some short-term setting up costs.

I have today published a consultation paper on the organisation and role of the Housing Department and its relations with other bodies including an enhanced role for local authorities in planning the provision of housing in their areas. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

Local Authorities (Best Value)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales will be involved in the Wales evaluation study to test the duty of best value; and if he will make a statement. [19571]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have received a report from the Best Value Project Group which I asked to evaluate the 26 proposals sent in by Welsh authorities. The Project Group concluded that 23 proposals had reached the stated quality threshold set out in its report and should be used to evaluate the impact of Best Value in Wales. There are 21 proposals from local authorities in Wales, one from a police authority, and one from a fire authority. The Project Group felt this would allow Best Value to be vigorously tested across the whole range of public services in Wales. I am happy to accept the Project Group's recommendations.

Three of the Welsh proposals have also been chosen to participate in the Best Value research programme commissioned by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

I am writing to all those who brought forward proposals and I will arrange for a list of those authorities accepted for both the Welsh and the English studies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The development of Best Value will help us deliver our Manifesto commitment to repeal Compulsory Competitive Tendering. Primary legislation will be required for this and the Government intends to introduce a Bill when Parliamentary business allows.

Ahead of this there is a need for a wide-ranging debate on Best Value involving local government, the private sector, trades unions and, most importantly, local people. I therefore propose to issue a consultation paper early in the New Year which will seek comments on this and other issues affecting local government in Wales.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Beatings

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been charged with offences in connection with paramilitary beatings in 1997. [16031]

Mr. Ingram: Between 1 January 1997 and 2 November 1997 one person was charged with an offence in connection with paramilitary assault.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to increase the representation of Catholics in major public sector organisations in Northern Ireland following the recent Fair Employment Commission report on public service employment in Northern Ireland. [17888]

Mr. Ingram: I welcome the overall increase in the Roman Catholic share of senior public sector posts and the recognition in the Fair Employment Commission's Report of this improvement.

It is for individual public sector bodies, as employers, to comply with their responsibilities under the fair employment legislation. This includes a duty to take action, within the law, to ensure fair participation in employment by members of both communities.

The report highlights the fact that the significant progress made by NI Government Departments in achieving fair representation among most of its work force, has yet to be reflected in the composition of senior grades. Several measures have already been taken to address this issue. These include the use of positive action advertisements, open advertising of posts, particularly chief executive posts, and the removal of various internal barriers so as to encourage a better flow of staff from lower to higher grades within and between Departments.

The Civil Service will continue to consult the Fair Employment Commission on affirmative action measures and the development of future goals and timetables for change in this area.

European Peace and Reconciliation Programme

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the projects receiving funding under the European Peace and Reconciliation Programme indicating the money allocated to each project between 1994 and 1997. [18135]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I will arrange to have placed in the Libraries of both Houses a list of all projects funded and the amounts allocated to them under the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation in 1995, 1996 and the first six months of 1997. No projects were funded in 1994.

Belfast International Airport

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland Audit Office report into the privatisation of Belfast International Airport. [18131]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The privatisation of Belfast International Airport was authorised and carried out by the previous Government. The Northern Ireland Audit Office's Report will be considered by the Public Accounts Committee. The Government will respond to the Committee in due course.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures will be taken to improve the ambulance fleet in Northern Ireland. [18133]

Mr. Worthington: In recognition of the particular problems faced by the ambulance service, the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service Trust has received a further allocation of £500,000 in the current financial year in addition to its normal capital provision of £500,000 for urgent replacement of ambulance vehicles. The Trust has also been permitted to draw on £200,000 of its 1998–99 capital allocation to supplement those resources. In addition, the Trust is presently drawing up proposals for a major ambulance replacement programme to be tested for a private partnership under PFI. These measures should make a significant difference to the state of the ambulance fleet but I will keep the matter under review.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Further Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the per capita funding for further education students for each year from 1978–79 to 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [17395]

Dr. Howells: It is not possible to give figures since 1978–79 on a comparable basis. The following figures are the average funding per full-time equivalent student in further education in England (in £ cash rounded to the nearest £10) since the establishment of the Further Education sector:

1993–94: 3,080
1994–95: 3,040
1995–96: 2,920
1996–97: 2,860

These figures are based on an improved method of calculating full-time equivalent students.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of changes in unit costs of further education since 1978–79 and of their overall effect on funding requirements. [17396]

Dr. Howells: It is not possible to assess unit costs on a consistent basis going back as far as 1978–79. One of the objectives of the additional funding announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 12 November is to limit the pressure on unit costs to the costs arising from inflation.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of New Deal education and training on current facilities and infrastructure in colleges of further education; and if he will make a statement. [17401]

Dr. Howells: Further Education colleges will have the opportunity to bid for well over £100 million of new deal funds for next year.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the projected required funding for further education over the next three years. [17399]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced additional funding for further education in 1998–99 on 12 November. Decisions on funding for financial year 1999–2000 and beyond will be announced next summer in the light of the Government's comprehensive spending review.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the projected required funding for further education over the next three years. [17400]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend has received representations on further education from a number of colleges, national representatives bodies and members of the public.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will identify the college which is described in the Further Education Funding Council's annual report as having lost up to £335,000 on a business venture from which there was no benefit to the students of the college; and what action has been taken to prevent such a circumstances happening elsewhere; [17822]

(2) if he will identify the college which is described in the Further Education Funds Council's annual report as having spent £440,000 on provision which may not be eligible for Further Education Funding Council funding; and when the auditors will have determined whether the council's funding has been correctly applied. [17824]

Dr. Howells: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Further Education Funding Council to write to my hon. Friend concerning this matter.

National Disability Council

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure public access to the agendas, council papers and minutes of National Disability Council meetings. [17740]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The National Disability Council (NDC) has a good record on openness. For example, it produces an annual report giving full information on its activities, writes to its partners during the year to keep them in touch with developments and undertakes wide public consultation before presenting Codes of Practice to Government on access for disabled people to goods, facilities, services and premises.

We will be considering how the NDC and other Non-Departmental Public Bodies which advise my Department might be made even more open in the light of comments made on the consultation document "Opening up Quangos" issued earlier this month by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representation Her Majesty's Government received from the National Disability Council (a) before and (b) after 3 May in respect of securing amendments to the Treaty of European Union in favour of the disabled. [17739]

Mr. Alan Howarth: As noted in its annual report for 1996–97, the National Disability Council (NDC) advised Government both before and after 3 May of its concerns that the Treaty did not sufficiently protect the interests of disabled people. It urged support for an amendment to Article 6a which had been proposed to combat discrimination based on various grounds, including disability. The NDC also encouraged amendment of Article 100a to ensure that measures designed to harmonise the single market did not inadvertently damage the interests of disabled people.

With support from the UK Government, an amendment to Article 6a was agreed at the Intergovernmental Conference in June. The Government also initiated and secured a declaration on Article 100a which requires the institutions of the European Community to take account of the needs of disabled people in drawing up single market measures. The NDC subsequently welcomed these positive steps forward for disabled people.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much the Government has spent on advertising (a) on commercial radio, (b) on television and (c) in newspapers in relation to its policy on tuition fees for university students. [17939]

Dr. Howells: The cost for advertising, in relation to the policy on tuition fees for university students, is, for commercial radio, £222,209 and for the national press, £137,831. There has been no advertising on television.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Welfare to Work places will be created in (a) Wales, (b) the North West, (c) the East Midlands and (d) the South West; and if he will make a statement. [17646]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We will offer help to everyone who becomes eligible for the new deal and sufficient places will be available to meet this commitment.

We are making good progress in Wales, the North-West, the East Midlands and the South West—as elsewhere—in the planning and implementation of the New Deal.

New Deal

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what obligations and responsibilities a private sector organisation given the lead role in a New Deal district, would have towards the local partners, particularly local authorities, involved in delivering the service within their local area. [18354]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have invited bids from the private sector, under contract to the Employment service (ES) to lead the delivery of new deal in a total of ten locations. The bidding process will make clear that private sector organisations should consider carefully the particular needs within each locality and the key local partners, including local authorities, they need to work with to make new deal a success. The successful private sector lead organisation will need to continue to work closely with a range of local public and private sector bodies effectively to delivery new deal opportunities to clients.

Detailed arrangements for delivery will be a matter for discussion between the lead organisation and its partners. However, it is expected that in most cases these will take the form of a written contract, the terms and conditions of which will be binding on all parties.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance New Deal participants aged over 25 years and unemployed for more than two years will receive during the period before their six-month placement begins. [18710]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are currently considering the detailed design of the new deal for people aged 25 years or over and unemployed for two years or more. We will make an announcement shortly.

Pupil Teacher Ratios

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities where the pupil teacher ratio in 1997 was below that in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1991 in maintained (i) nursery, (ii) primary and (iii) secondary schools. [18555]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The available information is shown in the following table.

Pupil teacher ratios in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools by local education authority area in England: 1974, 1979, 1991 and 1997

Special Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of local education authority maintained special schools had acting head teachers at the most recent date for which figures are available. [18805]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Information from a Local Government Management Board survey in October this year showed that about 9 per cent. of LEA maintained special schools had acting or temporary heads.

Teacher Training

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment under what statutory authority Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools has been given the power to inspect research findings in initial teacher training institutions; and what conditions are imposed by Government on Ofsted for the awarding of contracts to consultants to carry out such inspections. [18806]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 2 December 1997]: HMCI has no powers to inspect research findings in initial teacher training institutions and does not do so.

As a government department, Ofsted is expected to follow government guidance and best practice in procurement and contracting, and has an obligation always to seek best value for money.

I have asked Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member on both these points.

After-school Child Care

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what will be the structure and level of charges for the additional after-school child care places announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; [19027]

(2) what restrictions will be placed on eligibility for the additional after-school child care places announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; [19028]

(3) what estimate he has made of the proportion of the 1 million additional after-school child care places which will be taken up by lone parents currently receiving income support. [19029]

(4) what he expects to be the annual income from charges for additional after-school child care places announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and if the estimated costs of the scheme are gross of revenue from charges; [19030]

(5) how many additional after-school child care places he expects to be in place by (a) April 1998, (b) October 1998 and (c) April 1999; and when he expects the target of 1 million extra places to be reached. [19034]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is too early to give detailed information of this kind. We expect that most of the funding will be allocated in response to bids and plans which originate at local level. The precise nature of the projects supported will therefore vary according to local needs and circumstances. We shall be developing further guidance over the next few months. We expect the funding to be complemented by investment from other sources, such as employers. These projects are part of a wider National Child Care Strategy which will help parents, especially women, to balance family and working life and my right hon. Friend, Secretary of State for Education and Employment will make an announcement in the first part of next year.

School Places

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of children (a) of primary school age and (b) of secondary school age, who are currently without a school place (i) in total and (ii) as a result of exclusion. [18645]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities have a duty to arrange suitable education for pupils who cannot attend school. In January 1997 these arrangements covered 25,000 pupils, including some pupils who were dually registered at a Pupil Referral Unit and at another school. We estimate that around half of these children were out of school following an exclusion. The majority of such pupils are of secondary school age. Additionally, it has been estimated that around 10,000 children are educated otherwise than at school under arrangements made by their parents.

Written Directions

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what circumstances. [19215]

Dr. Howells: No written directions have been sought in the past five years by permanent secretaries or other accounting officers in the Department for Education and Employment, nor by those in the former Employment Department or Department for Education.

Waiver Clauses

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement of Government policy on the use of waiver clauses in fixed-term contracts. [18630]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 2 December 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government recognise that there may be circumstances where a job which is for a fixed specific period should not necessarily attract the same benefits on termination as apply where an open-ended contract is terminated. However, the Government are also aware that there may be cases where waiver clauses are abused and they condemn such abuse.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the operation of the arrangements under which the Minister without Portfolio answers oral questions on his duties related to the Millennium Dome. [18921]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None. There has been only one oral question for the Minister without Portfolio.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the Scottish Office brief for the design of the Scottish Parliament and the brief to the transport consultants. [18134]

Mr. McLeish: We shall in due course make available the draft working brief for the design of the Scottish Parliament building. A copy of the brief for the transport and environmental impact assessment has today been placed in the Library.

Smoking

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people who have died from smoking-related diseases in Scotland for each year since 1979; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) sex, (b) age, (c) socio-economic class and (d) health board area. [17857]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 1 December 1997]: It is not possible to be precise, but in 1992 it was estimated that some 10,600 people in Scotland died each year from smoking-related diseases, including lung cancer, coronary heart disease and stroke. No later official Scottish estimate has been made. The figure was based on estimates of the proportions of deaths from smoking-related diseases that were directly attributable to smoking. It would not be appropriate to apply these general proportions to the various sub-groups mentioned in the Question.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what has been the sum given since the commencement of the National Lottery in Northavon; and if he will list the individual awards. [18198]

Mr. Banks: To date 36 awards totalling £1,442,504 have been made to organisations in Northavon. I have arranged for a list to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Information on Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website www.lottery.gov.uk.

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what National Lottery distributing bodies funding has been allocated to projects in each parliamentary constituency in the Anglia area; [18355]

(2) what National Lottery Charities Board funding has been allocated to projects in each parliamentary constituency in the Anglia area. [18348]

Mr. Banks: The Department holds Lottery awards information by Government economic region. I have arranged for a table showing the breakdown of awards by constituency in the Eastern region (which comprises Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire and Essex but excludes Greater London) to be placed in the Libraries of the House. Figures for the National Lottery Charities Board are included in this table.

Information on Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website www.lottery.gov.uk.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to amend the National Lottery Act 1993 so that convenience retailers may receive a return of more than 5 per cent. of sales. [18547]

Mr. Banks: The level of retailer commission is a commercial matter for the Lottery operator. The Government is concerned to protect the contribution which the Lottery makes to small retailers and the Director-General of the National Lottery will have this in mind when considering applications for the next operating licence.

Tourism

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he intends to take to promote employment in the tourist industry. [18858]

Mr. Tom Clarke: We shall continue to work with the tourism, leisure and hospitality industry to ensure that this fast moving and exciting sector reaches its full potential for generating wealth and employment. With the Tourism Forum, we are developing a comprehensive strategy for sustainable growth of the industry. Working Groups of the Forum are also looking at ways to improve staff management practices and to encourage more young people to consider a career in the sector.

In addition, Sector Challenge funding will, for example, enable the Springboard Project to go nationwide with its promotion of positive information about careers in the hospitality industry to potential recruits, and is supporting the British Hospitality Association's development of a code of practice and awards scheme to encourage quality.

PRIME MINISTER

Social Exclusion Unit

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Prime Minister which estates will be targeted by the social exclusion unit; and which local authority areas they come within. [18359]

The Prime Minister: The terms of reference for the social exclusion unit will be announced next week.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government has made of the scope for future public support for the Royal Yacht Britannia after she is decommissioned. [18924]

The Prime Minister: Seven proposals for preserving HM Yacht Britannia are being considered. Most of these claim extensive public support for a particular proposal. This is being taken in to account in the assessment of the options. I hope that the announcement can be made soon.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public prime ministerial announcements. [18903]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Any policy announcement that should be made to the House has been made to the House.

Joint Intelligence Committee

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what is the function of, and what are the powers available to, the Joint Intelligence Committee; and if he will make a statement. [18693]

The Prime Minister: The Joint Intelligence Committee is responsible, subject to Ministerial approval, both for setting the UK's national intelligence requirements and for producing for Ministers and officials regular intelligence assessments on a range of situations and issues of current concern.

The role of the Joint Intelligence Committee, including its terms of reference, is described fully in the booklet "Central Intelligence Machinery". The booklet was published in 1996, but there have been no significant changes to the arrangements relating to the Joint Intelligence Committee since its publication. A copy of the booklet is available in the libraries of the House.

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances the Minister without Portfolio is required to gain clearance, and from whom, before holding meetings with persons about matters which relate to responsibilities of other members of the Government. [18920]

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend's role is to assist me and other ministerial colleagues in the strategic implementation and presentation of government policy. It is for him to hold meetings as necessary to enable him to fulfil that role.

Offshore Trusts

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will revise Questions of Procedure for Ministers to include recommendations relating to trusts in offshore tax havens. [19113]

The Prime Minister: I have already revised Questions of Procedure for Ministers, which has been retitled as the Ministerial code, a copy of which was placed in the library of the House in July 1997. The Code advises Ministers that they should ensure that there is no conflict of interest between their official duties and their private financial interests. I see no need to include specific guidelines about offshore trusts.

National Asset Register

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if assets held by (a) MI5, (b) MI6 and (c) GCHQ have been included in the National Asset Register. [18741]

The Prime Minister: As stated in the introduction, no information is given in the National Asset Register on assets owned by the security and intelligence services on grounds of national security. However, like other departments, the agencies will review their assets as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR). The CSR for the security and intelligence services was announced on 30 October and the terms of reference placed in the Library.

Food Safety

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the limits of responsibilities of the Minister without Portfolio for food safety issues. [18907]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 668.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 861, and to the hon. Member for Lewes of 17 November 1997, Official Report, columns 17–18, on telephone tapping, if the policy applies to telephone interception and the use of electronic surveillance by MI6 and GCHQ. [18985]

The Prime Minister: I can confirm that the policy described in my answers to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 861, and to the hon. Member on 17 November 1997, Official Report, columns 17–18, applies in relation to telephone interception and to the use of electronic surveillance by any of the three security and intelligence agencies.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asil Nadir

33. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General what recent efforts his Department has made to contact Asil Nadir; and if he will make a statement. [17700]

The Attorney-General: None. Asil Nadir remains a fugitive from justice. The Central Criminal Court has issued a warrant for the arrest of Asil Nadir and Interpol has been informed. The Serious Fraud Office intends to proceed against him on charges of theft when he returns or is returned to the jurisdiction.

Victim Consultation

34. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations his Department holds with victims before deciding whether or not to proceed with prosecutions. [17702]

The Attorney-General: The police are required in certain cases and encouraged in others to pass to the Crown Prosecution Service information about the views of the victim and the effect of the crime upon that person. That information is an important factor in deciding whether it is in the public interest to proceed with a prosecution.

Police Prosecutions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Attorney-General what prosecutions have taken place of police officers and other related parties in connection with the overturning on appeal of criminal prosecutions proven to be unsound in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [17696]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not keep statistics on particular offences it deals with. Consultation with relevant staff, however, suggests that there have been two cases, involving six defendants, in the last three years or thereabouts resulting in prosecutions, of which one case, involving four defendants, is still pending. There may be others.

Diplomatic Privileges

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General how many matters have been reported for prosecution under the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 since 1967; and how many prosecutions have been undertaken. [18689]

The Attorney-General: None. The Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 does not create any criminal offences.

Extradition

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the role of his Department in requests for extradition from the United Kingdom. [17699]

The Attorney-General: Extradition from the UK is essentially a matter for the Home Office although the Crown Prosecution Service, which I superintend, is typically asked to act on behalf of the requesting State.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bilateral Aid

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the proportion of the United Kingdom aid programme devoted to bilateral assistance. [18729]

Mr. Foulkes: In 1996–97, bilateral aid comprised 50 per cent. of DFID's programmes; multilateral aid was 47 per cent. The remaining 3 per cent. comprised mostly administrative costs. (These figures are provisional subject to the forthcoming publication of British Aid Statistics.)

Development Policy

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of establishing a development policy forum and publishing its annual reports. [18943]

Mr. Foulkes: We are planning to hold the policy forum and publish the annual report towards the end of 1998. The forum will incur only minimal costs (stationery, postage etc.) plus the possible cost of a venue.

We have not yet decided on the exact form of the annual report and thus it is difficult to give a clear figure for the cost. However, a broad estimate would be between £40,000 to £50,000.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will take steps to rationalise the EU's development co-operation programmes into a single directorate during the UK Presidency. [18953]

Mr. Foulkes: Discussion is currently under way within the Commission on the establishment of a common services unit to handle aid administration for the external Directorates-General responsible for implementing Community aid programmes. The Directorates-General would retain responsibility for some aspects of the programmes but the exact division of tasks between them and the new structure has yet to be announced. Reorganisation of this sort is an internal management issue for the Commission, but member states have a legitimate interest in the effectiveness of the new arrangements. We will be keeping in close contact with the Commission and other member states about developments throughout the UK Presidency.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of the working group to be established by her Department to promote awareness of development issues. [18944]

Mr. Foulkes: The only expenditure directly associated with the working group will be the normal stationery and postage costs.

There will be some cost for the time of the staff administering the group but until we have a clearer idea of how much actual time will be involved it is difficult to make an estimate.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Kenya. [18967]

Mr. Foulkes: During her visit in October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development met President Moi and Finance Minister Mudavadi. She explained Britain's commitment to the elimination of poverty in poorer countries and our intention to work with those Governments which are themselves committed to achieving this aim. As well as meeting their President and the Minister of Finance, she visited two projects assisting poor people in an informal settlement in the Kibera area of Nairobi: one of which is providing credit to enable people to start or expand small businesses, and one working with HIV positive people and AIDS orphans.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much bilateral aid the United Kingdom plans to provide to Zimbabwe in the current year; and what percentage of the total United Kingdom aid budget that represents. [19208]

Mr. Foulkes: We estimate that direct bilateral expenditure on current aid projets in Zimbabwe, including ATP projects, will be around £13 million during the financial year 1997–98. This would represent approximately 0.6 per cent. of the total multilateral and bilateral aid budget. The final aid expenditure figures will be published in British Aid Statistics next year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date the Government decided to purchase or lease millennium-compliant computer systems; and when that decision was implemented. [18722]

Dr. David Clark: The Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) provides model contract clauses for Departments and agencies to use when purchasing computer equipment and services.

In September 1996, revised Model Agreements were produced by the CCTA containing a clause on millennium compliance in each model contract, for immediate adoption.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those (a) Government Departments and (b) sections of Departments which will not be millennium compliant by 30 June 1999. [19198]

Dr. David Clark: According to plans submitted by Departments and agencies, Central Government business critical systems will be millennium compliant well before the end of 1999. The only such organisations not to specify a completion date before 30 June 1999 were:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office: (September 1999)

Historic Royal Palaces: (August 1999)

Royal Mint: (Well before the end of 1999)

Valuation Office: (End of 1999)

A number of the plans received also indicate that PC replacement plans may run into late 1999.

Further information can be gained from the plans, which are accessible via the Internet at:
(http://www.open.gov.uk/citu/cituhome.htm).

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the number of IT specialists who will be required by Government Departments to complete millennium compliance; and which Government Departments have indicated that they have shortages of IT skilled personnel to complete millennium compliance. [19199]

Dr. David Clarke: Government Departments have submitted their plans for achieving millennium compliance for their computer systems, and those are available in the Libraries of the House and on the Internet.

I have written to colleagues asking them to specifically address the skills issue and requesting further information before the end of the month.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Government Departments are now dealing with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers which are not millennium compliant; and in each case at what date they will cease to deal with (a) and (b). [19200]

Dr. David Clark: The Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in my Department has published detailed guidance on the action needed to deal with the Year 2000 date change problem. It is for individual departments and agencies, on a case by case basis, to manage their dealings with external organisations, having regard to the guidance.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contingency plans he has established against failures in millennium compliance in Government Departments. [19196]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 3.

Civil Service Gradings

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Government's review of the working of government will include a review of the (a) transparency and (b) consistency of the Civil Service grading system. [18821]

Dr. David Clark: There is no single Civil Service grading system. As from 1 April 1996 pay and grading was delegated to departments and agencies for all Civil Servants outside the Senior Civil Service, enabling them to tailor pay and grading systems more closely to their business needs. We have no plans for a Civil Service wide review of grading systems.

Departments and agencies must evaluate their systems every three years, or earlier if they so wish. This is to ensure that they continue to reflect the key principles laid down in the Civil Service Management Code. OPS will work closely with departments and agencies on their evaluations, in support of the developing Better Government agenda.

For the Senior Civil Service (around 3,000 staff), there is a common pay framework based on job weight, comprising nine pay bands and a Permanent Secretaries' pay range. Within this framework, departments can develop their own management structures according to the needs of their organisation. There are no centrally recognised grades.

Public Appointments

Mr Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) of 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 668, (1) if he will make it his policy to seek the consent of holders of public appointments to the publication of their individual ethnic origin; [19150]

(2) whether he will make it a condition of holding a public appointment that the holder should agree to the publication of information relating to the holder's ethnic origin; [19149]

(3) if applicants for membership of public bodies are required to state their ethnic origin; and if he will make a statement. [19148]

Dr. David Clark: The First Report from the Committee on Standards in Public Life and the Commissioner for Public Appointments' Guidance emphasise the principle that public appointments should be made on merit. Individuals are selected because they have the skills, qualities and experience required by the public bodies in question. Disclosure of ethnic origin or a requirement to allow the publication of this information should not be a precondition of appointment.

In line with the Commissioner's Guidance, candidates for public appointments provide details of their ethnic origin on the basis of voluntary self-classification. This information is collected on the understanding that it is treated as confidential and will be used only for statistical purposes as part of the process to monitor the characteristics of those appointed to serve on public bodies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Integrity Project

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total cost to date of the benefit integrity project, including staff training; and what have been the total savings. [16561]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. We need to focus on those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have set up the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. he will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 3 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the total cost to date of the Benefit Integrity Project, including staff training and the total savings.

The total cost of the Benefit Integrity Project, including staff training, is £3,459,986.00 as at 31 October 1997.

The savings at 31 October 1997 are £5,414,785.00. This level of savings has been calculated using the Department's standard method of assessment and takes into account increases to benefit entitlement as well as decreases. The project is expected to continue for two years, by which time we expect to achieve savings of approximately £74,000,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the extra money for pensioners on income support will be paid out before the end of December. [18737]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Payments will not be possible before the end of December. Legislation is currently being drafted and will be referred to the Social Security Advisory Committee shortly. Once they have cleared the draft Regulations they will be laid before the House. As soon as they come into force the process of payment will commence. Payments will be made in time to help with heavy winter fuel bills.

Lone Parents

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the reasons for the control groups for the New Deal for lone parents starting in September. [18631]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The control groups for the New Deal for Lone Parents did not start in September.

Data for control areas which are comparable to the pilot areas have been collected since the New Deal for Lone Parents began in July 1997, and will be used in the full evaluation of the scheme in due course.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in the United Kingdom are currently (a) receiving income support and (b) receiving child benefit. [19146]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

We are able to provide information for Great Britain only.

As at February 1997, there are 1,020,000 Lone Parents in receipt of Income Support. The Department estimates that in 1996–97 there were about 1.7 million lone parents in Great Britain. Their rate of take-up of Child Benefit has not been separately measured, but within the whole population take-up has been estimated at about 99 per cent.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children in the United Kingdom are (a) under the age of five years and (b) five-years-old or over, in lone parent families. [19040]

Mr. Keith Bradley: For 1995–96, it is estimated that in Great Britain, 0.8 million children under the age of five years and 2.0 million children aged five-years-old or over were living in lone parent families. A child is defined as an individual aged under 16 or an unmarried 16 to 18 year old on a course up to and including "A" level standard (or up to and including "Highers" in Scotland). A lone parent family is a non-pensioner single adult aged 16 or over with children.

Note:

The 1995–96 financial year is the latest period for which data are available.

Source:

The data are taken from Households Below Average Income (HBAI) based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS).

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated total reduction in the cost of support for lone parents as a result of the changes proposed in the Social Security Bill for 1998–99 and each of the four subsequent years. [19041]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The estimated net savings from the measure contained in the Social Security Bill to removal entitlement to the lone parent rate of Child Benefit for new cases are in the table:

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Savings	£5 million	£15 million	£25 million

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total cost of support for lone parents under the New Deal for 1998–99 and each of the four subsequent years. [19042]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The anticipated costs of the New Deal for Lone Parents for 1998–99 are £30 million. Funding is available only for the next three years as follows:

1999–2000: £40 million

2000–01: £39 million

2001–02: £41 million.

The total will comprise £150 million over the life of the Parliament. In addition, there will be £50 million to improve financial help with the cost of child care in the In-Work benefits.

As announced in the Green Budget on 25 November Lone Parents making a new claim for Income Support from April 1998 will be offered the help to work that is provided by the New Deal for Lone Parents.

An extra £25 million has been allocated from October 1998 to the New Deal for Lone Parents for those whose youngest child is under 5 and who are seeking support from the New Deal.

Accounting Officers

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what circumstances; and on what dates. [19214]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There have been no such directions issued in the last five years.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Medical Negligence

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on the use of a no-fault compensation scheme for medical negligence in place of legal aid for common law claims. [18280]

Mr. Hoon: I have not, so far, received any representations on this subject.

Divorce

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on compulsory mediation in those divorce cases which involve children. [18213]

Mr. Hoon: Mediation, by definition, is a voluntary process and as such can take place only if the parties agree to mediate.

Judges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of Her Majesty's judges in England and Wales are able to speak and understand the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement. [18211]

Mr. Hoon: There are a total of 37 of Her Majesty's judges in England and Wales who are understood to be able to speak and understand the Welsh language.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people from ethnic minorities are currently appointed full-time judges in England and Wales. [18207]

Mr. Hoon: The attached table sets out the figures for holders of full-time judicial office believed to be of ethnic minority origin. The figures are believed to be correct, but as the ethnic origin of candidates for judicial office was not sought before October 1991, the data may be incomplete.

Judicial office holders of ethnic minority origin as at 1 November 1997

Pensions Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received regarding the workings of the Pensions Appeal Tribunal of the War Pensions Agency. [18145]

Mr. Hoon: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 4 December 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about representations concerning the Pensions Appeal Tribunals. The Court Service is responsible for the administration of the Pensions Appeal Tribunals. They are wholly independent of the War Pensions Agency, which is an Executive agency of the Department of Social Security.

Since April, I have answered five letters on the subject from Members of Parliament, including one addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary, one to the Secretary of State for Social Security and one to the Chief Executive of the War Pensions Agency.

In the same period, staff in Court Service Headquarters have replied to 14 letters from members of the public. Of these, four were addressed to the Lord Chancellor, eight to the Court Service, one to the Home Secretary and one to the Open Government Unit.

Courts Martial

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations he has had with the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of reviewing Queen's Regulations and the system of service courts martial. [19114]

Mr. Hoon: None.

Military Law

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how many times since 1 May the Lord Chancellor has contacted the MOD in respect of cases brought under military law; and if he will make a statement; [19219]

(2) if he will list the occasions on which the Lord Chancellor or his officials have contacted the Ministry of Defence since 1 May by (a) letter, (b) e mail and (c) orally in respect of disciplinary proceedings concerning Major Joyce; and if he will publish (i) that correspondence and (ii) minutes of such oral communications. [19220]

Mr. Hoon: In respect of disciplinary proceedings concerning Major Joyce, these communications remain confidential. Neither the Lord Chancellor nor his officials have contacted the Ministry of Defence in respect of any other cases brought under military law.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received in respect of the Territorial Army in the present Strategic Defence Review; and if he will make a statement. [18365]

Dr. Reid: We have received many written submissions to the Strategic Defence Review about the Territorial Army and the other Reserve Forces. We have placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of those submissions whose authors have agreed that we should do so. In addition we have received a number of letters from hon. Members concerning various aspects of the Territorial Army. All of these inputs are being taken fully into account in work on the future role and structure of the Reserve Forces.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military service properties in the United Kingdom are for sale. [18650]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently some 230 sites with the Defence Estate Organisation for disposal. This excludes small parcels of land, sites which are vacant or in the process of closing but are not yet ready for disposal and housing units in the Annington Homes portfolio.

Nimrod

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the advantages of upgrading the current Nimrod aircraft in advance of the introduction of Nimrod 2000. [18593]

(2) what estimate he has made of the reduction in operating costs of Nimrod aircraft that could be achieved through use of improved technology; [18615]

(3) what assessment he has made of the capability of the current Nimrod aircraft to meet military threats before replacement by Nimrod 2000. [18617]

Mr. Spellar: The UK's ability to meet evolving military threats is continually assessed and steps are taken as necessary to address any significant shortfall in operational capability. In addition, operating costs are kept under constant review; new technologies and upgrades are introduced where they are affordable and provide the same or better capability with lower running costs.

Foreign Equipment Purchases

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of foreign military equipment purchased by the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [18584]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 4 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the value of foreign military equipment purchased by the United Kingdom in each of last three years, since this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The information is contained in our annual publication 'UK Defence Statistics' in Table 1.14—Imports of Defence Equipment. Copies of this publication are available from the House of Commons Library. For your convenience I attach a copy of the table.

The table is compiled from HM Customs and Excise data and refers to deliveries of defence equipment which have passed through UK Customs. The equipment concerned falls under those headings in the UK Tariff and INTRASTAT Common Nomenclature categories which have been identified as covering purely military equipment.

I hope you find the information useful.

[1]Compiled from Customs and Excise data. They refer only to deliveries of defence equipment which have passed through UK Customs. They relate only to those headings form the UK Tariff and form the INTRASTAT Common Nomencisture which have been identified as covering purely military equipment. Exports totals differ from figures for Defence Sales which are based on new contracts signed.
[2] During the period covered by the tables, changes were made to the list of "identified" Defence equipment by:(a) parts of guided weapons and missiles being added from 1987.
(b) parts of military aircraft being added from 1988.
(c) military aircraft and parts being identified as "other than civil" rather than "military" from 1993 and
(d) military radio/radar apparatus, optical and infrared equipment and simulators other than ground flying trainers being deleted from 1993.
Further details are given in Defence Statistics Bulletin 4.
1. Based on figures from the Society of British Aerospace Companies. They relate only to those items where the official commodity classifications do not distinguish between military and civil aerospace equipment. These are liable to alter from year to year in line with changes to the classifications. Exports for collaborative projects are excluded.
2. Signed during the year for equipment and services. Figures taken from the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) publication "The World Defence Export Market", compiled from a regular DESO survey of the defence industry.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what fixtures, fittings and equipment he plans to remove from the Royal Yacht Britannia on her decommissioning. [18878]

Dr. Reid: Final decisions have yet to be taken. Following paying off, the Royal Collection and other Royal items will be removed for safe keeping. The Palace has indicated that it will be prepared to consider the loan or replication of certain items, subject to adequate safeguards, to a successful preservation group. Likewise the Royal Navy would be prepared to discuss with a preservation group what naval items could be kept.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to announce his decision on the future of the Royal Yacht Britannia. [18926]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Mr. Godman) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 6.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) representations and (b) proposals he has received on the future use of the Royal Yacht Britannia; and from whom. [18925]

Dr. Reid: The Government have received a large number of representations and proposals on the future use of the Royal Yacht. It is not practical to quantify a total. These have been reduced to a shortlist of seven preservation proposals which have been assessed in detail. These are:

Bankside Consultants Ltd. (Britannia 2000 Ltd.)

Clyde Heritage Trust

Forth Ports plc

Lords of the Isles Ltd.

Peel Holdings plc (Manchester Ship Canal Company)

Portsmouth City Council in consortium with Flagship Portsmouth

Swift International Developments Ltd.

The Government hope to be able to make an announcement about the future of Britannia shortly.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify by name, rank and unit, the (a) Chilean and (b) Turkish military, security, police, paramilitary and special forces personnel who attended the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition. [13673]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 4 November 1997]: I have placed in the Library of the House a list of all overseas Government representatives who are recorded as attending RNBAEE 1997 as guests of the Government. The list excludes representatives of London Embassies who are routinely invited to such events.

Trident

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the Trident nuclear programme (a) for each of the past five years and (b) since the programme was first purchased by the United Kingdom. [19232]

Mr. Robertson: The acquisition cost of Trident in each of the past five years has been as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1992–93	993
1993–94	892
1994–95	703
1995–96	403
1996–97	372

These figures are at outturn prices for the relevant year. The total expenditure on procuring Trident up to 30 September 1997 was £8,820 million, also at outturn prices.

The cost of operating Trident has been estimated at £200 million a year over the 30 year lifetime of the system. We are looking at the basis upon which cost estimates have been calculated in the light of operating experience and as part of the wider Strategic Defence Review.

Courts Martial

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends reviewing Queen's Regulations and the system of service courts martial; and if he will make a statement. [19115]

Dr. Reid: The court-martial system was reformed on 1 April 1997 by a series of measures included in the Armed Forces Act 1996. The reforms were wide ranging and affected the pre-trial, trial and post-trial stages of the court-martial system. The purpose of these reforms was to reinforce the independence of the court-martial, principally by reducing the apparent influence of the chain of command, whilst preserving its necessary involvement.

The reforms meet the European Court's concerns about the shortcomings of the system. The ECHR has recognised our actions, noting "with satisfaction that the UK authorities had made changes to the court-martial system with a view to ensuring the observance of their Conventional commitments".

Although we are not taking any further steps at present to improve the procedures, we are aware that we cannot afford to be complacent. The system is kept under review and will, of course, be looked at as part of the process of preparing for the next quinquennial Armed Forces Bill.

Queen's Regulations are a form of secondary legislation which contain much of the detail relating to provisions in the primary legislation. They also contain other administrative and disciplinary measures to assist with the overall command and administration of the armed forces. As with the primary legislation, these regulations are kept constantly under review and amended when necessary.

Written Directions

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what contexts; and on what dates. [19213]

Mr. Spellar: No formal directions to MOD accounting officers have been sought or given since 1 May 1997. Under the previous administration, one direction was given within the past five years, in March 1995 in the context of the procurement of medium support helicopters for the Royal Air Force.

Defence Intelligence Staff

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the present functions of the Defence Intelligence Staff; and how many staff are employed therein. [18918]

Mr. Spellar: The function of the Defence Intelligence Staff is to provide timely and accurate intelligence warning, assessments, and intelligence and geographic support in the most cost-effective manner to MOD Ministers and Central Staffs, the Permanent Joint Head Quarters, NATO and other Government Departments as directed. It employs 4,589 in the headquarters, the Agencies and other parts of the Armed Forces.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights have taken place for each year since 1967 between RAF Brize Norton and the United States in which special nuclear materials have been carried. [18922]

Dr. Reid: The number of flights carrying special nuclear material each year between UK and US depends on programme requirements which are confidential between the two governments. I am therefore withholding the information requested under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Major Eric Joyce

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions and on what dates (a) he and (b) other Ministers in his Department have met Major Eric Joyce. [19039]

Dr. Reid: To the best of our knowledge, no Defence Minister has met Major Eric Joyce since 1 May 1997. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, my noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State have never knowingly met him prior to that date.

Over six years as an Opposition Defence Spokesman prior to 1 May 1997 I met a great many Members of all three Services at all ranks. To the best of my recollection, I met Major Joyce twice: once during the second half of 1995 and again in May 1996.

RAF Watton

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the ownership, (b) management and (c) future use of the site and buildings at the former RAF Watton. [19001]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD owns the freehold interest in the site of the former RAF Watton, Norfolk. The former airfield is under the management of the Army and used as an Army Training Area; the two areas for disposal namely, the former Technical and Border Radar Sites, are in the stewardship of the Defence Estate Organisation.

The two sites in disposal have been offered for sale on the open market through local marketing agents. An agreed Planning Brief provides for residential use on the Border Radar Site and part residential use on the technical site. Unfortunately these proposed uses cannot be confirmed until the outcome of the Public Planning Inquiry into the Breckland District Local Plan is known sometime in mid-1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

E-mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, of 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 441, if she will list the e-mail addresses of (a) Ministers, (b) senior officials and (c) chief executives of agencies for which she is responsible. [15880]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 13 November 1997]: The addresses are as follows:

(a) Ministers

Margaret Beckett; tlo.beckett@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Lord Clinton-Davis; tlo.clinton-davis@tlo.dti.gov.uk

John Battle; tlo.battle@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Ian McCartney; tlo.mccartney@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Lord Simon of Highbury; tlo.simon@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Nigel Griffiths; tlo.griffiths@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Barbara Roche; tlo.roche:@tlo.dti.gov.uk

(b) Senior Officials

Michael Scholar; tlo.scholar@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Sir Robert May; robert.clay@osct.dti.gov.uk

(c) Agency Chief Executives

I have asked the Chief Executives of the Agencies to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 4 December 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about The Insolvency Service's e-mail address.

The Service currently has no e-mail address, either for myself or the Agency as a whole.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 4 December 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question 97/1503 on electronic mail addresses on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency.

My E-Mail address is:

nortonj@ra.gtnet.gov.uk

I am more than happy to accept mail by this route rather than conventional post or fax.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 20 November 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your question to the President of the Board of Trade about the e-mail addresses of Ministers, senior officials, and chief executives of agencies. My e-mail address is PAUL HARTNACK@PATENT.GOV.UK.

Letter From John Holden to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 4 December 1997:

I have been asked to respond to your question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding the e-mail addresses of Chief Executives of Agencies for which she is responsible.

There is currently no e-mail address for the Chief Executive of Companies House. It is expected that an e-mail address for the Chief Executive will be publicised within approximately 6 months as part of a wider external and internal communications initiative which should maximise its utility to customers and public.

Letter from Ian Jones to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 4 December 1997:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade, for named day reply on 13 November, about e-mail addresses of Ministers, senior officials and Chief Executives of agencies. I have been asked to reply in respect of the Employment Tribunals Service.

At present I do not have an e-mail address.

Letter from Dr. Seton Bennett to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 4 December 1997.

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about e-mail addresses. I do not yet have an e-mail address, but the Agency is currently setting up addresses for a number of its staff and I hope to be able to publish them very soon.

Funeral Industry

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring she has instigated concerning whether undertakings received from providers of funeral services following recommendations by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (a) have been and (b) have not been carried out; and what further action she intends to take to ensure that such undertakings are carried out. [16704]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 19 November 1997]: Following the MMC's report on the acquisition by Service Corporation International (SCI) of Plantsbrook Group plc, SCI gave an undertaking on 18 December 1996 to divest individual funeral directors' businesses in 10 specified localities, together with undertakings about the future conduct of its business. SCI sold the funeral directors' businesses on 4 April 1997. On 3 November 1997, I accepted a variation to the undertakings given by SCI to allow it to acquire Birkbeck Securities Ltd. (Birkbeck) on condition that SCI disposed of the funeral directing business of Birkbeck's subsidiary, H. Copeland and Son Ltd. within six months. That business has now been sold by SCI.

The task of monitoring the continuing behavioural undertakings is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT). His duties in this respect are set out in Section 88(4) of the Fair Trading Act 1973. He is under a duty to advise Ministers if it appears to him that an undertaking has not been, or is not being fulfilled.

It is now about one year since the undertakings were given by SCI. I understand that the DGFT is not aware of any evidence that SCI is failing to comply with the undertakings. However, his officials will shortly be undertaking a review of the situation in order to verify that the undertakings are being carried out.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statistics her Department collates on the ownership and company status of funeral director companies and their subsidiaries; and if she will make a statement. [18742]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Department does not collect such information.

The statistical information collected by The Office for National Statistics (ONS) on service sectors such as funeral direction does not cover the level of detail requested. The larger firms in the sector are required to report financial information to Companies House but many smaller firms in the sector do not have to do so. A number of funeral directors are also likely to be beneath the VAT threshold.

Turkey (Military Equipment)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences for sale of military equipment to Turkey have been refused in the last three years. [17860]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 November 1997]: Between 1 January 1994 and 25 November 1997, 11 applications were refused for standard or open individual licences to export to Turkey goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (the so-called "Military List"). This does not include applications from which these goods or this destination were removed before a licence was issued.

Applications for individual export licences refused between 1994 and 25 November 1997

	1994	1995	1996	1997 to 25 November
Standard individual export licences	1	1	1	2
Open individual export licences	0	2	4	0

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she was consulted over the recent change of policy on tobacco sponsorship. [16940]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made it clear that this was a collective decision made in the normal way. It has been the practice of successive governments not to give details of the internal handling of individual decisions.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the British coal industry. [18068]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 November 1997]: The Government's policy is to ensure secure, diverse and sustainable supplies of energy at competitive prices. I believe that the British coal industry can continue to make a significant contribution to meeting that objective. Since taking office, we have taken several steps to correct the bias against coal we inherited from the previous Administration.

Post Office

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to increase the provision of post office services in urban areas and estates. [18851]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Decisions on the level of service provision and the location of individual post offices are an operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she last met the Chief Executive of the Post Office; and how often she has met him. [19227]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade met the Chief Executive of the Post Office on 22 July and I have met him on several occasions since May.

Industry Council

Jacqui Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Industry Council held in Brussels on 13 November. [19651]

Mrs. Beckett: The Council reached political agreement on the Draft Article 94 Regulation on State Aid. This will enable the Commission to bring forward state aid block exemption regulations under which member states would not need to seek prior approval for individual aid schemes and awards and in return would publish details of these state aids in the Official Journal and submit annual reports to the Commission.

A constructive first discussion of the new shipbuilding aid regime took place. The Council agreed on a two step approach to replacing the Seventh Directive on shipbuilding aid. Step one, previously agreed at the Industry Council in Luxembourg on 24 April, would involve the extension of the current regime on which the first exchange of views took place. The Commission's proposed new regime would end operating aid in 2000, introduce regional investment and innovation aid and tighten criteria for restructuring and closure aid.

The Commission presented its Communication on the treatment of ECSC funds after expiry of the Treaty in 2002. It felt that the simplest solution was for outstanding reserves to be transferred to the Communities under the Commission's supervision to be used for coal and steel sector research in line with the conclusions of the Amsterdam European Council. The Commission's proposals met with general approval. However some member states suggested that an independent foundation should be established to manage the assets and the research programme. Another suggested that further work was needed on the roles of the Commission and member states in managing the funds with further reflection on the impact of future Community enlargement. The Council concluded that the Communication should be referred to Coreper for further work leading to a more detailed discussion at a future Council.

The Presidency introduced its note on the future competitiveness work programme, continuing into the UK and Austrian presidencies. I mentioned that I planned to hold a competitiveness dinner on 6 May to which I will invite Industry Ministers and members of the Competitiveness Advisory Group. Austria will use informal Industry Council to involve representatives of small and medium enterprises.

Debates also took place on research and development, Aerospace and the Information Society. The Council agreed the conclusions on Electronic Commerce. There were presentations on SMEs, the Construction Industry

Acquired Rights Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment the Government have made of the effect of the judgment in the Suzan case in the European Court of Justice on its policy towards the acquired rights directive; and if she will make a statement. [19211]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are currently reviewing their policy on the Acquired Rights Directive and will shortly be issuing a public consultation document setting out and seeking views on all relevant issues, including the implications of the Suzan judgment.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what awards have been made in respect of petroleum production licences for blocks 204/14 and 204/15 west of Shetland. [19650]

Mr. Battle: I am pleased to announce the award of petroleum production licences for blocks 204/14 and 204/15 in the Atlantic Frontier area to a group of companies comprising ARCO British Ltd., Conoco UK Ltd., British-Borneo Oil and Gas Ltd. and Ranger Oil (UK) Ltd.

We received six very strong applications for these blocks, which were offered for licensing by a Notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, C205 of 5 July 1997. All six met the award criteria set out in the Notice, but the work programme submitted by the ARCO consortium offers the best scheme for timely and thorough exploration of the full range of prospects in both blocks.

After applications for the blocks had been received, a Note was received from the Danish Government reserving its position regarding a possible claim to a small part of the North West corner of block 204/14. Our response to the Note stated that the UK has no doubts about its sovereign right to licence the block. Both the Danish and Faroese Governments have been kept fully advised about the designation and offer of the area concerned. All six applicants were informed about the Note and all confirmed that they wished their applications to proceed.

Council for Science and Technology

Mr. Coaker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will publish the Council for Science and Technology's recent advice on research issues arising from the Dearing Committee's report on higher education. [19652]

Mrs. Beckett: In the past, the Council for Science and Technology has been accused of being a rather secretive body. We wish to change this perception and raise its public profile. In future there will be a presumption in favour of publishing detailed advice from the Council.

When I gave evidence to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on 29 October I said that we would shortly publish the Council's advice on the research issues arising from the Dearing Committee's report. I can now confirm that we are publishing this advice today. I must however make it clear that it represents the views of the independent members of the Council, not necessarily mine or other

The Council's advice will feed into our broader consideration of the research aspects of the Dearing recommendations and we will be issuing policy statements in due course. The timing of these will depend on a number of factors, including the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review.

More generally, my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Science, Industry and Energy and I are now considering how to revitalise the Council as a key source of advice on science and technology issues and will make an announcement on this as soon as possible.

I have arranged copies of the Council's advice to be placed in the Library of the House.

Toys (Safety)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information her Department has collated to establish the number of children who have become ill from coming into contact with toys containing cyclobutanone. [18910]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: No accidents involving toys containing cyclobutanone have been identified in my Department's Home Accident Surveillance System, nor have any been drawn to the attention of the DTI from any other source. If the hon. Member has such evidence I would be grateful to receive it.

HEALTH

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the oral statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15491]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave him on 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 617. All procurement decisions in the Department are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of community health councils; and what matters were discussed. [18300]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health met with representatives of the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales (ACHCEW) on 1 July 1997 and discussed a range of National Health Service matters which they raised.

My noble Friend the Baroness Jay, Minister of State, has agreed to meet representatives of ACHCEW on a six monthly basis and expects to meet them again early in the new year.

Wigan and Bolton Health Authority

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the accident and emergency services of the Wigan and Bolton Health Authority with particular

Mr. Boateng: This is a matter for the health authority. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently approved a change to the opening hours of the minor injuries unit at Leigh Infirmary. Wigan and Bolton Health Authority has been allocated £1.4 million in winter pressures money and will use this additional funding to increase the capacity of the hospitals and social services departments in the district to deal with rising numbers of emergency admissions.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funding his Department is providing for research into the causes and prevention of breast cancer. [18525]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are committed to encouraging breast cancer research. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). Since 1995–96, the Council has supported 81 projects on breast cancer with a total cost of £13 million. Six projects were also supported in MRC Units at a cost of £1.4 million in 1995–96.

The Department of Health's Policy Research Programme (PRP) is currently funding studies into breast cancer with a total cost of £2.4 million. In addition, the PRP provides support of £420,000 per year to the Cancer Screening Evaluation Unit at the Institute of Cancer Research, which deals largely with breast cancer screening. Recent commissions include a contribution of £573,000 to the UKCCCR's (United Kingdom Co-ordinating Committee on Cancer Research) Breast Radiotherapy Fractionation Trial (the START trial) and over £100,000 to evaluate the East Sussex and Leeds/Wakefield pilot projects currently being established for breast screening in women aged 65 to 69.

The NHS National Cancer Research and Development Programme is currently funding studies into breast cancer totalling some £500,000.

Breast Screening Services

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has for improving the (a) breast screening service and (b) symptomatic breast service. [18511]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are committed to providing high quality breast services.

In the light of the recent failure of the breast screening programme in Exeter, the Government have announced wide ranging action on the organisation and management of cancer screening, to strengthen quality assurance, eliminate weaknesses in the management of screening, and restore public confidence. In addition to this, we are funding research into ways to improve the standard of the breast screening service offered to women. This includes pilot schemes to evaluate the effectiveness of extending the screening programme to invite women aged 65 to 69 routinely for screening; and research into the possible benefits of screening women more frequently than every

We intend to improve all cancer services and fully endorse the recommendations set out in the Calman/Hine document "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services". As a first step we have made available £10 million of extra resources specifically for breast cancer services. The additional funding is supporting over 300 initiatives around the country to improve the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer. Particular emphasis has been given to supporting projects that give rapid access to diagnostic services through the provision of one-stop clinics, speeding access to treatment by reducing waiting times and the provision of high quality care delivered in line with published guidance by specialist multi-disciplinary teams.

Head Lice

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of cases of head lice in schools for each health authority in England for each of the last five years; [18714]

(2) what advice is issued by his Department to health authorities to deal with the problem of head lice in schools; [18715]

(3) what his Department has done to promote best practice in dealing with head lice in schools. [18713]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the number of cases of head lice in schools is not collected centrally. In April 1996, the Department of Health launched a poster and leaflet campaign "The Prevention and Treatment of Head Lice". So far, over 1.5 million copies of the leaflet have been sent to parents, teachers and health professionals. The Department's publication, "Child Health in the Community: A Guide to Good Practice", issued to health and local authorities in September 1996, includes guidance on best practice in dealing with head lice in schools. We shall continue to work with the Department for Education and Employment to promote best practice, focusing on a "whole school approach"—where action is taken at the same time to detect and treat every case of head lice within the school thus minimising opportunities for re-infestation. This approach is actively promoted by the voluntary organisation, Community Hygiene Concern, whose efforts we support through grant aid. In addition Consultants in Communicable Disease Control, who have local responsibility for public health programmes, are currently working on a review document on head lice.

Departmental Press Office

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the changes he has introduced to his Department's press office. [18728]

Mr. Boateng: Good, effective, modern and reliable communication, including the provision of a good, effective, modern and reliable press office, is an essential duty of Government. The Department's Press Office is always looking for ways to improve its services to Ministers. Ministers are always looking for ways to improve communication and the provision of information to the general public and with hon. and noble Member of both Houses. Since 1 May, Ministers and the press office have been constructively working

Meningitis

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to increase public awareness of meningitis; [18879]

(2) what sums his Department has spent in each of the last three years on increasing public awareness of meningitis. [18880]

Mr. Boateng: The Chief Medical Officer (CMO) holds an annual press briefing for journalists to raise public, professional and media awareness of meningitis. CMO also writes to all doctors each year giving advice on the early diagnosis of suspected cases of meningococcal infection and stressing the need for immediate antibiotic treatment and urgent referral to hospital. The Department of Health contributes to the many articles in newspapers and the medical press, and television and radio programmes that appear during the winter increase in cases.

This year's briefing took place on 3 November. This year, we have also revised the Department's information leaflet entitled "Knowing about meningitis and septicaemia" available to the public from GPs' surgeries. Meningococcal infections peak with most cases in children under one year, and there is a second smaller peak in late teenagers. Extra information is, therefore, targeted in these areas. The Health Education Authority (HEA), funded by the Department, produces the leaflet "A Guide to Childhood Immunisations", which includes advice on recognising the signs and symptoms of meningitis and is provided to new parents. The HEA also produce a leaflet targeted at students, "Look out for your mate", which is distributed to colleges and universities. The Department provides funding to both the National Meningitis Trust and the Meningitis Research Foundation to support their valuable information work. Both organisations took part in this year's press briefing.

It is not possible to identify the amount spent on public awareness of meningitis separately as it is a key theme of the Department's, the HEA's and the meningitis charities', information campaigns at this time of year. The costs of preparing, printing and distributing leaflets and posters such as "A Guide to Childhood Immunisations" and "Look out for your mate" are subsumed within the HEA/DH contract covering immunisation awareness. Around one million copies of "A Guide to Childhood Immunisations", which is updated annually, are produced each year and around 1.2 million "Look out for your mate" leaflets and posters were distributed this year. 250,000 copies of the Department's leaflet were printed this year.

Barnardos

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the change in policy by Barnardos to allow former children access to their personal files; and if he will provide a section 64 special project grant to Barnardos in support

Mr. Boateng: There have been no representations to the Department concerning the change in policy by Barnardos to allow former children access to their personal files. No application for Section 64 funding has been received from Barnardos for a project of this nature.

Anti-Smoking Initiatives

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made in the current year for anti-smoking initiatives. [19105]

Mr. Boateng: In 1997–98, the Government are funding an adult smoking campaign costing £5.5 million being run by the Health Education Authority. A teenage smoking campaign costing £1 million is being run by Brewer Blackler Limited.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the second report of Parliament on the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme. [19653]

Mr. Milburn: The second Report to Parliament on the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme was published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people in the Ashford (Middlesex) Hospital NHS Trust area had been waiting for treatment for more than (a) 24 months, (b) 18 months and (c) 12 months on (i) 31 March and (ii) 30 September; [18416]

(2) how many people in the St. Peter's (Chertsey) Hospital NHS Trust area had been waiting for treatment for more than (a) 24 months, (b) 18 months and (c) 12 months on (i) 31 March and (ii) 30 September; [18417]

(3) how many people in the West Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust area had been waiting for treatment for more than (a) 24 months, (b) 18 months and (c) 12 months on (i) 31 March and (ii) 30 September. [18420]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is given in the table.

Hospital Mergers

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the criteria in respect of (a) financial savings, (b) waiting list reduction, (c) increase in treatments and (d) reduction in managerial staff numbers he will use in his decision on the proposed merger between the Ashford (Middlesex) and St. Peter's (Chertsey) Hospital NHS Trust. [18419]

Mr. Milburn: Any proposal to merge National Health Service trusts will be considered on its own merits. Most importantly, they must lead to benefits for patients in improved health care. We have set a minimum target of £500,000 management savings which must be realised in the first two years of merger and be reinvested in patient care.

Fundholding

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by practice (a) the underspend and (b) the overspend of general practitioner fundholding practices in the West Surrey Health Authority area in each year since 1993. [18418]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not held centrally on expenditure from general practitioner fundholder budgets at practice level. Such information can be obtained directly from the practices concerned.

The table details the number of GP fundholders showing retained savings (net of any savings voluntarily returned to their health authority before audit) or overspending in Surrey in each financial year from 1993–94 to 1995–96, and the total level of retained savings or overspends made on their budgets. These data are taken from GP fundholders' accounts. Audited data for 1996–97 are not yet available.

Bed Blocking

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by (a) health authority area and (b) social services authority area the number of hospital beds blocked by patients waiting for social services placements. [18516]

Mr. Boateng: Information collected on delayed discharge, by health authority, has been placed in the Library. This information is not collected centrally on a social services authority basis.

Accounting Officers

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what circumstances; and on what dates. [19216]

Mr. Boateng: Health Ministers have not issued any such directions in the last five years.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with groups and individuals opposed to xenotransplantation. [18912]

Mr. Boateng: No formal discussions have taken place with groups or individuals opposed to xenotransplantation. A wide range of opinions were received in response to a consultation exercise held between 25 January 1996 and 29 March 1996 by the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation and detailed in its report, "Animal Tissue into Humans". Views were sought during a further consultation period which began in January 1997 with the publication of that report. The United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority has offered the Government advice on the responses and issues arising from this latest consultation exercise. This is presently under consideration.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total cost to the National Health Service of millennium compliance. [19201]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available to estimate accurately the total costs of millennium compliancy. The best estimate available from industry and other sources is to between £200 and £300 million. This does not include expenditure in resolving the embedded chip problem for which no estimates are currently available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flooding (Thames and Medway Estuaries)

8. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the impact of rising water levels on the potential for flooding in the Thames and Medway estuaries. [17672]

Mr. Morley: The Department's current guidance to flood defence operating authorities is that an allowance of 6 mm a year should be made for relative sea level rise due to global warming and vertical land movements when assessing the need for further coastal defence measures in the south of England.

Less Favoured Areas

11. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from farmers in the less-favoured areas; and if he will make a statement. [17675]

Dr. John Cunningham: I and my Ministerial colleagues have received many representations from farmers in the less-favoured areas. We are considering the case the industry has made for increasing the rates of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance and I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Hill Farming

12. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next proposes to meet hill farmers in Northumberland to discuss farm incomes. [17676]

Dr. John Cunningham: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary is planning to visit Hexham later this month to meet local farming representatives.

17. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he has taken to improve (a) the incomes and (b) the security of hill farmers. [17681]

Mr. Morley: An announcement will be made shortly on support for hill farmers.

Environmental Initiatives (Norfolk Broads)

Mr. Morley: We have just announced new targets for protecting and enhancing the grazing marsh land of the Broads by increasing the uptake of the Environmentally Sensitive Area scheme.

Organophosphate Sheep Dips

14. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made towards a moratorium on the use of organophosphates in sheep dips. [17678]

Mr. Rooker: No veterinary medicine is authorised for use unless it meets stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. The Government act on the advice of the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee, which has recently reaffirmed its advice that, provided they are used safely, there is no scientific justification for withdrawing organophosphate sheep dips from the market.

We constantly remind users of the need to follow instructions and advice as to procedure in use of such authorised products.

Dr. Brand: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to implement recommendations made in the 1997 Veterinary Products Committee Report, with particular reference to those relating to the use and purchase of organophosphorous sheep dips. [18164]

Mr. Rooker: New guidance from the Health and Safety Executive will be sent to all registered sheep farmers in the New Year. It will emphasise the importance of the Certificate of Competence in the Safe Use of Sheep Dips. It will explain practical measures for planning and carrying out dipping, including the steps necessary under the Control of Substances to Health Regulations 1994 (COSHH) to assess the risks and decide what precautions are needed, and will advise on safe disposal of used sheep dip.

In parallel, the National Proficiency Tests Council is reviewing its testing scheme for the Certificate of Competence and will incorporate the recommendations of the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC).

Other recommendations of the VPC, relating to supply of organophosphate (OP) dips by veterinarians, labelling, disposal, research and reviews of non-OP dips and other OP veterinary medicines, have been implemented or are being actively pursued.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have notified his Ministry or the Department of Health to date that they are suffering from the toxic side effects of exposure to organophosphate sheep dips; and if he will make a statement. [18208]

Mr. Rooker: The Department of Health does not keep records of human suspected adverse reactions (SARs) to organophosphorus sheep dips. The Committee on Safety of Medicines Adverse Reactions Appraisal Panel for human SARs are published annually and are available in the Library of the House. The Panel's Report for 1996 will be published shortly. It will show that, for the 11 years up to December 1996, there were 602 reports of human SARs to organophosphorus sheep dips.

Common Agricultural Policy

15. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his main objectives are in respect of CAP reform. [17679]

Dr. John Cunningham: I want to secure a market oriented policy with less costly farm support decoupled from agricultural production; a better deal for consumers and more emphasis placed on target environmental and rural development objectives.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reforms to the Common Agriculture Policy the Government propose; and what account will be taken of rural development policy and its impact on the rural economy. [18794]

Mr. Rooker: The Government want to secure a market oriented policy with less costly farm support decoupled from agricultural production; and more emphasis placed on targeted environmental and rural development objectives.

Biodiversity

16. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to achieve biodiversity targets. [17680]

Mr. Morley: Actions taken by the Department are set out in a paper prepared for the UK Biodiversity Group "MAFF's Role in Implementing the Biodiversity Action Plans". I have today placed a copy in the Library of the House.

Food Imports

18. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom food imports could be grown in Britain; and what success the United Kingdom has had in reducing such imports. [17682]

Mr. Rooker: Provisional figures indicate that last year the UK was 69 per cent. self-sufficient in terms of food and feed products or materials that could be grown in season, in the UK. This figure shows a reduction of about 4 per cent. on the average in recent years, mainly as a result of reduced output and exports of beef and higher levels of imported meat and meat products.

Access to Open Country

19. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on access to open country. [17683]

Dr. John Cunningham: My Department has received

Milk (Dioxin Levels)

20. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will establish a continuing survey of dioxin levels in milk in North-East Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement. [17684]

Mr. Rooker: Samples of cows' milk from farms in the north-east Derbyshire area have been analysed regularly since 1991, when elevated levels of dioxins were first discovered. Samples taken in July 1997 from 19 farms in the Bolsover area showed that levels of dioxins in the milk have fallen and are now generally similar to those found in other parts of the UK. The need for further surveys will be reviewed next year in the light of the results from samples taken in October this year and the next survey planned for July 1998.

Environmentally Friendly Farming

22. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken to encourage environmentally friendly farming. [17686]

Mr. Morley: The Government are working with conservation and farming organisations to improve the efficiency and targeting of agri-environment schemes. Existing schemes are regularly reviewed and, where appropriate, we are also developing new initiatives. The pilot Arable Stewardship scheme, which will be introduced next year, is aimed at restoring the wildlife interest of arable farmland areas and includes measures for reversing the loss of plant and animal species which are largely dependent on arable crops. We have also established, through the National Agri-Environment Forum, a working group to address the environmental issues associated with the uplands.

In addition, the Organic Conversion Information Service helps farmers decide whether organic farming would be appropriate for them, as well as providing more detailed advice for those considering conversion. We are reviewing the rates and structure of aid, under the Organic Aid Scheme, for those considering conversion to organic farming. We are also considering, in consultation with farming and conservation organisations, the practicality of drawing up a Code of Good Agricultural Practice for Wildlife and Landscape.

For the future, the Government see a continuing and increasing role for environmental incentive schemes as part of a reformed CAP.

Food Labelling

23. Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve food labelling for consumers. [17687]

28. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy on improving food labelling information for consumers. [17693]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to our hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 339.

Abattoirs

24. Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the provision of abattoirs. [17688]

Mr. Rooker: There are currently 29 abattoirs operating the Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS) in the UK. These were awarded contracts in July 1997 following a competitive tender exercise run by the Intervention Board. It was necessary to reduce the number of abattoirs participating in OTMS as numbers of cattle entering the scheme diminished.

The plants were chosen on the basis of objective criteria, principally proximity to the main production areas, hygiene standards and value for money. Together, they provide more than enough capacity to handle the number of animals now expected to come forward under the OTMS, with an allowance which can be factored in to cope with seasonal fluctuations.

Some journey times may have increased, but in general, all cattle are travelling no further to abattoirs than they were prior to the OTMS and in many cases the distances are shorter. Also, the number of livestock markets participating in the scheme has not changed, so access for farmers should not have been seriously affected.

Although there are no OTMS abattoirs in Sussex, sufficient capacity is available in the South East to handle effectively all cattle presented under the scheme in the area.

Food Safety

25. Mr. Lepper: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spends on (a) food safety and (b) standards surveys; and how much he expects to spend in the current year. [17689]

Mr. Rooker: The Department spends about £8.5 million on food surveys of which more than 95 per cent. is on food safety. Microbiological surveillance accounts for £413,000 with the remainder funding the food chemical surveillance programme. A similar level of spend is expected for the current year.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to improve standards of food safety. [17691]

Mr. Rooker: We are already taking such steps by the establishment of the Food Standards Agency and other related measures.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the number of food samples submitted each year from 1990 to date to public analysts for analysis; and if he will make a statement. [18911]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested forms part of our statistical return to the EU Commission, which is published and copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. However, the specific information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of samples (UK figures)
1996	62,350
1995	63,726

Year	Number of samples[1] (UK figures)
1994	65,162
1993	67,959
1992	65,398
1991	46,976
1990	[2]—

[1] These are official samples only, i.e. those taken for the purpose of enforcement of the Food Safety Act 1990. They do not include samples taken for surveillance or other purposes, for which information is not held centrally.
[2] No data collected.

Fruit Harvest

27. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from fruit growers regarding problems experienced with the present year's harvest. [17692]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has received a number of representations in writing from Members on behalf of fruit growing constituents and from individual growers. In addition the matter was discussed when my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary met the Horticultural Executive of the National Farmer's Union in July and subsequently visited fruit growers in Kent.

Beef Ban

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress towards the lifting of the beef ban. [17690]

Dr. Jim Cunningham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire (Mr. Ainger).

Rabies Committee

Mr. Malins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the composition of the Kennedy Committee of Inquiry into rabies and quarantine has been finalised; and what is the target date for it to report. [18351]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, columns 410–11.

Live Animal Exports

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 117, to which countries the pigs exported for breeding from January to October 1997 were exported. [18494]

Mr. Rooker: The computer records of animal health UK export certifications show the countries concerned as Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Czech Republic, Chile, China, Columbia, Cyprus, Denmark, Falkland Islands, France, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Republic of Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Japan, Malaysia (Peninsula), Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Singapore, Slovakia, South Korea, Spain, Taiwan, Thailand, Russia, United States of America, Venezuela, Vietnam.

The information is provisional and subject to change.

Agenda 2000

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to which elements of the Agenda 2000 proposals he plans to propose amendments. [18801]

Mr. Rooker: The Government will respond to the Commission's formal legislative proposals once they have been published.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a breakdown of the cost elements and the amounts involved which he used to determine his current published estimated costs of a computerised cattle passport. [18831]

Dr. John Cunningham: The cost of a cattle passport under the Cattle Tracing System has not yet been determined, although it is expected to be in the range of £5 to £10. The current estimated costs of the Cattle Tracing System are broken down as follows:

	£ million
Set-up cost
Database development	3.5
Project management	2.3
British Cattle Movement Service (Accommodation)	3.4
British Cattle Movement Service (Equipment and Services)	3.8
Total	13
Annual running costs
Staff costs	3.2
Accommodation, administration and consumables	3.0
Common services and depreciation	2.8
Office supplies (including cost of "freepost" system for reporting cattle movements)	6.0
Total	15

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated establishment cost of his proposed computerised cattle passport scheme; which MAFF locations will be involved in operating it and what will be their annual running costs; and what are the estimated running costs of the new scheme for each of the first three years of its operation. [18829]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Cattle Tracing System will not only provide cattle passports, but also a computerised register of all cattle in Great Britain, their location and their movement history. The estimated establishment cost is around £13 million. It will be operated by the British Cattle Movement Service, which will be part of my Department, based at Workington in Cumbria. The estimated running costs of the system for each of the first three years of operation are likely to be around £15 million per year.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what charges will be made for the cattle passport scheme; what will be the costs of (a) its establishment and (b) its administration; and if these will be recovered in full from farmers. [18940]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Minister to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) today.

Unpasteurised Cows' Milk

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the advice from the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food on the sale of raw cows' milk for drinking consumption. [18717]

Dr. John Cunningham: The advice of the Committee is unequivocal. This is why I have arranged public consultation on a proposal to ban the sale in England, Wales and Northern Ireland of raw cows' milk for drinking. We will reflect further when the results of public consultation are available.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors underlay his decision to consult interested parties on the sale of unpasteurised cows' milk for drinking consumption. [18716]

Dr. John Cunningham: After careful consideration of the issues, the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food expressed concern about the microbiological quality of unpasteurised cows' milk for drinking and recommended that the sale of such milk be banned in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Such sales are already banned in Scotland.

This is a matter of public health concern and I considered it appropriate to consult interested parties on a proposal to ban its sale.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ministerial announcements have not been made, in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18893]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Announcements made by the Department have followed established Parliamentary procedure. This practice is our policy.

Ostriches

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for changes in the regulations governing the slaughter of ostriches. [18539]

Mr. Morley: I am not proposing any changes to the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995 which set down detailed rules governing the methods of slaughter or killing of farmed animals including ostriches.

Ostriches may be slaughter on farm, or in premises specifically licensed to handle ostriches under the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995. We are also considering the possibility of amending the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 to permit ostrich slaughter in red meat abattoirs which meet specific structural requirements.

Correspondence

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to reply to the letter of the right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk dated 3 September, on the subject of the export of poultry meat to China; and if he will make a statement on his timetable for responding to letters from hon. Members on constituents' concerns. [19116]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Minister replied to the letter regarding the export of poultry meat to China on 2 December.

This Department endeavours to reply to letters from hon. Members and peers within 15 working days. This Department received about 6,000 letters between January and October this year and 77 per cent. of these received a reply within this target.

Tobacco Subsidy

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had on the EU subsidy to tobacco producers with the Commission of the European Union. [17664]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission is in no doubt about UK views and the depth of our concern. We expect new proposals next year. We will continue to press for the greatest possible reform.

Written Answers to Questions

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cattle Passports

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people will be involved in running his proposed computerised cattle passport scheme; and if he will publish a breakdown of the grades involved, together with their salary bandings. [18830]

Dr. John Cunningham: The British Cattle Movement Service will operate the Cattle Tracing System, providing a register of all cattle in Great Britain, their location and their movement history. Once it is fully operational, it will comprise an estimated 261 staff. The anticipated breakdown by grade and the salary bands are given in the following table.

Grade	Estimated number	Salary band (£)
6	1	32,100–51,256
7	1	26,100–41,718
SEO	1	20,700–32,812
HEO	6	16,300–22,147
EO	24	10,093–17,715
AO	153	8,285–10,695
AA	61	6,612–8,050
SGB2	14	6,612–8,050
Total	261

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under his proposed computerised cattle passport scheme (a) how many passports are estimated to be issued annually and (b) how many passports he estimates will be issued in each of the scheme's first three years. [18828]

Dr. John Cunningham: It is estimated that between 2.5 million and 3 million passports will be issued annually.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his proposals for the cattle passport scheme. [18939]

Mr. Rooker: On 30 July I announced that the Government was setting up a computerised cattle tracing system (CTS) which would be fully operational in 1998. The system will be administered by a new public sector organisation, the British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS), which will manage cattle movements and respond to database queries. On 7 October I also announced that the Government had decided to centralise the issue of cattle passports at the BCMS. The new scheme will give the UK one of the most advanced cattle tracing systems in Europe.

Vitamin B6 Supplements

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of his decision to restrict the general retail sale of higher dose vitamin B6 supplements on (a) consumers, (b) manufacturers and (c) retailers. [18969]

Mr. Rooker: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy has advised that 1.4 mg of vitamin B6 per day is enough to meet the needs of almost all individuals, even those with high needs. The proposed maximum limit of 10 mg per daily dose on the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law is more than seven times greater than this amount. Those who need higher doses for the treatment of medical conditions will continue to be able to obtain them from pharmacies and on prescription.

Information on the impact of the proposed controls on manufacturers and retailers has been requested from relevant trade associations. This will be included in the regulatory assessment which will accompany the draft regulations that will give effect to the controls.

Farming

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to further regulate farming; and if he will make a statement. [19259]

Mr. Rooker: Farming will continue to be regulated where necessary for the implementation of national and EU policies. All regulations introduced will be carefully examined in line with the Government's policy for better regulation to ensure that they are simple, helpful and fair, taking account of the needs of businesses, the citizen and the environment.

Food Safety

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) agencies and (b) committees which report to his Department on food safety. [19358]

Mr. Rooker: The agencies of the Department which undertake work concerned with food safety are:

The Pesticides Safety Directorate

The Veterinary Medicines Directorate

The Meat Hygiene Service

The Central Science Laboratory Agency

The Veterinary Laboratories Agency

The committees that report to the Department on issues relevant to food safety are listed below. Most of these committees also report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes

Advisory Committee on Pesticides

Veterinary Products Committee

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee

Food Advisory Committee

Consumer Panel

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by his Department on food safety in the last year for which figures are available. [19354]

Mr. Rooker: In 1996–97 expenditure on food safety matters totalled £28.13 million. A detailed breakdown of expenditure and receipts is shown under the entries for programmes PP1:01, 1:02, 1:03, 1:07 in Chapter 3 and in Table 33 in Chapter 8, of the MAFF/IB Departmental Report 1997, a copy of which may be found in the Library of the House.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the advantages of replacing the current HLCA with an area-based instrument for farmers in less-favoured areas. [19357]

Mr. Rooker: Under current EC rules, compensatory allowances provided to livestock farmers in the less-favoured areas may be paid only per head of eligible livestock. The Commission's proposals in Agenda 2000 indicate that they are considering transforming compensatory allowances into a basic instrument to maintain and promote low-input farming systems. However, replacing HLCAs with an area-based instrument would not, on its own, necessarily fulfil this objective.

The pros and cons of an area-based instrument are one of the issues being addressed in an evaluation of the HLCA scheme in England, being undertaken by Drew Associates and Exeter University on behalf of the Ministry. That report will be published shortly. Other similar studies are in hand in respect of the other constituent parts of the UK. The Government is also considering HLCAs as part of its Comprehensive Spending Review and will further consider the options in the light of the Commission's detailed proposals following Agenda 2000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers from (a) the Czech Republic and (b) the Slovak Republic have arrived (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) at the port of Dover in each month since 1 May. [17137]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table. Overall data for the month of November are not yet available, but provisional figures indicate that only five Czechs/Slovaks applied for asylum on arrival at Dover during November.

Community Safety

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution county-based organisations will be expected to make to district-based community safety organisations and partnerships. [18937]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill will place a joint obligation on local authorities and the police service to develop strategies for reducing crime and disorder in each district, borough and unitary local authority area in England and Wales. Where the two tier structure of local Government still exists, county councils will have an obligation to participate in this process on an equal basis.

The Bill will also give the Home Secretary power to designate by Order other key local agencies which must be involved. At county level or wider, these are likely to include police authorities, probation committees and health authorities.

Nothing in the Bill will prevent the developments (or continuation) of county-based co-ordination of the district strategies if that is what the partners locally want. The legal obligation, however, will be to produce strategies based on district, borough and unitary authority areas.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what future role the Crime Prevention Panel has, with particular reference to community safety. [18938]

Mr. Michael: Crime Prevention Panels and their equivalent for young people, known as Youth Action Groups, have done some enormously valuable work over the years. I am determined that the knowledge and experience which they have amassed should not be lost as we move towards the creation of new statutory crime prevention partnerships. Some Crime Prevention Panels may merge into the new partnerships; that will be a matter for local decision. But where they do not, we intend to require the local authorities and the police, in discharging their new obligations, to invite them—along with a wide variety of other agencies—to participate in the process.

Children and Vulnerable Adults

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he intends to implement Part V of the Police Act 1997; [18998]

(2) what plans he has to give voluntary organisations working with children and vulnerable adults access to the criminal records of prospective staff and volunteers. [18999]

Mr. Michael: We are reviewing the provisions of Part V of the Police Act 1997 in the light of our top priority in this area which is the protection of children and vulnerable adults. As we promised when the provisions of Part V of the Act were debated in the House, we will consult voluntary organisations before reaching a decision.

Criminal Injury Compensation

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the four-year limit for claiming criminal injury compensation. [19342]

Mr. Michael: The time limit for submitting claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority, which administers the new, tariff-based compensation scheme introduced on 1 April 1996, is two years. The operation of the scheme as a whole is monitored on a continuing basis, but there are no plans to make any changes until the findings of the current comprehensive spending review have been considered.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parades and Marches

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 14 November 1997, Official Report, column 693, concerning compensation claims arising from disturbances during July, what is the time scale for the completion and payment of the outstanding (a) criminal injury and (b) criminal damage claims. [18197]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. D. A. Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. A. Stanley to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 2 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding the timeframe for the completion and payment of compensation claims arising from disturbances during July.

The speed with which the necessary information to support a case becomes available can influence the time taken to resolve the claims. However, the Agency has key performance targets for the average time taken to make decisions in criminal injury and criminal damage claims of 59 weeks and 19 weeks respectively. It is expected that the July claims will be processed within this time-scale.

Down District Council (Employees)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the perceived religious denomination of employees of Down District Council. [18711]

Mr. Ingram: In common with all other specified Public Authorities, Down District Council is required to monitor the religious composition of its work force on an annual basis. The latest available monitoring information is contained in the FEC's Seventh Annual Monitoring Report which was published in March 1997. That document shows that the composition in 1996 was:

	Number	Per cent.
Protestant	70	28
Roman Catholic	180	72
Other	7	—
Total	257

Mr. Andy Wood

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the financial settlement given to Mr. Andy Wood following his removal as head of the Northern Ireland Information Service. [18665]

Marjorie Mowlam: Mr. Wood remains a Civil Servant. The financial arrangements between the Department and Mr. Wood are a private matter for them.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what duties Mr. Andy Wood, former head of the Northern Ireland Information Service, is carrying out on behalf of (a) the Northern Ireland Office; and (b) the Home Office; what is the nature of the work; and how long he is expected to be employed. [18664]

Marjorie Mowlam: Mr. Wood is conducting a joint Home Office/Northern Ireland Office project concerning the handling of the media during major incidents. It is expected that he will conclude the project during the first half of 1998.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members her Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19315]

Clare Short: My Department has employed two special advisers since 1 May 1997. Their combined annual salary totals £53,592. They have claimed no other benefits. Prior to 1 May, DFID was not a Cabinet Department and had no special advisers.

No task force members or review body members have been employed since 1 May 1997, or in the period immediately before that, other than staff carrying out policy and management review functions as part of their continuing work. Members of the business community and other figures in public life have contributed to the work of my Department without charge.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Responsibilities

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Minister in her Department is responsible for liaising with the Department for International Development on WTO matters. [18946]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for North Shropshire (Mr. Paterson) on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 646-47. Responsibility for WTO matters falls to my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if she will make a statement about her Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18901]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Since 1 May, my Department has made 455 announcements by press release, including a number relating to public speeches. All major announcements are made to Parliament first when it is sitting, excluding certain market-sensitive decisions. Recent announcements include the extension of the fossil fuel levy to imported electricity, the review to modernise partnership law and the Bill to introduce the National Minimum Wage. Press briefings are usually held to give further explanation to announcements, after they have been made public.

TREASURY

Euro (Information Campaigns)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sums he is seeking from the European Union to finance information campaigns about the euro; and what plans he has for expenditure of such sums. [19205]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The Government has applied to the European Commission for financial assistance towards the cost of producing and distributing the Treasury's business guide "Practical Information for Business". The European Commission has approved the request in principle.

The Government is currently engaged in a dialogue with the European Commission on future financial assistance to help inform business and the wider public about preparation for EMU.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's estimate of the number of additional (a) accountants and (b) other staff who will need to be employed by central government as a result of the switch to resource accounting and budgeting. [19157]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The move to resource accounting and budgeting will mean that there is a greater need for skills in finance and accountancy throughout government departments, and at all levels. It is for individual departments to decide on how best to meet this need, whether through development, training or recruitment. There are no central estimates of the amount of additional staff, if any, who will be employed as part of this process.

Productivity

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his oral statement of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 773, what was the source document of his statement that United Kingdom's productivity today is 20 per cent. less than that of the United Kingdom's main competitors. [18543]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor's statement that UK productivity is some 20 per cent. below our main competitors was based on OECD sources. Figures on productivity levels can be found in "Labour productivity comparisons in selected OECD countries", published by the OECD, June 1996. Further information can be derived from OECD Economic Outlook, June 1997 and OECD Employment Outlook, July 1997.

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor for the Exchequer, pursuant to his pre-Budget report, paragraph 4.19, what was the percentage of (a) skilled and (b) semi-skilled manual workers suffering from (i) low literacy and (ii) low numeracy in (A) France, (B) Germany, (C) Japan and (D) the USA in 1996. [19159]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government is committed to raising literacy and numeracy levels to ensure that Britain has a flexible labour force capable of competing effectively in the global economy. The table compares literacy and numeracy levels in Britain, Germany and the USA. Figures for France and Japan are not available on a consistent basis.

Percentage of workers suffering from low literacy and low numeracy (1996 figures)

Airport Tax (Charities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Chernobyl Children Lifeline in respect of the waiving of airport tax for charitable purposes; and what response he has made. [18855]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government has received numerous written representations from the Chernobyl Children Lifeline requesting that the children they help be exempt from air passenger duty when they leave the United Kingdom.

UK registered charities already benefit from a range of tax reliefs such as gift aid and the payroll scheme. These encourage charitable donation by focusing on what people give rather than what charities spend. Additionally, in his last Budget the Chancellor announced a review of the taxation of charities and invited contributions from interested parties. Although the main focus of the review will be the current VAT arrangements, all aspects of the tax system will be taken into consideration.

Incapacity (Tax Allowances)

Audrey Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many husbands currently receive a tax allowance for incapacitated wives, and a what costs; [18823]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of women who would be entitled to a tax allowance for an incapacitated husband if the present provision for men with incapacitated wives were to be extended to women with incapacitated husbands; and what is his estimate of the cost. [18822]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that in 1997–98 around 10,000 husbands with children and a totally incapacitated wife receive the additional personal allowance. This costs about £5 million.

It is not possible to provide a reliable cost of extending this allowance to wives with incapacitated husbands and children.

Windfall Tax

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the impact of the windfall tax. [18796]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Since the Budget announcement on 2 July, representations have been received from some 16 companies and organisations, 25 members of the public and from one hon. Member. The contents of these representations are treated as confidential, although it is open to those involved to make their views public.

SCOTLAND

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1988–99 planned expenditure. [15249]

Mr. Dewar: Expenditure on publicity and advertising for the years requested is shown in the tables:

The Scottish Office

1993–94	1,366,000
1994–95	2,256,000
1995–96	1,770,000
1996–97	3,564,000
1997–98 (year to date)	1,842,000

The only figures currently available for 1997–98 are spends to date.

Agencies

1993–94	508,000
1994–95	869,000
1995–96	1,008,000
1996–97	1,026,000
1997–98 (year to date)	643,000

The only figures currently available for 1997–98 are spends to date.

Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies

1993–94	9,433,000
1994–95	12,161,000
1995–96	13,987,000
1996–97	14,631,000

Figures for 1997–98 spend to date and full year estimate are not currently available.

The greater part of the expenditure by the 38 Scottish NDPBs is incurred by the Scottish Tourist Board (promoting Scotland as a tourist destination), Scottish Enterprise (promoting economic development in Scotland and publicising Local Enterprise Companies), and Scottish Natural Heritage (promoting and raising awareness of Scotland's natural heritage). In 1996–97 spend by these organisations was £8.7 million, £2.5 million and £1 million respectively.

Detailed budgets for 1998–99 have yet to be agreed.

Sentence Reviews (Manslaughter)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions he has attempted to increase the length of a sentence applied for manslaughter; and in what proportion of cases he has been successful in each year since 1990. [19258]

Mr. McLeish: The Lord Advocate has, since 1993, had the power to appeal against sentences which appear to him to be unduly lenient, or in the case of certain disposals, inappropriate.

He has exercised the power on three occasions in respect of sentences or other disposals imposed following convictions for culpable homicide.

The first such appeal, taken in 1995, was refused. The second appeal, taken in 1996 was allowed by the High Court of Justiciary, as was the third, taken in 1997.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Immigration (Punjab)

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the applications for entry clearance to the UK received at the embassy in New Delhi were from people living in the Punjab in the last year for which figures are available. [18655]

Mr. Fatchett: It is not possible to provide an accurate figure for the percentage of entry clearance applications received in the High Commission in New Delhi from people living in the Punjab. The High Commission's computer system does not hold this information and to conduct a manual sift would incur disproportionate cost.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure that any information material on Economic and Monetary Union funded by the Government will be impartial as to the advantages and disadvantages of the proposal. [19128]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has made clear, our intention is to provide information on EMU to help business and the public prepare for the single currency. We have no intention of funding propaganda on the euro's advantages or disadvantages.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government has any plans to fund information material on Economic and Monetary Union. [19131]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Yes. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has made clear, some public money will be spent on providing information to help business and the wider public prepare for the euro.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure that any information campaign on Economic and Monetary Union funded by the European Commission will be impartial as to the advantages and disadvantages of the proposal. [19129]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The conditions attached to the PRINCE budget line, which includes the information programme on the euro, stipulate that the money should not be used for measures which could be regarded as propaganda.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in obtaining funding from the European Commission for information material on Economic and Monetary Union. [19133]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have applied to the Commission for financial assistance towards the cost of producing and distributing the Treasury booklet "EMU: Practical Information for Business". The Commission has approved this request in principle. We are currently engaged in a dialogue with the Commission about future financial assistance to help inform business and the wider public about EMU.

Northern Cyprus

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent remarks by Sir David Hannay on the Turkish population in Northern Cyprus. [19022]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Nothing in Sir David Hannay's remarks in his interview with the Greek Cypriot newspaper Phileleftheros on 14 November implied, or was intended to imply, a shift in our policy over non-recognition of the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", which remains unchanged.

BBC World Service

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what circumstances, and by whom, staff employed by the BBC World Service are subject to vetting. [18913]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 4 December 1997]: A limited number of BBC World Service staff are security checked by the World Service to enable them to have limited and authorised access to some official documents and to facilitate discussion with Government Departments. Several employees at BBC Monitoring are security cleared for the same reasons.

Kurdish Members of Parliament

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to persuade the Turkish authorities to release imprisoned Kurdish members of parliament. [18744]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have made a number of representations to the Turkish government about the imprisonment of the four Kurdish former DEP (Democracy Party) Members of Parliament. We have repeatedly stressed that the conviction of elected politicians for the non-violent expression of their opinions can only damage Turkey's international standing.

We have been encouraged by recent reports, from Turkey that imply that one of the MP's, Ms Leyla Zana, may soon be released on health grounds.

Holocaust Victims (Gold)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the internal report into the theft of gold from victims of the Holocaust was first made available to ministers in his Department. [19260]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This department published two reports containing information from the British archives on Nazi gold in September 1996 and May 1997. Both reports contain details of the theft of gold by the Nazi regime from governments and individuals. Separately, a draft joint DTI/FCO report about the treatment of enemy property held in the UK during and after World War II was delivered to the office of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 1 December. It will be published as soon as possible.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he is having with London borough councils on their role in Millennium projects. [18575]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has established a Millennium Co-ordination Group and a number of sub-groups to ensure that interested bodies are involved at all stages of the millennium planning process. The London sub-group includes representatives from the Association of London Government, (who represent the Greater London Boroughs).

I recently had the honour of addressing a conference organised by the Association of London Government which brought together representatives of the London Boroughs and the private and voluntary sector to discuss "London: the Millennium City".

My Department also liaises on a regular basis with the Association of London Government Millennium Festival Steering Group, which brings together public, private and voluntary sector organisations, to discuss how best to facilitate the organisation of events.

National Lottery

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what assessment he has made of the number of applications to the National Lottery distributing bodies made to date from organisations in the Romford constituency; and if he will make a statement; [18357]

(2) how many bodies in the Romford constituency have had applications to the National Lottery distributing bodies turned down. [18356]

Mr. Banks: To date organisations in the Romford constituency have made 83 applications to the Lottery distributing bodies. Of these, applications 7 were successful, 75 were unsuccessful and 1 is still being considered. Details are set out in the following table. The seven successful applications have a total value of £322,032. Decisions on applications are a matter for the distributing bodies.

Sports Council	3	1	2	0
Arts Council	6	3	3	0

Regional Theatres

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how much public funding has been made available to the (a) Liverpool Everyman, (b) Liverpool Playhouse, (c) Manchester Royal Exchange, and (d) Birmingham Repertory theatres in each year since 1994–95; and from what sources; [18401]

(2) what discussions his Department has held with the Arts Council, North West Arts and other public bodies concerning funding for (a) the Everyman and (b) the Playhouse theatres, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement. [18402]

Mr. Fisher: The Department's funding for the arts is channelled through the Arts Council and the Regional Arts Boards. Ministers do not intervene in the decisions they take. The following table details the information requested:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £	1996–97 £	1997–98 £

BBC Archive Collection

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the management by the BBC of its archive collection; and if he will make a statement. [19143]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from the Broadcasting, Entertainment, Cinematograph and Theatre Union (BECTU) and from three members of the public, and as a result made inquiries of the BBC. The management and organisation of the BBC's Information and Archives Department are matters for the Corporation itself, but it is obliged under the Royal Charter and Agreement to establish and maintain archives containing material relevant to the objects of the Corporation, and to make the archives available to the public with or without charge. The BBC has assured the Department that it is continuing to meet its archival responsibilities under the Charter and Agreement.

Libraries (Training)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what provision has been made in the current year by library authorities for training in information and communication technology skills for serving and other librarians. [19104]

Mr. Fisher: Expenditure on training is not separately identified in the CIPFA Public Library Statistics, which are the main source of financial information on public libraries. However, a recent report by the Library and Information Commission indicates that the sums involved are likely to be relatively small.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to extend the lifespan of the Millennium Commission. [19166]

Mr. Chris Smith: On 1 October 1997 I announced that the Millennium Commission would receive approximately £2 billion over its lifetime, including £449 million for the Millennium Experience. This is to ensure that the Millennium Commission will have sufficient resources to meet its commitments to the New Millennium Experience Company. On current forecasts of lottery income it will be necessary to continue the funding life of the Millennium Commission until sometime in 2002 to meet this commitment.

Radio Rights

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report column 180, if he will make a statement on progress with his review of the issue of live radio rights; and if the will make a statement. [18853]

Mr. Fisher: On 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 455-56, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an advisory group to assist him in his review of the listed events under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996. The group will consider questions such as the availability of rights to live radio rights to major sporting events before making its recommendations.

Sports Coverage

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1997, Official Report column 180, what assessment he has made of the arrangements for news access to major sporting events; and if he will make a statement on the practice of local radio stations making exclusive deals with more than one local football club in respect of (a) the public interest and (b) the coverage of simultaneous matches. [18852]

Mr. Fisher: The news access code was signed by a number of broadcasters in 1996. Breaches have been rare and the only difficulties of which we are aware have involved events shown on pay-per-view terms. On 25 November 1997, Official Report columns 455-56, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an advisory group to assist him in his review of the listed events under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996. If interested parties believe that the news access code is not functioning satisfactorily, they will no doubt bring this to the attention of the group.

The advisory group will have an opportunity to consider the question of radio access to listed events before making its recommendations, but there is no statutory provision providing for restrictions on the broadcasting of events or the disposition of radio broadcasting rights beyond the normal operation of competition law.

HEALTH

Vitamin B6 Supplements

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Minister for Public Health was involved in the recent decision to limit the general retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements; and what representations she received on this matter from representatives of Glaxo-Wellcome. [18971]

Mr. Boateng: My hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health was involved in the decision to limit the general retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements after studying advice from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) and the Food Advisory Committee (FAC); there were no representations on this matter from representatives of Glaxo-Wellcome.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those members of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment who participated in the formulation of the recent advice which he received on the safety of vitamin B6 supplements; which were specifically experienced in the field of nutrition; and if he will list in the case of each of those individuals any links which they have with the pharmaceutical industry. [18970]

Mr. Boateng: All members of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment participated in the formulation of the recent advice on the safety of vitamin B6 supplements. Details of the members' expertise and a list of their financial interests have been placed in the Library.

Long-term Care Charter

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the introduction of the Government's proposed long-term care charter will be accompanied by additional resources; and what consultation about the charter the Government plans with private and voluntary sector service providers. [14299]

Mr. Boateng: Work on the Charter, which is at an early stage, will set out what people can expect from health, housing and social services. We intend to consult widely—including with voluntary and independent sector organisations—as it is developed. When finalised, the Charter should inform the decisions that local authorities make about the use of the resources allocated to them.

Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the NHS Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group and prioritisation of major capital schemes. [19800]

Mr. Milburn: I am today announcing the establishment of the National Health Service Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group (CPAG). The Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group will assist Ministers to prioritise on a national basis all future major NHS capital projects worth over £25 million. The terms of reference and membership of the group have been placed in the Library.

In future, major capital projects will take place where they are most needed. The development of major schemes will be determined on a national basis, in response to patients' needs, as it should be, not, as it has been, on the basis of market forces, regardless of the wider interests of patients or the NHS.

The Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group's first exercise will be to prioritise those projects wishing to go forward in the next wave of the Private Finance Initiative, following on from the 15 major PFI hospital projects already given the go-ahead. Guidance is being issued today to the NHS Executive regional offices on this process, and all NHS regional offices will examine, with their local NHS trusts and health authorities, the major proposals in their region, to determine which meet the greatest health service need. Each regional office will then be responsible for submitting two schemes to the Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group for national prioritisation and recommendation to Ministers. I plan to announce the next wave of major PFI schemes next spring.

The prioritisation process will be as open and fair as possible. Details of the criteria for assessing health service need that will be used by the regional offices and CPAG have been placed in the Library.

Projects which meet a clear need but are not suitable for PFI will be considered alongside other proposals, in a separate prioritisation exercise next summer for the limited amount of public capital available.

The establishment of the NHS Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group and the launch of the second tranche of major capital schemes clearly demonstrate our commitment to modernising the NHS, and to creating a genuinely national heath service, with new hospitals built where they are needed most and where they will deliver the greatest benefit to patients.

Smoking

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds his Department makes available to assist people who wish to stop smoking. [19355]

Mr. Boateng: In 1997–98, the Government are funding a Health Education Authority run adult smoking education campaign costing £5.5 million. As part of the campaign, £700,000 is being given to Quit to operate the Quitline—telephone helpline—which offers smoking cessation advice, counselling and support.

In addition, a wide range of health professionals, notably general practitioners, routinely offer cessation advice and support. These costs cannot be separately identified.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ECT treatments were carried out in England and Wales in the last year; and what proportion of these were given to people compulsorily under the Mental Health Act 1983. [19293]

Mr. Boateng: Reliable information on the number of people receiving Electro-convulsive Therapy (ECT) in England is not available centrally. During 1996–97 2,378 second opinions were given for ECT under Section 58 of the Mental Health Act 1983 by doctors appointed by the Mental Health Act Commission. This figure does not include patients who gave their consent for this treatment. Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15242]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Expenditure on official hospitality for the Cabinet Office (including expenditure for the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service), its agencies and non-departmental public bodies every year since 1992 is shown in the table:

Period	Cabinet Office £	Agencies £	COI £
1997–98[1]	18,789	8,901	8,168
1996–97	69,401	12,248	21,792
1995–96	73,250	10,578	15,789
1994–95	43,477	16,626	9,200
1993–94	49,285	6,843	5,905
1992–93	55,034	241	4,640

[1] Figures for 1997–98 cover the period 1 May—30 September 1997.

The request for details on expenditure on official hospitality in earlier years is unavailable.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15243]

Dr. David Clark: Expenditure on overseas travel by Cabinet Office (including the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service), its agencies and non-departmental public bodies every year since 1992 is shown in the table:

Period	Cabinet Office £	Agencies £	COI £
1997–98[1]	385,622	278,440	3,043
1996–97	1,500,244	224,709	67,213
1995–96	1,805,089	424,128	134,261
1994–95	1,257,026	314,415	65,078
1993–94	1,500,705	288,976	60,009
1992–93[2]	824,204	n/a	n/a

[1] Figures for 1997–98 cover the period 1 May–30 September 1997.
[2] Agencies and COI figures are not available.

The details on expenditure on overseas travel in earlier years and on the breakdown between air fares and other expenditure is unavailable.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15245]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by the Cabinet Office (including the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of the Public Service), its agencies and non-departmental public bodies every year since 1993 is shown in the table:

Period	Cabinet Office £	Agencies £	COI £
1997–98[1]	1,383,967	108,000	21,000
1997–98[2]	331,588	47,313	16,000
1996–97	1,404,481	98,309	35,000
1995–96	559,578	186,843	0
1994–95	596,437	156,428	0
1993–94	475,908	23,191	0

[1] Figures cover Full Year Estimate for 1997–98.
[2] Figures cover 1997–98, year to date.

Planned expenditure for 1998–99 is not held at this detailed level.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Family Mediation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what funding has been made available by the Lord Chancellor's Department to family mediation services other than National Family Mediation since June 1996; and for what purpose. [18339]

Mr. Hoon: The UK College of Family Mediators has received £49,500 to date towards the production of a directory of mediators, judicial seminars and publicity projects. The Family Mediators Association will shortly receive £50,000 to enable it to help its members meet the Legal Aid Board's franchise specification.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements are (a) in place and (b) being arranged by the Legal Aid Board for publicising the family mediation pilot project under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996. [18340]

Mr. Hoon: Each pilot mediation service has been provided with initial funding for publicity. In addition, the Legal Aid Board has distributed leaflets and posters to the public and all key referral agencies in each of the pilot areas and is supporting the development of local publicity initiatives.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Legal Aid Board's publicity material for the pilot projects under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996 will be issued; and what is the budget for the provision of the publicity. [18341]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board has already issued publicity material for Phase I and continues to do so. Between £50,000 and £60,000 has been spent by the Legal Aid Board on publicity to date.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the total budget for the family mediation pilot projects currently being run by the Legal Aid Board under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996; and if he will make a statement. [18345]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board's expenditure on developing, administering and researching Phase I and on the development of Phase II of the family mediation pilot project is estimated to be in the region of £500,000 for 1997–98.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what funding has been made available to National Family Mediation by the Lord Chancellor's Department since June 1996; what was its purpose; and if he will make a statement. [18338]

Mr. Hoon: National Family Mediation has received £99,400, made available by this Department, to finance various projects aimed at the training of mediators and the development of mediation services. These contracts are managed by the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much funding has been provided by the Lord Chancellor's Department to the UK College of Family Mediators for the production of a commercial directory of the college's membership; and if he will make a statement. [18337]

Mr. Hoon: £10,000 was provided by this Department to enable the UK College to complete publication of the directory of mediators. This contract is managed by the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the budget for the family mediation pilot projects being conducted by the Legal Aid Board under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996 is being paid direct to mediation organisations and individual mediators for the provision of mediation services. [18336]

Mr. Hoon: On the basis of current volume estimates, approximately £2 million will be paid directly to mediation services for the provision of mediation in 1997–98.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the total cost of the Legal Aid Board's research into the family mediation pilot project under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996. [18335]

Mr. Hoon: The estimated cost of the family mediation pilot research project in 1997–98 is £300,000.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the publicity material issued by the Legal Aid Board in connection with the pilot projects under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996 will be available in the Welsh language. [18342]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board's leaflets publicising Phase I of the family mediation pilot project are available in Welsh.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice his Department has sought of the Welsh Language Board as to compliance with current Welsh language legislation in preparing publicity material under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996 with particular reference to the activities of the Legal Aid Board; and if he will make a statement. [18343]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board's publicity leaflet has been translated into Welsh by translators recommended by the Welsh Language Board.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of processing appeals under the habitual residence test in each year since its introduction; what is the average cost incurred in considering the case of an applicant who exhausts the appeals processing; and if he will make a statement. [14606]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Independent Tribunal Service does not routinely maintain statistics relating to categories of appeals such as habitual residence test appeals. Information regarding the total cost of processing habitual residence test appeals could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information regarding the average cost incurred in exhausting the appeals process is not available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to change the habitual residence test in respect of British residents returning to the United Kingdom after (a) short-term and (b) long-term employment or unemployment within the European Union. [17936]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government is evaluating the operation of the habitual residence test as part of its wide-ranging review of the major components of the social security system. The impact of the test upon UK nationals returning to this country forms part of this work.

Student Loans

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on Government policy relating to the consideration of student loans as income in assessment for benefits. [16849]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The primary source of funding for students is the student support system, not Social Security benefits. Most full-time students are not eligible for benefits.

It is a condition of the income-related benefits that a person should take up any available income, including a student loan, before having recourse to benefits. Student loan income is subject to a weekly £10 disregard. To ignore completely the availability of a student loan in calculating benefit entitlement would operate unfairly against the majority of students who are not entitled to these benefits, as well as being contrary to the general principles governing income-related benefits.

Benefits

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the actual expenditure on (a) unemployment benefit, (b) family credit and (c) other benefits to the unemployed for financial years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and 1997–98. [16920]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Unemployment Benefit/Jobseeker's Allowance (contributory based)[1]	1,102	999	619
Family Credit	1,441	1,739	2,047
Other benefits to the unemployed	7,541	7,272	6,541

[1] The figures underly and are consistent with those published for unemployed people in Table 5 of the March 1997 Departmental Report.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the predicted levels of unemployment that were used to set the budget for (a) unemployment benefit, (b) family credit and (c) other benefits to the unemployed for the financial years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [16954]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The predicted levels of unemployment used to set the budget for all benefits in Great Britain averaged 2.4 million in 1995–96; 2.1 million in 1996–97 and 1.8 million in 1997–98.

Income Statistics

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current average net incomes for (a) two and one-parent families with dependent children, (b) childless non-pensioner couples and (c) single non-pensioners in each decile of income; and how these have changed in real terms in each five-year period over the past 30 years. [16697]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our objective is to improve living standards for the many, not just the few, and we aim to offer educational and employment opportunities for all.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables. These show the average net equivalised household incomes and changes over time for individuals by family type. The income distribution is disaggregated into deciles separately for each family type. Income is as defined and measured in the Department's Households Below Average Income (HBAI) series, based on household income adjusted for household size; HBAI data are not available for years before 1979 or for every year since then.

2. The survey does not track the same people over time; those at a particular point in the distribution in one year are not the same people as in another year.
3. All estimates are subject to sampling error. Numbers can also be affected by the choice of equivalence scale used to adjust household incomes for household size.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security is she will assess the advantages of restoring the entitlement to state benefits to asylum seekers. [17526]

Mr. Keith Bradley: An interdepartmental review led by the Home Office is currently considering all aspects of arrangements for asylum seekers, including the provision of accommodation and support throughout the entire asylum process. The aim is to identify more effective arrangements for the handling of claims and the provision of support, consistent with the Government's commitment to ensure swift and fair decisions on asylum cases.

Benefits Agency Medical Services

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the operation of the Benefits Agency Medical Services (a) generally and (b) in respect of sufferers of ME. [18315]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A project is currently being undertaken to consider transferring the work of the Benefits Agency Medical Services to the private sector. Contractorisation could provide an opportunity to modernise working practices and provide a better value to the taxpayer and better service to people claiming benefits. This supports our commitment to modernise the delivery of Social Security to make it better, simpler and more efficient.

We are looking at all aspects of provision for sick and disabled people as part of our comprehensive spending review. We recognise that people with fluctuating conditions, such as Chronic Fatigue Syndrome, have particular needs and will be considering what changes are necessary to current procedures to ensure they are treated sensitively and fairly.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much extra in NICs he estimates will be raised from employers as a result of the decision not to index the earnings brackets for the three lower rates of employers' NICs. [19362]

Mr. Denham: No employer will pay more.

If the earnings brackets for the three lower rates of employers' secondary Class 1 National Insurance contributions were increased by £5 from April 1998, the total amount of contributions paid by employers in respect of 1998–99 would be reduced by an estimated £125 million in a full year.

DEFENCE

Eurofighter

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Eurofighter programme will be subject to the Strategic Defence Review. [18860]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 694.

West Indies Guardship

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Department for International Development concerning the West Indies guardship. [19361]

Dr. Reid: I have nothing to add to the oral answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for International Development on 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 896.

International Development White Paper

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Minister in his Department is responsible for liaising with the Department for International Development on the proposals affecting his Department in the White Paper "Eliminating World Poverty". [18942]

Dr. Reid: Issues of relevance to the Ministry of Defence in the International Development White Paper do not fall solely within the responsibilities of any one Minister.

Royal Naval College

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the (a) terms of reference and (b) objectives of the Greenwich Foundation. [19017]

Dr. Reid: The Greenwich Foundation is a registered charitable company limited by guarantee whose objectives are

"to preserve for the benefit of the nation the Royal Naval College site, buildings and monuments as being of historical, architectural, and artistic importance (including to their immediate environment), and to educate the public thereon".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated costs of (a) repairing dilapidations and (b) the removal of Crown immunity at the Royal Naval College. [19018]

Dr. Reid: Detailed negotiations are continuing between the Ministry of Defence, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, the Greenwich Foundation and Greenwich Hospital on the quantum of a dilapidation settlement. No final figure has yet been agreed.

The detailed effect of the removal of Crown exemption and resulting costs are still being assessed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the state of readiness of the Royal Naval College in the year 2000. [19021]

Dr. Reid: Defence use of the site will cease in mid-1999. Planning for the Royal Naval College thereafter will be a matter for the Greenwich Foundation, on the assumption that it has assumed responsibility for the site. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will continue to be required to approve occupation, as required by section 30 of the Armed Forces Act 1996.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Naval College. [19019]

Dr. Reid: The Greenwich Foundation for the Royal Naval College is working closely with Government and Greenwich Hospital to conclude arrangements which will allow it to take responsibility for the Royal Naval College as Defence use ceases. The Foundation is negotiating with the University of Greenwich and others on the future occupation of the buildings.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the new occupant for the Royal Naval College. [19020]

Dr. Reid: The Greenwich Foundation is in discussion with potential occupants, including the University of Greenwich and Trinity College of Music. Once the Foundation is satisfied that it can assume responsibility for the site and is content to sub-let to particular occupants, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will need to approve these under the terms of section 30 of the Armed Forces Act 1996. Announcements on occupation would be likely to be made by the Foundation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to meet the Chairman and trustees of the Greenwich Foundation for the Royal Naval College. [19016]

Dr. Reid: No meetings are currently scheduled. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has made it clear that he is ready to meet with representatives of the Foundation as necessary, as he and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport and their respective officials have previously done on many occasions.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the running cost for the Royal Yacht Britannia (a) in total and (b) excluding engine maintenance costs in the last year. [18927]

Dr. Reid: Total outturn running costs for the Royal Yacht Britannia for the last financial year (1996–97) were £10.446 million, of which the cost excluding engine maintenance costs was £10.028 million.

Hunting

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which hunts were issued licences to hunt on his Department's land for the (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 hunting sessions; and if he will make a statement. [14440]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Burden of Proof Directive

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations the Government has made to its European Union partners concerning the definition of subsidiarity and proportionality used in the Burden of Proof directive. [17220]

Mr. Alan Howarth: There is no definition of subsidiarity or proportionality in the draft Directive on the Burden of Proof, although there is a reference to those principles in Recital 20. The Government believes the draft Directive complies with the principles. At the European Council in June in Amsterdam the UK stated its intention to accede to the social provisions of the new Treaty. The European Council agreed that the United Kingdom would henceforth be asked to express its viewpoint during discussions on Directives. The UK's views have accordingly been taken into account in this Directive: in particular, recital 15 was inserted to reflect legal practices in this country.

Tourism Industry (Graduates)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what data he has collated on the number of graduates entering the tourism industry. [17168]

Dr. Howells: The latest available data show that, in 1996, of the 109,700 first degree graduates in the UK who obtained employment in the UK, 6,900 gained employment in the tourism industry.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many colleges of higher and further education run tourism-related courses; and how many students are involved. [17167]

Dr. Howells: The available data for higher education establishments in the UK relate to students studying catering and institutional management which covers subjects such as cookery and baking as well as travel and tourism. The figures show that in 1996–97 17,800 students were studying hotel and institutional management in 56 higher education establishments. The available data for further education colleges cover England and use a different subject classification which specifically identifies travel, tourism and leisure. The figures show that in 1995–96 there were 50,000 students studying travel, tourism and leisure in 380 further education colleges.

Higher National Diplomas

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students are currently studying for higher national diplomas; and what percentage of these students are receiving free tuition. [17312]

Dr. Howells: The latest data are given in the following table.

Major source of tuition fees for HND students in HEIs in the UK 1996–97

Percentages

Training Providers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that training providers are properly supervised. [17454]

Dr. Howells: The supervision of training providers is carried out by TECs/CCTEs in line with their contactual obligations to the Government Office. These include standards for TECs to follow in their negotiations and contracting with training providers. The providers are in turn required to comply to rigorous standards set and monitored by the TEC covering financial controls, health and safety, quality assurance and management information.

We have also recently announced the establishment of the Training Standards Council, which will oversee the inspection of Government funded training from next April. This will involve external inspection of the quality of training delivered by training providers, and will provide further public assurances in this area of public funding.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Defence to involve the Army Cadets, Sea Cadets and Air Cadets in the welfare to work New Deal proposals; [17139]

(2) if he will list the youth organisations he has consulted in respect of the Welfare to Work New Deal proposals. [17411]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Bob Russell, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the New Deal in respect of discussions with the Ministry of Defence about the Cadet Forces, and your request for a list of youth organisations that have been consulted. There are areas that fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I am pleased to say that the Employment Service has forged close links with the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments in the run up to the roll out to the New Deal. Contact have been at both national and local level.

The Ministry of Defence are keen to be involved in the New Deal and, whilst thus far it has largely been in the context of mainstream forces recruitment, other local initiatives are being developed. The Ministry of Defence see New Deal as a useful stepping stone for young people who want to join the forces, but may not be able to meet pre-entry requirements without further support. Discussions have not specifically covered the Cadet forces but we would be very open to any proposals as to how they could be involved.

You also asked for a list of youth organisations consulted on the New Deal proposals. As you will be aware, we have consulted widely at national, regional and local level. While we have not kept centrally a list of all the organisations that have taken part in the consultation process, they have included many with a particular interest in young people. At the national conferences, for example, there were representatives from the Prince's Youth Business Trust, the Prince Youth Volunteers, the National Council for Voluntary Youth Services, the National Youth Association and the YMCA. Many other organisations will have taken part in consultations at regional and district level.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he will take to ensure that black and Asian young people benefit from the Government's welfare to work proposals. [18718]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government is committed to ensuring that the New Deal with actively promote equality of opportunity and outcome for young people of all ethic and racial groups. Delivery arrangements for each element of the programme—the Gateway, the four options and follow through support—will promote racial equality and are based on detailed consideration of how best to deliver provision for young people from ethnic minorities.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy in respect of the faxing of press releases on the day of release to Opposition party spokesmen; what changes have been introduced since 1 May and if he will make a statement. [16297]

Dr. Howells: It is the policy of my right hon. Friend to provide press releases of major significance to Opposition party spokesmen on the day of release. Delivery can be by fax or hard copy, depending on which method is most suitable. Copies of all press notices are placed in the House of Commons library on the day of publication and are available on the Department's Web site the following day. There has been no change of policy since 1 May.

Local Education Authorities

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the education budget set by each local education authority in England for each of the last three years for which information is available; [17894]

(2) what percentage of the potential schools budget for each local education authority in England was delegated to schools in the last three years for which information is available; [17906]

(3) what was the potential schools budget for each local education authority in England and for the last three years for which information is available; [17908]

(4) what was the general schools budget for each LEA in England for the last three years for which information is available; [17909]

(5) what was the level of funding for Service, Strategy and Regulatory activities in each English LEA budget for each of the last three years for which information is available. [17910]

Mr. Byers: The information, contained in a number of tables, sets out, for each local education authority in England, its education budget, General Schools Budget, Potential Schools Budget and the proportion of the PSB delegated to schools, for the years 1995–96 to 1997–98. Data on services strategy and regulation are available only from outturn returns; 1995–96 is the latest year for which figures are available.

A copy of the tables has been placed in the Library.

Employment Service

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what extra training has been given to Employment Service staff involved in the delivery of the New Deal programme for under-25s at the Gateway stage. [17299]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Stephen Hesford, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the training of Employment Service staff delivering the New Deal for under 25s at the Gateway stage. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Extra training will be given to all Employment Service staff involved in the delivery of the New Deal. The main training priority will be Personal Advisers who will be fully involved in the Gateway and staff involved in marketing and taking vacancies. Team Leaders and other front line Jobcentre staff who are involved in the New Deal process will also receive training.

All of our training events and materials contain important information about the changes which we are making to the way we work in order to deliver the New Deal to the required standard. Specifically, they build on the principles of working in partnership, improving customer service and making quality a fundamental part of New Deal.

In addition to this, training has already been delivered to District managers which focuses on working in partnership, contracting for the New Deal, and partnership presentational skills.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 4 November 1997, Official Report, column 160, (1) what are the staffing levels in each Portsmouth jobcentre; [18159]

(2) what proportion of the unemployed served by the jobcentres are aged 16 to 24 years. [18161]

Mr Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewes to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions (Official Report, column 160 in which you asked for information about the proportion of unemployed people, served by the Jobcentres in Portsmouth, who are aged 16 to 24 years and the levels of staffing in each of those Jobcentres. These are issues that fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The proportion of clients aged 16 to 24 years who were claiming Jobseeker's Allowance up to the end of October 1997 at Portsmouth North Jobcentre was 27 per cent., or 401 actual clients, and at Portsmouth Central Jobcentre the proportion was 25 per cent., or 704 actual clients.

The Portsmouth North Jobcentre currently employs the equivalent of 28.5 staff and Portsmouth Central Jobcentre employs the equivalent of 39.4 staff.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 4 November 1997, Official Report, column 160, what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the Employment Service's use of the preferred supplier system; and what indicators were used to measure its performance. [18160]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your further question (Official Report column 160) relating to the assessment of the effectiveness of the Employment Service's use of the preferred supplier system, and the indicators used to measure its performance. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It might assist you if I explain in more detail how the preferred supplier system works. It is a form of pre-selection, whereby organisations who wish to be considered for inclusion on an Invitation to Tender list are invited to complete a questionnaire seeking information about such matters as their financial standing, their track record, their quality systems and their health and safety policies. The Employment Service Region then evaluates this information and makes a selection of organisations to be on its list of preferred suppliers for programme services in that Region. When contracts fall due to be retendered, tenders are invited from among those organisations on that list. The preferred suppliers exercise is repeated at regular intervals to keep it up to date and to provide opportunities for new entrants to the market. The alternative would be to undertake considerably larger competitions, which would be more costly both for the taxpayer and for the competing bidders.

As I said in my previous reply, I am satisfied that the system is effective in helping both the Employment Service and potential contractors to make the best use of their resources. The preferred suppliers technique, which is followed by many public sector organisations and is fully in line with Government procurement practice, is an established way of minimising the expense of competitive tendering for all concerned while achieving good value for money for the taxpayer. I have, however, asked my head of procurement to undertake an assessment of the system, including an assessment of whether it would be possible to devise indicators to measure its performance.

If, in the meantime, there are particular issues relating to the operation of this approach about which you have concerns, I would of course be very willing to look into them.

I hope this is helpful.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schoolchildren were designated as having special educational needs in each of the last 10 years; if he will provide a breakdown as to their acuteness; and what proportion of those children have been educated at exclusively special educational needs schools in each of those years. [18146]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the number of children with statements of SEN in January of the years 1991 to 1996 and expresses the number of children in maintained and non-maintained special schools at each January as a percentage of all children with statements. Information on the numbers of pupils with statements was collected from special schools for the first time in January 1991. Information on the full range of children with SEN, including those with less severe, needs who do not have a statement, is available only for January 1996, when the total number of children identified by schools as having SEN (including those with statements) was 1.2 million.

Higher Education Teachers

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons the United Kingdom Government reserved its position on section 9 of the UNESCO Recommendation on the status of Higher Education Teaching Personnel; and if he will make a statement on the alterations to that recommendation sought by Her Majesty's Government. [18485]

Dr. Howells: The UNESCO General Conference adopted the Recommendation with UK support, but with the following reservation expressed by the United Kingdom and supported by Australia, New Zealand, Spain and France:

> The United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, Spain and France strongly support the recommendation's aims of securing academic freedom and human rights for higher-education teaching personnel. These Member States also strongly support the principles in Section IX "Terms and Conditions of Employment". However, because the drafting of this section appears to go, in such great detail, into areas that are properly the responsibility of individual Member States and institutions, these Member States reluctantly place a reservation on this section.

On the advice of the UNESCO Secretariat, the UK Government did not seek alterations to the text of the Recommendation.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has given to local authorities to ensure that the extra money announced in the budget for 1998–99 for education is spent on schools. [18407]

Mr. Byers: The Secretary of State has written to the Leaders of the local authorities that are responsible for education, to emphasise that the £1,017 million increase in recurrent resources announced by the Chancellor in his Budget has been made available for the people's priority of raising standards in our schools. Officials have also discussed with representatives of the Churches and Local Government organisations the principles and criteria for the allocation of the first two phases of capital funding under the New Deal for Schools. The Government wishes to work in partnership with local authorities, and these increases in funding demonstrate that.

Teachers' Holidays

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government has to reduce teachers' holiday entitlements; and what assessment he has made of the effect of those plans on his programme for recruiting new teachers. [19181]

Mr. Byers: Any such proposal would have had to be referred to the School Teachers' Review Body, which would have had to consider it and make recommendations in its report which is due in February next year. No such proposal was referred to the Review Body.

Class Sizes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the average class sizes in each of the schools listed in the 1997 GCSE league tables. [18332]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally.

Teacher Training

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) postgraduate and (b) undergraduate ITT places were unfilled in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [18554]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The information requested is shown in the following tables.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the unfilled places on school-centred initial teacher training courses as a percentage of all places in each subject in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [18553]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 December 1997]: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Schools (New Deal)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools which will receive the first grants under the New Deal for Schools. [19176]

Mr. Byers: More than 2,000 schools will be receiving grant from the first round of New Deal for Schools. I have placed a complete list of all the successful projects in the libraries of both Houses.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15232]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Details of the Ministerial trips and their associated costs made by my colleagues and myself and accompanying Departmental officials since 2 May are as follows:

Pedestrianisation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has in addition to PPG6 and Local Transport Note 1/87 to promote the benefits of pedestrianisation; and if he will make a statement. [18882]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The benefits which pedestrianisation can bring to a town and community are generally well established and appreciated by highway and planning authorities. The measures involved are set out in PPG6 "Town Centres and Retail Developments" and Local Transport Note 1/87 "Getting the Right Balance". Schemes should be individually tailored to meet local needs.

Where full pedestrianisation is neither feasible nor desirable, there may be a case for giving greater priority to pedestrians and improving the pedestrian environment in town centres. It is for individual authorities, taking into account the needs and views of local people, to examine the merits of full or partial pedestrianisation of a town centre. As part of this process they should ensure reasonable access, particularly for disabled people. Authorities should also keep schemes under review and modify them if need be.

Railtrack

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received since 1 May on the effectiveness of the service provided by Railtrack; and if he will make a statement on its operation. [19224]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For the seven-month period to 1 December 1997, my Department has received 179 representations about railway issues involving Railtrack. The recent modification to the company's network licence places Railtrack under a stronger duty to keep up to date with its programme of maintenance, renewal and improvement and gives the Rail Regulator enforcement powers if Railtrack fails to deliver its programme without good reason.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that Railtrack invests in track and signalling improvements. [19235]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A recent modification to Railtrack's network licence establishes a new general duty in respect of maintenance, renewal and development of the rail network. It also places obligations on Railtrack to consult the train operating companies and to publish the criteria by which it will determine the priority and timing of different works. In addition, the licence now gives the Rail Regulator powers of investigation and enforcement to ensure that Railtrack's programme objectives have been met.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18891]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 3 December 1997]: My Department aims, where it is appropriate and Parliament is sitting, to make all major policy announcements in the House.

We endeavour to make all announcements in the most effective way. This may involve using a combination of communication vehicles.

Since 1 May the Department has issued 527 news releases, including those which relate to speeches and other announcements. Copies are placed in the library of both Houses and are available on the POLIS information system, as well as on the Department's Internet website.

Lead Water Mains

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to promote the replacement of the remaining lead water mains. [19282]

Angela Eagle: Many lead pipes owned by water supplies will need to be replaced to comply with the new mandatory standard of 10 µg/l for lead in drinking water, which will be introduced by the EC Drinking Water Directive when it is adopted. Political agreement to the new Directive was achieved in October 1997.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when it became automatic for planning appeals for proposed developments involving more than 150 houses or flats to be called in for his own determination. [19037]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 4 December 1997]: Planning appeals for proposed developments involving 150 or more houses are recovered for determination by my right hon. Friend under criteria set out in paragraph 36 of the Government's response to the Fifth Report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985–86 (Cmnd. 43). This was published in December 1986.

Housing (East Sussex)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations the Government has received about the identified demand and planned provision for new homes in East Sussex. [19291]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

Since the East Sussex Structure Plan Review was placed on formal deposit in October 1996, we have received written representations from three local environmental protection groups and two individual residents objecting to the level of housing provision proposed in the Plan.

Structure Plan (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he received notification of the new structure plan accepted by Gloucestershire County Council; if he intends to accept the reduced figure in respect of the building of new houses between 1991 and 2011 in the plan; and if he will make a statement. [19118]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State has not yet received the deposit draft of the Gloucestershire Structure plan which I understand the County intends to publish on 12 January, although he received a copy of the consultation draft published in May 1996.

It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the content of the plan because of the Secretary of State's formal role on planning matters.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 157–64, if he will provide a breakdown of the £130 million for the transitional costs of local government reorganisation; and what criteria will determine the allocation of that transitional relief. [19457]

Mr. Raynsford: Initial bids from all authorities eligible to participate under the Local Government Reorganisation Costs Scheme for 1998–99 have now been received and are currently being evaluated. Details of initial maximum amounts of Supplementary Credit Approvals to be allocated will be announced shortly before Christmas.

Particular priority under the 1998–99 scheme will be given to eligible costs incurred by those authorities reorganising in 1998. The criteria of eligibility under the scheme cover expenditure in all areas where transitional costs are expected to occur: staff and consultancy, redundancy and compensation, accommodation, information technology and other costs.

Out-of-town Supermarkets

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he proposes to make changes to the planning policy guidelines on out-of-town supermarkets. [19295]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government, in its response to the Fourth Report from the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment on Shopping Centres (Cm 3729), has endorsed the planning policy guidance in PPG6: Town Centres and Retail Developments. The only further clarification that we wish to make is that proposals for extensions to existing out-of-centre supermarkets, and other developments covered by PPG6, should be subject to the same tests as other out-of-town developments.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency will give a substantive reply to the letter of 12 August from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire. [19468]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A substantive reply was sent on 3 December. The Chief Executive has apologised for the unacceptable delay in replying.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 8 December 1997

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cigarettes

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if he will take steps to discourage sales of House of Commons branded cigarettes. [18613]

Mr. Dennis Turner: It would be very unusual if a Chairman of the Catering Committee sought to discourage the sale and consumption of items sold as gifts and souvenirs from the Refreshment Department outlets. However, I accept fully that the situation with cigarettes is unique. In the previous Parliament I understand that the view of the Committee was that for as long as the smoking of tobacco products was legal, it was acceptable for the Department's outlets to sell cigarettes. My Committee will consider this subject in due course, and no doubt hon. Members will make representations about it.

Westminster Hall Cafeteria

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if he will allow participants of guided tours to use Westminster Hall Cafeteria; and if he make a statement. [18719]

Mr. Dennis Turner: On 12 July 1994, the House approved the First Report of Session 1992–93 from the previous Catering Committee, "Refreshment provision for line of route visitors". One recommendation was that the area currently occupied by the Westminster Hall Cafeteria should be converted to a visitor centre, which would provide light refreshments and toilet facilities for the public, but that this should take place only once a suitable alternative has been found for the present lunchtime users.

Initial discussions between Officials have been held regarding the proposed nature of a visitor centre, and their proposals will be put before my Committee by Easter 1998. However, I do have to advise my hon. Friend that in excess of 500 people, mainly staff, have lunch daily in the Westminster Hall Cafeteria; the other outlets currently available to staff would not be able to accommodate the extra customers if the Westminster Hall Cafeteria was closed before the opening of the new Cafeteria in Portcullis House, which I understand, will not be until 2001. Therefore, it will not be possible to open a visitor centre before then.

Blood Donor Sessions

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if she will arrange for regular blood donor sessions to be held within the Palace of Westminster. [18720]

Mrs. Roe: The North London Blood Transfusion Service operates a two day clinic very near the House in HM Treasury or the Cabinet Office once every six months, when arrangements are made for hon. Members, their staff and staff of the House who wish to do so to give blood.

Both a lack of space and an insufficient donor base preclude holding a dedicated clinic on the Parliamentary Estate.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many car parking spaces are provided for (a) ministers, (b) hon. Members, (c) employees and (d) visitors in the House of Commons car parks. [19458]

Mrs. Roe: Details of the number of car park spaces, and who is entitled to use them, are given in the Serjeant at Arms leaflet "Car Parking" dated Spring 1997. I have asked for a copy to be sent to the hon. Gentleman.

Hearing-impaired People

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee (1) what the procedures are by which a deaf member of the public can be provided with sign language interpretation of the proceedings of the House within the Strangers Gallery; [18955]

(2) what the procedures are by which a member may be provided with (a) a sign language interpreter and (b) a portable induction loop in order to facilitate communication with deaf or hard of hearing visitors to the Palace of Westminster and associated buildings. [18956]

Mrs. Roe: Portable induction loops can be provided on request to the Serjeant at Arms Office. Forty eight hours notice should be given whenever possible. The House does not provide sign language interpreters; however, arrangements are made for interpreters accompanying deaf members of the public to operate from a suitable place in the Gallery.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list those publicly accessible rooms within the Palace of Westminster and associated buildings which are fitted with an induction loop to assist persons who wear hearing aids. [18957]

Sir. Sydney Chapman: The Accommodation and Works Committee has responsibility only for those areas of the parliamentary estate administered by the House of Commons. There are no publicly accessible rooms in outbuildings administered by the House of Commons which are fitted with induction loops. Induction loops are installed in the following places within the Palace of Westminster administered by the House of Commons:

The House of Commons Chamber—the floor and galleries;

All Committee Rooms administered by the House of Commons, with the exception of Nos. 7, 13 and 16;

The Grand Committee Room.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (India and Pakistan)

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for visitors' visas to the United Kingdom were received between January and October at the posts in (a) Bombay and (b) Islamabad; and how many of these applications were refused. [18667]

Mr. Fatchett: Between January and October there were 53,059 applications in Bombay to visit the UK, of which 3,742 were refused; and 22,645 applications in Islamabad, of which 4,044 were refused.

Correspondence

Sir Archie Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons he has not replied to the letter from the right hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell of 1 July concerning his constituent Mr. Ramik Shah. [18884]

Mr. Fatchett: The right hon. Member's letter of 1 July was passed to the Home Office for reply since the question of special vouchers falls within its remit. I understand that a Home Office Minister will be replying shortly under file reference IMG/97 366/1205/1.

Tibet

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise the conditions of the Tibetan people with the Chinese Government; and if he will make a statement. [19014]

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of China concerning human rights in Tibet. [19341]

Mr. Fatchett: We are deeply concerned about the human rights situation in Tibet. We take every opportunity to raise the issue of human rights with the Chinese authorities, both nationally and with our European Union partners. Both my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I did so most recently when we met the Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister in London between 3 November and 6 November.

China and Tibet

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will promote talks between the Chinese authorities and the Tibetan Government-in-exile during the United Kingdom EU Presidency, and encourage the European Union to host such talks. [18743]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 December 1997]: In our dialogues with China, both bilateral and at EU level, we have sought to encourage talks between the Chinese Government and the Tibetans, including the Dalai Lama. We will continue to do so.

Nigeria

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the Vision 2010 project in Nigeria; and if he will make a statement. [19348]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are in regular contact with several members of the Vision 2010 Committee. Our High Commission in Nigeria attended the launch of the Vision 2010 report on 27 November. The Report sets out a blueprint for economic reform in Nigeria. We will be following closely the implementation of its recommendations.

Algeria

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will promote talks during the United Kingdom Presidency of the EU between the French and Algerian Governments and other European Union member states on abuses of human rights in Algeria. [18745]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 December 1997]: The EU already raises with the Algerian Government its concerns about allegations of human rights abuses. We will continue to monitor the situation closely during our Presidency of the EU.

Indonesia (Police Training)

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement in Jakarta on 29 August, what proposals he (a) has made and (b) plans to make to the Indonesian Government to provide assistance with police training. [19296]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 December 1997]: Detailed proposals are still being worked out; we shall make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the lecture on modern policing methods by British police experts in Indonesia, announced in his statement in Jakarta on 29 August, took place; and where. [19297]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 December 1997]: We have not yet finalised arrangements for the proposed lectures.

Sudan

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those resolutions Her Majesty's Government has (a) tabled and (b) supported in the United Nations General Assembly concerning the Government of Sudan between January 1992 and November 1997. [19597]

Mr. Fatchett: The United Kingdom has supported the following United Nations General Assembly resolutions about Sudan:

GA RES 47/167 (18 December 1992)

GA RES 48/201 (21 December 1993)

GA RES 49/21 (20 December 1994)

GA RES 50/58 (22 December 1995)

Emergency assistance to Sudan.

GA RES 47/147 (18 December 1992)

GA RES 48/147 (20 December 1993

GA RES 49/198 (23 December 1994)

GA RES 50/197 (22 December 1995)

GA RES 51/112 (12 December 1996)

The situation of human rights in Sudan.

The United Kingdom co-sponsored all the human rights resolutions, but not those on emergency assistance.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since the ending of the war in the Gulf the Iraqi regime has been offered the opportunity of selling oil to buy food and medicines; and if he will make a statement. [19706]

Mr. Fatchett: Iraq refused the benefits of SCRs 706 and 712. Because Iraq at first would not co-operate in implementing SCR 986 the implementation of the resolution was delayed until December 1996.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government in Zimbabwe on their policy towards private farmland; and if he will make a statement. [19119]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 303.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19364]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following is the information:

	Ministers	Employees	Visitors
London	5	96	15
Elsewhere in the United Kingdom	—	900	30

EU Projects (Funding)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much funding of European Union projects for 1996 operated through the actions ponctuelles. [17263]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply. A very small amount of the European Community Budget—less than 1 per cent. of the total—was spent on non-significant actions (including "actions ponctuelles") in 1996.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives Her Majesty's Government propose to take following the visit to Edinburgh of the delegation of the United Nations Legal Affairs Office to make inquiries on behalf of the United Nations about the Scottish legal system with a view to discussing a Lockerbie trial with Libya, the Arab League and the Organisation of African States. [19674]

The Prime Minister: We took the initiative to invite the United Nations to send legal experts to visit Scotland to witness at first hand the fairness and impartiality of Scottish justice, and to discuss the modalities of attendance at a trial in Scotland by international observers.

It remains the Government's view that Libya should comply with the United Nations Security Council Resolutions by surrendering the two accused for trial in Scotland or the United States, since any other solution will reflect quite wrongly on the quality and standards of justice in either jurisdiction.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the role of the Lord Chancellor and his responsibilities as Chairman of the Cabinet Committee responsible for the future constitutional arrangements for the United Kingdom following the creation of a Scottish Parliament. [18018]

The Prime Minister: The proceedings of Cabinet Committees necessarily remain private but it will be clear that my right hon. and noble Friend, the Lord Chancellor and his Committees are doing an excellent job in delivering the Government's constitutional reform programme. That will be an on-going task until we have completed the modernisation of the political system in this country.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Colman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the terms of reference and work programme of the Social Exclusion Unit. [20004]

The Prime Minister: I today launched the Social Exclusion Unit at Stockwell Park School Lambeth. Social exclusion is a shorthand label for what can happen when individuals or areas suffer from a combination of linked problems such as unemployment, poor skills, low incomes, poor housing, high crime environments, bad health and family breakdown. The Government have policies that are targeted at reducing all of these individually, but Government programmes have been less good at tackling the interaction between these problems or preventing them from arising in the first place.

The purpose of the unit is to help break this vicious circle and co-ordinate and improve Government action to reduce social exclusion by first improving understanding of the key characteristics of social exclusion, and the impact on it of Government policies; and, secondly, by promoting solutions, encouraging co-operation, disseminating best practice and, where necessary, making recommendations for changes in policies and machinery or delivery mechanisms. The unit will not cover issues which are of interest to one Department only, or duplicate work done elsewhere. It will focus on areas where it can add value and address the long-term causes of exclusion.

I have asked the Unit to focus on the following priorities in its first phase to July 1998:

(a) Truancy and School Exclusion: to make a step change in the scale of truancy and exclusions from school, and to find better solutions for those who have to be excluded—with a report to Ministers by Easter.

(b) Street living: reducing to as near zero as possible the numbers sleeping rough in towns and cities—with a report to Ministers by Easter.

(c) Worst estates: developing integrated and sustainable approaches to the problems of the worst housing estates, including crime, drugs, unemployment, community breakdown, bad schools, etc.—with a report by June.

I will chair one summit involving key interests on each of these topics, starting with one on school exclusion and truancy at Stockwell Park School this morning.

In addition, in its first phase, the unit will focus on improving mechanisms for integrating the work of departments, local authorities and other agencies at national level and on the ground, so money spent on excluded groups is used more effectively and has more chance of meeting its objectives. There will be a first report to Ministers by the end of June next year. Secondly, it will feed in to the Comprehensive Spending Reviews any recommendations for redirection of priorities arising from the unit's initial work. Finally, it will draw up key indicators of social exclusion, recommending how these can be tracked to monitor the effectiveness of Government policies in reducing social exclusion and will report to ministers by the end of June.

The unit should draw on its experience with these first tasks to make recommendations on possible targets for the second half of 1998. Particular areas could include identifying key preventive interventions with children and young people; probing aspects of exclusion which disproportionately affect particular ethnic minority groups; options for improving access to services, public and private, for low income areas or individuals; and ways to encourage and focus individual and business involvement in tackling social exclusion. The unit will discuss those and other areas with interested groups before making recommendations.

The unit is part of the Economic and Domestic Affairs Secretariat in the Cabinet Office. It will report to me and work closely with the No. 10 Policy unit. It will be staffed by civil servants from other Whitehall departments and secondees from local authorities, voluntary bodies and other main agencies. It is being set up for an initial period of two years and its future will then be reviewed. The Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will consider how best to tackle social exclusion, taking account of the particular needs and characteristics of their respective communities. The Social Exclusion Unit will work closely with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish offices and the unit's findings will be made available to these departments.

I will steer the work of the unit personally and chair regular meetings with relevant Ministers to review the initiative. Policy decisions will be cleared through the appropriate Cabinet Committee, and implemented by the departments. I will report to Parliament next summer on the work of the unit and on the forward agenda. Any policy changes proposed will have clear targets and evaluation plans. To build on the unit's cross-departmental focus, I have nominated a network of Ministers in the Departments most affected, to draw together exclusion issues in their own departments, and to help present and guide the unit's work as follows; the Minister for Local Government and Housing, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Bradley), the Minister for School Standards, the Minister for Public Health, the Minister without Portfolio, the Minister of State, Home Office, the Paymaster General, the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry.

The unit will draw extensively on outside expertise and research, and lock into relevant external networks to hear views from local authorities, business, voluntary organisations and other organisations/individuals with experience of dealing with exclusion. The unit will adopt an outward-facing and open approach, participate in relevant seminars and conferences, seek out existing good practice and encourage its wider dissemination.

Copies of a leaflet setting out the purpose, priorities, working methods and staff in the unit have been placed in the Library.

Early-Day Motions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if hon. Members holding the office of PPS have been requested not to sign early-day Motions critical of the Government; and if he will make a statement. [18909]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The principles which govern the behaviour of Parliamentary Private Secretaries in the House are set out in paragraph 46 of the Ministerial Code, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House in July 1997.

Cleaner Vehicles

Mr. Brake: To ask the Prime Minister what account he took of the publishing opinions of Mr. Keith Taylor, Chairman of ESSO, in appointing him to his task force on cleaner vehicles; what assessment he made of their consistency with the Government's policy on global warming; and what consultations he had with the Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions prior to the appointment. [19152]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The Government have a clear commitment to addressing climate change. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force aims to create a new partnership between Government and the private sector to promote environmentally friendly vehicles that people actually want to drive and buy. It will draw on a cross-section of industry, including the oil industry, and I welcome the participation of a wide range of interests. The members of the Task Force's steering group were nominated by the Minister for Transport, in close consultation with the Science, Energy and Industry Minister and officials from the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Coal Industry

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a ministerial committee to consider the future of the coal industry, with public membership and terms of reference. [19221]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 December 1997]: No.

E-Mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to the answer of 10 November 1997, from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Official Report, column 441, if he will list his e-mail address along with those of (a) his senior officials and (b) his political advisers. [15863]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 November 1997]: No.10 Downing Street has a website on the Internet.

It is not the current practice to publish the e-mail addresses of my staff.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93 (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15275]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 November 1997]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 December 1997, Official Report, column 377.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15274]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 November 1997]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 5 December 1997, Official Report, column 376–77.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98 year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15277]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 November 1997]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 5 December 1997, Official Report, column 377.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Construction Industry (Health and Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have taken place against employers for unsafe and dangerous working practices in the construction industry so far in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [18571]

Angela Eagle: I regret that this question cannot be answered accurately in the form in which it has been asked. Between 1 January 1997 and 31 October 1997, there were 376 convictions obtained in proceedings instituted by HSE in the construction industry. These figures, which are only provisional, include all those prosecuted. Some offences may have been committed by the self-employed who by their actions put other workers, or members of the public, at risk. In addition, offences by those such as clients and designers, who may have had no direct control of working practices, but who may have failed to play their part in overall risk management and control, are included. To eliminate these cases from the figures and revise the reporting period would involve disproportionate cost.

The best guide to the pattern of recent prosecutions in the construction industry is provided by Table A1.26 of Health and Safety Statistics 1996–97, which was published recently. A copy of Page 170 of the publication is attached for information.

The protection of the health and safety of all those working in, or affected by, the construction industry is a high priority. The prosecution of those who breach health and safety law and the penalties the courts impose are important aspects of achieving this protection.

Radioactive Materials

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the United Nations International Maritime Organisation's conclusion on the safety of ro-ro vessels for the transport of radioactive materials; and if he will make a statement. [18849]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The statement attributed to the IMO in a recent press article that ro-ro vessels are is taken from a 33 page IMO background information paper entitled "IMO and ro-ro safety" The paper deals with ro-ro safety in general and makes no reference to the transport of radioactive materials in particular. However, in 1993 the IMO Assembly adopted, and has recently amended, the Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Waste in Flasks on board Ships (INF Code). UK companies involved in the transport of materials covered by the INF Code use ships complying with the Code.

"exceptionally vulnerable to human error"

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are being taken to ensure than shipments of radioactive material comply with safety and security regulations; and if he will make a statement. [18850]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Officials of my Department's Radioactive Materials Transport Division are responsible for the safety assessment of package designs for the safe transport of radioactive material, requiring competent authority approval, by all modes. Their compliance assurance branch monitors the design, manufacture and operation of all packages and is responsible for enforcement of the radioactive material road transport regulations. Enforcement during carriage by rail, air and sea, is carried out respectively by HM Railways Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive, the Civil Aviation Authority and the Department's Marine Safety Agency.

Matters of physical security are for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) the public safety implications and (b) the security issues involved in the use of roll-on roll-off ferries to transport plutonium around the United Kingdom; and what action he is taking to monitor this activity. [18848]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Public safety is ensured by enforcing the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods and Marine Pollutants) Regulations 1990 monitored by the Department's Marine Safety Agency. These regulations require such material to be carried in packages which are resistant to severe accident conditions and which have been approved by my Department. UK companies involved in the transport of plutonium by sea use ships meeting the International Maritime Organisation's "Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on board Ships" (INF Code).

The UK applies the requirements of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material. Matters of physical security are for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Household Projections

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates of the levels of cohabitation were included in the latest household projections; and to what extent these differ from previous projections. [18604]

Mr. Raynsford: The most recent, 1992-based household projections were the first to use co-habiting couples as a separate household category for estimation purposes. This followed the inclusion of "living together as a couple" for the first time as a recognised relationship in the 1991 Census. It is not possible, therefore, to make comparisons with previous projections about assumed levels of cohabitation.

The levels of co-habitation assumed for the latest households projections were the 1992-based projections of marital status made by the Government Actuary's Department. A detailed description of the methodology and statistical assumptions underlying the latest household projections is set out in the annexes of "Projections in Households in England to 2016", published by the Stationery Office in March 1995. The treatment of the marital status projections and cohabitation is provided in Annexes D and G of this publication, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many homes were built in each English county between 1991 and 1996; and what change in the number of households was previously projected over those years. [18598]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is provided below. The total number of new dwellings built, by county, covers the period from July 1991 to June 1996. The figures for successive sets of household projections are the differences between the published projected figures for mid-year 1996 and mid-year 1991. These are subject to rounding error as the published figures are only readily available to the nearest thousand.

It is not appropriate to make a direct comparison between the number of dwellings built between 1991 and 1996 and the projected number of households forming over that period, for two reasons. First, the household projections are not an estimate of the number of additional houses which have to be built in any period. Rather, they represent one of the factors to be taken into account by local planning authorities when arriving at figures for housing provision to be included in regional guidance and development plans. Secondly, the housebuilding figures do not include other sources of new dwellings such as conversions. Furthermore, the 1992-based household projections were not published until March 1995 and most county structure plans prepared since 1991 have used earlier household projections as the basis for planning housing provision.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which county councils have been written to by Ministers in respect of the housing numbers being proposed in structure plans. [18607]

Mr. Raynsford: Since the responsibility for adopting structure plans passed to local authorities, the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has written to the following county councils in respect of proposed housing numbers in their plans:

Bedfordshire
Berkshire
Cheshire
Devon
Dorset
Hampshire
Hertfordshire
Kent
Oxfordshire
Somerset
West Sussex
Wiltshire.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which county structure plans have been adopted with housing requirements lower than those set out in regional planning guidance. [18606]

Mr. Raynsford: Of the counties that have adopted their structure plans after the publication of the Regional Planning Guidance for the region concerned, two have adopted housing figures lower than those in the RPG. In both cases the differences were marginal. The counties concerned were Buckinghamshire (64,000 compared to an RPG figure of 65,340) and Surrey (35,600 compared to an RPG figure of 36,000).

Local Government Finance

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the effect on local authority costs of inflation at 2.75 per cent. per annum during the period 1997–98 to 1999–2000. [18803]

Mr. Raynsford: The impact of inflation on local authority costs would depend on the rate of increase in prices for the particular services and goods purchased by authorities.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for 1998–99 the annual (a) SSA and (b) capping limit for Harrogate Borough Council for each year between 1990–91 and 1998–99. [19474]

Mr. Raynsford: The Standard Spending Assessment and capping limit for Harrogate Borough Council for each year between 1990–91 and 1998–99 is as follows:

£ million

	SSA	Capping limit
1990–91[1]	8.679	—
1991–92[2]	11.119	15.000
1992–93	11.663	15.000
1993–94	11.718	15.234
1994–95	12.841	15234
1995–96	12.594	15.234
1996–97	11.867	14.936
1997–98	11.853	14.942
1998–99[3]	12.925	14.942

[1] Harrogate Borough Council was not given a capping limit.
[2] Harrogate Borough Council had a budget less than £15 million and under the capping regime of 1991–92 the cap limit was effectively £15 million.
[3] The 1998–99 SSA and capping limit are provisional.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for 1998–99 the proposed (a) revenue support grants and (b) standard spending assessments for (i) district councils and (ii) shire councils as a sum per head of their populations ranked and numbered in descending order. [19526]

Mr. Raynsford: As the tables showing the figures for shire districts and shire countries are lengthy, I have placed them in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage changes in (a) standard spending assessments and (b) revenue support grants for (i) shire counties and (ii) district councils between the settlement for 1997–98 and the proposals for 1998–99, ranked and numbered in descending order. [19525]

Mr. Raynsford: The figures for shire counties and shire districts are shown in tables which I have placed in the Library. The 1997–98 figures for Revenue Support Grant and Standard Spending Assessments are not comparable with the provisional figures for 1998–99 because of changes in local authority functions (e.g. in relation to under-fives) and local government reorganisation (for 1998–99 this affects the county areas of Berkshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Devon, Essex, Hereford and Worcester/Worcestershire, Kent Lancashire, Nottinghamshire and Shropshire).

Empty Council Properties

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many council properties in each of the London boroughs are empty; and how many have been empty for (a) up to six months, (b) up to one year and (c) over one year. [18581]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities in England report the numbers of their vacant dwellings at 1 April each year, together with the length of time they have been vacant, in their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP1) returns. The latest available figures for the London boroughs relate to the position on 1 April 1996 and are given in the 1996 "HIP 1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Air-Sea Rescue Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for changes in the operation of, and what assessment he has made of future employment levels at, the air-sea rescue service from HMS Daedalus. [18881]

Ms Glenda Jackson: HMS Daedalus was a former naval base and is where the Coastguard Agency leases accommodation for Search and Rescue (SAR) helicopter facilities from the Ministry of Defence. Following the announcement of HM Coastguard's five-year strategy, there will be no change to the Coastguard helicopter provision at Portland and Lee-on-Solent. New five-year contracts have been let recently to Bristows Helicopters Ltd. for the provision of Coastguard (SAR) helicopters at both locations thus ensuring their continuing presence until at least 2002. There are no plans to relocate these major SAR resources. The crewing of these helicopters is a matter for the contractor.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will (a) obtain from BAA plc and (b) publish details of those flights which landed at or departed from Heathrow Airport between midnight and 7 am on Christmas morning 1996, indicating airline, aircraft, origin or destination and schedules and actual times of arrival and departure. [18995]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information from Heathrow Airport Ltd. is as follows:

Tyne and Wear Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take to ensure that the Tyne and Wear Fire and Civil Defence Authority has sufficient funds to meet (a) its statutory duties and (b) its minimum recommended standard of service in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [18989]

Mr. Raynsford: Statutory responsibility rests with the Tyne and Wear Fire and Civil Defence Authority to set a budget which will allow it to meet its statutory duties and maintain the national standards of fire cover. As part of the provisional local government finance settlement, announced by the Deputy Prime Minister on 2 December, the Authority will be able to increase its budget requirement for 1998–99 by up to £1.736 million (4.5 per cent.)

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects work on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (a) to begin and (b) to be completed; and if he will make a statement on negotiations concerning the construction of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [19236]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the Development Agreement with the Government, London and Continental Railways (LCR) are contracted to complete the Channel Tunnel Rail Link within five and a half years of raising finance for the project. LCR say that this is planned for around mid-1998, that they are currently discussing related proposals with a number of parties and that main construction should begin next April.

Railtrack

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met the Chief Executive of Railtrack; and how often he (a) has met the Chief Executive and (b) officials in his Department have met officials of Railtrack. [19223]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has met the Chief Executive of Railtrack once, on 30 October. Officials from the Department meet Railtrack officials frequently to discuss various railways issues.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to prohibit the use of mobile phones by drivers in charge of their vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [19465]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The police can and do prosecute motorists using mobile phones for failing to have proper control of a vehicle, careless and inconsiderate driving or other more serious offences where appropriate. The Association of Chief Police Officers considers that existing road traffic legislation is sufficient to deal with cases arising from the use of a mobile phone while driving.

Our aim is to persuade motorists not to use phones while driving. One of the principal changes proposed in the recent consultation on the new edition of the Highway Code was a strengthening of the advice on this issue. We are drawing up good practice guidelines for drivers and for employers; and are considering what other measures may be necessary to reinforce the advice in the Highway Code.

Discharges to Water

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many discharges to water in excess of permitted limits were identified by the Environment Agency in 1996; how many prosecutions resulted; how many were successful; and what penalties were applied. [18683]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The number of discharges which exceeded their consented limits in 1996 was 3,448. Inevitably, this headline figure disguises a considerable range of cases from marginal exceedances to substantial failures. The Agency brought 18 prosecutions under section 85(6) of the Water Resources Act 1991 for breaches of consent in 1996. All were successful and the fines imposed ranged from £450 to £10,000. However, the majority of prosecutions brought by the Agency are for the general offence of causing water pollution under section 85(1) of the 1991 Act. Some of these cases may also be attributable to a consented discharge. One of the reasons for the low number of prosecutions in relation to breaches of consent is that, on being notified of a failed sample, most dischargers take prompt action to remedy matters. In other cases, the Environment Agency may issue a formal caution.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19366]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department provides the following car parking spaces:

	London	United Kingdom
(a) Ministers	9	0
(b) Employees	405	5,406
(c) Visitors	204	1,242

Slurry Lagoons

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on the requirement for a site investigation covering the hydraulic properties of soil, subsoil and bedrock as a prerequisite to the granting of permission for slurry lagoons in areas of high groundwater vulnerability. [19120]

Angela Eagle: Any person having custody or control of slurry must store it in accordance with the requirements of the Control of Pollution (Silage, Slurry and Agricultural Fuel Oil) Regulations 1991. Slurry storage systems covered by the regulations include lagoons. The regulations require the base and walls of any effluent tank, channels and reception pit and the walls of any pipes to be impermeable. The regulations do not require a site investigation to be undertaken. However, no part of the storage tank, any effluent tank, channels, pipes or reception pit is to be situated within 10 metres of any inland freshwater which slurry could enter if it were to escape unless this has been agreed by the Environment Agency on the basis of suitable precautions to avoid any significant risk of pollution of controlled waters. The Department has issued general guidance to farmers on the regulations. The Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the protection of water issued by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food also contains advice to farmers in respect of slurry storage.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Government's target for a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010 is contingent upon the carbon dioxide emission targets of other countries; and if he will make a statement. [19264]

Angela Eagle: Our domestic aim is to reduce carbon dioxide emissions to 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. After Kyoto we will be launching a national debate on how we might move over time towards this level of reduction. However, this is not an offer to take on a legally binding target of 20 per cent. regardless of the commitments other countries are prepared to make. In Kyoto we are supporting the EU proposal that all developed countries should reduce their emissions of greenhouse gases to 15 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Government is awaiting the outcome of the Kyoto environment conference before setting out the measures which will be taken to achieve its 20 per cent. carbon dioxide reduction target; and if he will make a statement. [19263]

Angela Eagle: As a first stage, we will consult next year on a programme of measures which will largely focus on delivering our legally binding commitment from Kyoto. We will also launch a national debate on how we might move over time towards our 20 per cent. aim. Our programme must take account of decisions reached at Kyoto, including those on targets, policies and measures, and the scope for using instruments such as emissions trading and joint implementation. It must also reflect the outcome of a number of policy reviews in progress, such as on renewable energy and development of an integrated transport policy.

Bicycles

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the depreciation associated with the average use of an average bicycle. [18791]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

Tax relief for depreciation on the cost of a bicycle used for the purposes of a business or employment is available through capital allowances at 25 per cent. per year. The allowance is adjusted for any private use.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Expenditure

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total public expenditure in each district council area in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [18933]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is not available. Public expenditure allocations are generally not recorded by District Council area.

Planning Application (Portadown)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, with regard to the application for planning permission for land to the south of No. 68 Mahon Road, Portadown, made on 28 July 1996 (N/96/0564), what were the original observations of the Roads Service when consulted by the Planning Service; what previous applications were made in respect of that land; what was the outcome of such applications; and what were the reasons for refusal. [18958]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. David Trimble, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked Mr. T. W. Stewart, Chief Executive of the Planning Service, to reply to your recent Question about a planning application for land to the south of No. 68 Mahon Road, Portadown (N/96/0564). I am responding on Mr. Stewart's absence on annual leave.

The Roads Service was formally consulted about this planning application on 9 September 1996 and in its consultation response to the Planning Service of 10 February 1997 commented as follows:-

"Safety and Convenience of Traffic

Roads Service has no objection to this application. The access must be located close to the southern end of the site to provide adequate forward visibility on Mahon Road. The existing footway along the site frontage must be widened to 1.8m"

On foot of Roads Service advice a condition and informative relating to sight distances and access were included in the decision notice.

The Planning Service has no record of any previous applications having been made in respect of this land.

I do hope this clarifies the position.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the lowest hourly rate paid by her Department to (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) persons employed under personal contract and (d) persons employed by firms undertaking contracted-out services for central government offices, defining the job title in each case. [18106]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 2 December 1997]: For the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, the information is as follows:

	Hourly rate (£)	Job title
(a)	3.27	Administrative Assistant
(b)	3.27	Part-time Administrative Assistant
(c)	3.42	Typist
(d)	—	-

[1] Information is not readily available.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 25 July 1997, Official Report, column 773, on the Irish Government's territorial claim to Northern Ireland, what steps her Department has taken subsequently to establish confidence-building measures in respect of the Irish constitutional claim to Northern Ireland. [18934]

Marjorie Mowlam: Constitutional issues have been discussed by the two Governments in meetings as part of the talks process. The Government have always made clear their view that there is a need for amendments to relevant constitutional legislation, reflecting the widespread support which exists for the consent principle in all its aspects.

The Government remain of the view, expressed by the Prime Minister in his speech in Northern Ireland on 16 May, that changes to the Irish constitution to reflect the principle of consent would be a helpful confidence-building step in advance of any settlement.

Miss Mildred McIlveen

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to permit Miss Mildred McIlveen to purchase her Housing Executive flat at 24c Ardgeehan Gardens, Bangor; and if she will make a statement on long term residency and purchase rules. [18935]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The House Sales Scheme operated by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive broadly mirrors the Right to Buy scheme operated by housing authorities in England and Wales. Its operation is a matter for the Executive's Chief Executive and it would be improper for me to intervene. The Chief Executive informs me that the period of residency in Executive or other social housing determines the percentage discount that a tenant may qualify for, against the valuation price of the house. The basic rules for purchase are that, with certain exceptions, tenants may purchase the dwelling they are living in. The exceptions are sheltered dwellings and those dwellings considered suitable for the elderly, the rationale being that there is constant demand for these properties and it is likely to increase. In the case of dwellings considered suitable for the elderly, such dwellings are single storey properties and ground floor accommodation with no more than two bedrooms and which have been let to, or are for, someone over age 60. Where a dwelling was let to someone over 60 at the time when the tenancy began, the successor in title may not buy the dwelling. If, in very exceptional circumstances, a dwelling considered suitable for the elderly is let to someone less than age 60, the house is not exempted from the House Sales Scheme.

The Chief Executive of the Housing Executive has advised me that there are no plans to change the House Sales Scheme as it applies to exempted properties.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will list the telecommunications masts which have been erected without the benefit of planning permission due to permitted development rights; [18129]

(2) on how many occasions the Department of the Environment Planning Service has withdrawn permitted development rights in respect of the erection of telecommunications masts; and what were the locations of these masts; [18130]

(3) how many applications for planning permission for telecommunications masts have been made to each of the divisional planning offices since 1 April; what applications were approved; what are the locations of these masts; and how many have been erected. [18196]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. S. McKay to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked Mr. T. W. Stewart, Chief Executive of the Planning Service, to reply to your recent Questions about the erection of telecommunications masts throughout Northern Ireland. I am responding on Mr. Stewart's absence on annual leave.

The Planning Service does not hold records of the number of telecommunications masts actually erected. However, I can say that since 1994 there have been 236 requests for determinations as to whether telecommunications equipment of various types could be erected under the permitted development, of which 203 requests were confirmed 7 were not permitted development, and the remainder are currently outstanding. Once confirmed that a proposal is permitted development, there is no time-scale laid down within which it has to be erected. To date, the Department has withdrawn the permitted development rights in respect of one telecommunications mast in the Downpatrick area.

As regards the number of planning applications submitted and approved for telecommunications masts since 1 April 1997, the information is not readily available in the precise form requested. The available information is as follows:

Company name	Divisional Planning Office
	Belfast	Craigavon	Ballymena	Downpatrick	Omagh	Londonderry
Orange PCS	0	4(0)	11(7)	7(0)	9(4)	12(5)
Millennium Communications	0	1(1)	1(1)	0	2	0
Telecom Securior Radio	0	0	0	0	2(1)	0
Castle Transmission	0	0	0	0	2(1)	3(2)
Others	5(2)	1(1)	2(2)	3(3)	1(1)	1(1)
Total	6(2)	7(3)	16(11)	10(3)	17(8)	16(8)

Figures refer to planning applications for all types of telecommunications equipment.
( ) Refer to numbers approved.

I do hope this is helpful.

Departmental Accounting Systems (Payment)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which her Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12555]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Departments of Agriculture, of Economic Development, of Environment and Health and of Social Services use accounts systems based on Oracle Financials software. All these Departments use ICL CFM as sub-contractors and have a basic overall maintenance contract costing around £830,000. The Department of Health and Social Services in addition employed Deloitte Touche and the Helm Corporation in the implementation of the system.

The Department of Education use McDonnell Douglas "Reality" system operating CAFIS software with an annual maintenance cost of £14,000.

The Department of Finance and Personnel use IFMIS Financial System maintained by McDonnell Douglas at a cost of £11,000.

The Northern Ireland Office use the Integra Accounting Package, Sage Sovereign Accruals Package from Microcare (NI) Ltd, a Selima Purchase Ledger from Sanderson and a package where payments are made via payable order, BACS or occasionally a tele-banking facility.

TREASURY

Teachers (Tax Relief)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what relief from taxation was allowed to teachers in 1995–96 in respect of claims for (a) books and (b) computer software. [18558]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Teachers may claim a deduction for income tax purposes for books and computer software if these expenses are incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the duties of their employment. Although Tax Offices establish what deductions are valid in relation to the individual's employment, information on the numbers and amounts claimed for particular types of employment is not routinely collected. The amount of deductions claimed for particular items by teachers is not, therefore, available.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of tax relief was claimed by teachers in 1995–96 for professional association fees. [18557]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 December 1997]: Teachers may claim a deduction for income tax purposes for annual subscriptions paid to certain approved professional bodies or learned societies, where the body's activities are relevant to the duties of their employment. Although the Tax Offices establish that any deductions are valid in relation to the individual's employment, information on the numbers and amounts claimed for particular types of employment is not routinely collected. The amount of deductions claimed by teachers is, therefore, not available.

VAT (Health Service)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the annual cost to (a) the NHS and (b) social services of the Value Added Tax (Drugs, Medicines and Aids for the Handicapped) Order 1997. [18641]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 December 1997]: The NHS and Local Authorities are funded to take account of VAT. The Order seeks to close tax avoidance arrangements.

Charity Shops

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he is planning to the VAT status and business rate status of charity shops; and if he will make a statement. [18996]

Dawn Primarolo: A Review of Charities' Taxation was announced in the July Budget. Since then charities have been giving their views and proposals to Customs and Excise, who are now analysing them. We expect to publish a consultation document in Spring 1998.

The Department of the Environment, Transport, and the Regions is also considering the issue of business rates reliefs for charity shops as part of their Review of Local Authority Finance. A consultation document is due to be published shortly.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reform insurance premium tax; and if he will make a statement. [18997]

Dawn Primarolo: As with all taxes, insurance premium tax is kept under review and changes will be made if and when appropriate.

Smuggling

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to eliminate the smuggling into the United Kingdom of goods which are subject to substantially lower rates of duty and taxation in other parts of the European Union; and what representations he has received from proprietors of convenience stores on those measures. [19204]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of front-line Customs staff to deal with Single Market Excise smuggling has been significantly increased in the last 15 months. An extra 70 have been allocated throughout the country under the Spend to Save initiative. In addition, a further 30, backed up by specialist investigation officers, are currently being deployed at Dover to intensify the drive against illegal trade. Customs announced new measures on 26 September 1997 to crack down on hired vehicles used for smuggling.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced in his Budget a review of the effects on the Exchequer and the industry of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping. The review, which is being conducted in partnership with all the trade sectors concerned and with key Government Departments, will be completed by the end of the year.

I have received a number of representations on this subject from businesses and members of the public; the records do not separately distinguish those from proprietors of convenience stores.

Family Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the proposed working family tax credit will (a) be available only to families with dependent children and (b) only benefit those who currently have zero tax liabilities. [19031]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The Government are considering all options.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the proposed working family tax credit will be withdrawn as income rises. [19032]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The working families tax credit could provide a highly effective way of targeting help at low-income families. The Government are considering all the options for its potential design and delivery.

Child carers

Audrey Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much time the young people who are to be trained as child carers under his proposals will spend on that training in hours per week and over what period of time; and to what level they will be trained. [18824]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply. Under the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds, young people undertaking training as child carers through the Full Time Education and Training option will spend up to 12 months in full-time study towards approved qualifications at NVQ Level 2 or, exceptionally, NVQ Level 3. Those undertaking training through the Employment or Voluntary Sector options will study for a minimum of the equivalent of one day per week, for up to 6 months, towards approved qualifications at NVQ Level 2 or, if appropriate, Level 3.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to encourage young people to enter higher education and to complete their courses. [18798]

Mr. Byers: The Government's approach to raising school standards, exemplified by our School Standards and Framework Bill, is designed to raise educational achievement. While there are other factors influencing the participation of young people in higher education, achievement of the required entry qualifications is by far the most significant.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated cost of preparing, printing and publishing his Department's communications which have been sent to educational institutions explaining the Government's policies on higher education. [19506]

Dr. Howells: The cost, since 1 May 1997, of preparing, printing and publishing communications explaining the Government's policies on higher education is £64,500.

UK universities and colleges have traditionally achieved high retention rates and we see no reason for this changing. Research evidence suggests there are several reasons why students drop out of higher education and it is primarily for universities and colleges, through appropriate support, counselling and advice both before and after admission, to address these.

We expect our plans to introduce a fairer system of financial support for students will help encourage young people to participate, and subsequently complete their courses, in higher education.

Summer Literacy Schools

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of this year's summer literacy schools on the reading standards of the pupils who participated. [19505]

Mr. Byers: The Department published its assessment of the effect of this year's Summer Literacy Schools scheme in a summary report published on 20 November. A copy is in the Library.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students attending further education colleges as part of the New Deal programme will continue to receive social security benefits. [19524]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Participants on the Full-Time Education and Training Option of the New Deal for young people aged 18 to 24 will receive an allowance equivalent to their usual Jobseeker's Allowance payments, and will retain entitlement to any passported benefits.

Young people in the other three New Deal options may attend a further education college part-time, under the education and training element of those options. Participants in the Employment option will be paid a wage. Those in the Environment Task Force and Voluntary Sector Options will receive either a wage or an allowance equivalent to their usual benefits plus a grant amounting to £15.38 per week, plus any passported benefits to which they are entitled.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19367]

Dr. Howells: Car park spaces used by the Department for Education and Employment are detailed in the table.

	Ministers	Employees	Visitors	Total
DfEE London HQ	6	40	7	53
DfEE HQ Outside London	Nil	703	109	812
Employment Service (ES)	Nil	7,200		7,200
Total	6	743	116	8,065

ES figure includes 200 spaces in central London.

Compulsory Retirement

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's policy on compulsory retirement ages for its employees. [19507]

Dr. Howells: The normal retirement age for all staff in this Department is 60. Some staff may be retained past age 60, but only if they are fit and efficient and there is a need for their service.

Class Sizes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his decision to compel St. Andrew's GM Church of England Primary School, Weeley, Essex, to take an extra pupil into their year 1 class; and what is his policy in circumstances when such enrolments result in class sizes of over 30. [19490]

Mr. Byers: The Government have pledged to reduce class sizes for all five, six or seven-year-olds to 30 or below. We will achieve this by the end of the Parliament. The School Standards and Framework Bill will impose a duty on LEAs and schools to comply with class size limits prescribed by the Secretary of State. Until such limits come into force, there may continue to be circumstances in which infant class sizes exceed 30. This may, very occasionally, follow a direction under section 431 of the Education Act 1996. In the case of St. Andrew's School in Weeley, the Secretary of State decided that the LEA's direction should stand.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what target date he has set for every child aged between five and seven years to be taught in a class of 30 pupils or fewer. [19182]

Mr. Byers: We shall honour our pledge to reduce class sizes to 30 or below for every five, six and seven year-old by the end of this Parliament.

New Deal

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people aged between 18 and 24 years, unemployed for over six months, will benefit from the new deal in the first year of operation. [19134]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the total numbers of young people who will require help from the New Deal. In its first year, we will offer to help everyone who becomes eligible for the New Deal, and sufficient places will be available to meet this commitment.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the new deal resources for education and training he expects to be allocated to the further education sector. [19192]

Mr. Andrew Smith: FE Colleges will have the opportunity to bid for well over £100 million-worth of New Deal resources next year.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he will take to ensure that unemployed adults participating in the new deal will be able to continue their training beyond NVQ Level 2 or equivalent. [18992]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Full-Time Education and Training Option in the New Deal for unemployed people aged 18 to 24 is primarily aimed at helping young people who do not hold qualifications at or above N/SVQ2 or equivalent. In circumstances where it will clearly enhance their employability, young people who already hold Level 2 qualifications will be able to work towards a higher level qualification. Under the education and training element of the other three options, participants will pursue an approved qualification, which might be at NVQ Level 3, or equivalent, if appropriate.

The education and training element of the New Deal for adults will allow the long-term unemployed to study on full-time employment related courses for qualifications broadly up to NVQ3 level for up to a year while receiving Jobseeker's Allowance.

School Classroom Technicians

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently employed as school classroom technicians. [18128]

Mr. Byers: The available information is shown in the table.

Full-time equivalent numbers of education support staff in schools in England: January 1997

	Technicians[1]
Nursery	n/a
Primary	n/a
Middle	173
Secondary	12,420
Special[2]	256
Pupil Referral unit	n/a
City Technology Colleges	143
Independent	n/a

n/a = not available.

[1] Includes laboratory assistants/technicians, design technology assistants/technicians (including home economics assistants, craft technicians), IT technicians.

[2] Includes maintained and non-maintained special schools.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Service

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone lines are in service at Lunar House; and how many telephone operators are on duty during daytime working hours. [18397]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 4 November 1997]: There are 162 telephone lines connecting either to an operator, or to a recorded message or directly to a member of staff. Of these, 28 are to the Telephone Inquiry Bureau which is staffed by an average of 20 staff on weekdays from 9am (10am Thursday) to 4.45pm (4.30pm Friday). The precise number of operators depends upon the demands of the Public Inquiry Office, with which staffing is shared.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has carried out into improving the Immigration Service by decentralising immigration control functions to offices outside London. [18398]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Fewer than half the staff of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate work at the Croydon headquarters. The rest are at locations around the United Kingdom including sea and airports, enforcement offices, detention centres, presenting officer units and the Nationality office in Liverpool. The use of accommodation is kept under review but in present circumstances significant shifts of work away from Croydon are unlikely to be cost effective.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been received regarding accessibility of the Immigration Service at Lunar House by telephone in the last 12 months. [18395]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 4 November 1997]: This information is not collated centrally. The Telephone Inquiry Bureau received 13 complaints.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency measures he has established against failures in millennium compliance in each emergency service. [19197]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 4 November 1997]: It is the responsibility of each police force and fire brigade to ensure that its information technology and communications systems are Year 2000 compliant.

The Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO) is co-ordinating the police response to the millennium problem. PITO has issued a guide to the police which provides a blueprint for action and has also held two conferences this year to disseminate best practice. A national electronic police bulletin-board is regularly updated to provide on-going advice and guidance to forces. Forces are engaging their information technology (IT) suppliers to ensure their local systems will be complaint and are also writing to other organisations in their area, whose millennium compliance may be crucial to police operations, to seek assurance that those systems will be ready. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary is monitoring the progress of forces during its regular inspections. The Police National Computer, which is operated by PITO, will be compliant by early 1999.

In the case of the fire service, discussions have been held with the relevant fire service committees and central guidance, in the form of a Home Office Circular, will be issued to brigades later this month. Her Majesty's Fire Service Inspectorate will also be monitoring progress within brigades.

If, during its audit of IT systems, a force or brigade establishes that there is a problem which cannot be, or is unlikely to be resolved before the millennium, it will be expected to establish contingency plans to ensure the continued integrity of its emergency service.

I have placed a copy of the guidance issued by PITO in the Library. A copy of the Home Office circular to chief fire officers will also be placed in the Library as soon as it is published.

The contingency arrangements made by the Coastguard Agency and the ambulance service are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and for Health respectively.

MI5

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances MI5 is permitted to determine that a file is not suitable for Ministerial eyes. [18685]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 4 November 1997]: By virtue of section 2(2)(a) of the Security Service Act 1989, the Director General of the Security Service is under a duty to ensure that there are arrangements in place for securing that no information is disclosed by the Service except so far as is necessary for the proper discharge of its functions, for the purpose of preventing or detecting serious crime or for the purpose of any criminal proceedings. The Director General must have regard to these provisions in deciding what information in the possession of the Service should be disclosed to persons or organisations outside the Service.

Group 4

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 647, if he will list those former Home Office officials and Prison Service staff who have taken paid employment with Group 4 Prison and Court Services Ltd. after leaving his Department; and if he will list all their former responsibilities within his Department. [17770]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 November 1997]: We now understand from Group 4 Prison and Court Services Ltd. that they have employed a total of 40 former Prison Service employees. This includes 14 former governor grades, not 20 as previously stated in my answer to a Question from the right hon. Member on 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 647, and two Psychologists. The remainder were either prison officers of differing grades and specialisms, or prison auxiliaries.

It is not general policy to mention officials or former officials by name.

Details of posts held by former officials are not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Service (Health Care)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to enable health care staff in prisons to develop the skills of practice as community nurses; and if he will make a statement. [19294]

Ms Quin [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Prison Service supports the training and development of nurses through a variety of health-related training programmes including England National Boards courses, National Vocational Qualifications, diplomas and university degrees in health care. Prison health care centres have developed and continue to develop close links with community nursing teams in local National Health Service Trusts and General Practitioner practices, contributing to the development of community nursing skills of prison health care staff, along the more formal training courses.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases involving suicides in prison establishments in the last 10 years the families of victims have sought compensation from the Prison Service; and in which cases compensation has been paid. [18842]

Ms Quin: Centrally available records do not provide information in the form required. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Algerians have sought asylum in the United Kingdom in 1997 to date; and how many have been (a) granted and (b) refused asylum. [18964]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Decisions on applications[1,2] for asylum in the United Kingdom from Algerian nationals, excluding dependants, in 1997 to date (January to October)

	Number of principal applicants
Asylum applications	545
Total decisions[3]	710
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	80
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[4]	*
Total refusals	630

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 5 with "*" = 1 or 2.
[2] Provisional figures.
[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the period.
[4] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made with the review of asylum seekers procedures. [18929]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The review team has made substantial progress and will shortly start drafting its report. Proposals will be submitted to Ministers in the new year.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were being held on rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 November. [18961]

Ms Quin: The available provisional information is for 31 October 1997. On that date, the number of inmates held on Prison Rule 43 or Young Offender Institution Rule 46 were:

	Good order and discipline	Own protection
Males	468	1,297
Females	8	28
Total	476	1,325

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the age profile of prison inmates in England and Wales. [18960]

Ms Quin: The information requested is as follows:

Population in prisons in England and Wales on 31 October 1997: by age[1]

Age	Number
15–17	2,451
18–20	7,659
21–24	11,808
25–29	13,753
30–39	17,184
40–49	6,528
50–59	2,880
60 and over	963
Total	63,226

[1] Provisional figures.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality are under consideration by his Department. [18962]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 30 November 1997, there were 75,015 applications for British citizenship awaiting determination, of which 35,518 were at various stages of consideration.

Stonnall Road Bail Hostel

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the legal costs incurred by the West Midlands Probation Committee in its unsuccessful challenge, in the High Court and the Court of Appeal, to the decision of the Planning Inspector not to grant permission to extend the Stonnall Road Bail Hostel. [18877]

Ms Quin: The legal costs incurred by the West Midlands Probation Committee in the High Court were £21,000. Provisional estimates are that the costs incurred in the Court of Appeal will be in the region of £13,000, to which any legal costs incurred by the Crown in the appeal would be added.

Gloucester Prison

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons funding has been withdrawn from the job focus courses at HMP Gloucester; and what alternative provision will be made available for inmates who are about to be released. [18928]

Ms Quin: Job focus courses run at Gloucester prison and other prisons in England and Wales are funded by the Employment Service of the Department for Education and Employment (DfEE). A decision was made a year ago to cease funding for these courses and concentrate resources on people already in the labour market.

The current contract for the provision of the job focus course at Gloucester prison, involving a prison officer and a tutor from Gloucester College of Art and Technology, will cease on 31 March 1998. The governor of Gloucester prison will maintain the job focus club by continuing the involvement of the prison officer but does not have the resources available to replace the funding from DfEE for the tutor.

Help for ex-offenders from Employment Services will be available nationally through a number of measures including:

- specialist advice and guidance from Employment Service staff to ex-offenders about their jobsearch;
- allowing time spent in custody to count towards eligibility for Employment Service programmes;
- maintaining Employment Service contact with prison authorities at local level to provide advice on programmes and services as part of a pre-release programme;
- allowing prison staff to attend Jobclub leader training courses (where places are available) without charge;
- continuing the availability of Jobclubs in prisons where all parties consider them to be useful.

National Hunt Racing

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the problems facing National Hunt racing; and if he will make a statement. [17991]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have not carried out their own assessment. We have seen the British Horseracing Board's assessment of the impact a hunting ban would have on National Hunt racing. There will be an opportunity to discuss this during the Committee Stage of the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19372]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office Central London Estate, which comprises six buildings, has a total of 155 car park spaces. Ministerial vehicles are parked in the outside courtyard of the Home Office. No other spaces are normally provided for Ministers. Eighteen are reserved for staff with medical or child care needs. The remainder are used for staff, visitors and contractors as appropriate to their needs. Figures for the rest of the Home Office estate could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by nationality the (a) men and (b) women who were being held in custody in England and Wales under immigration laws on 1 November. [18963]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on persons held in detention in England and Wales under immigration powers as at 31 October 1997, but nationality and gender, is given in tables 1 and 2.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Know How Fund

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total budget of the Know How Fund. [19555]

Clare Short: We plan to spend £89 million on Know How Fund programmes in 1997–99.

Strategic Defence Review

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's contribution to the Strategic Defence Review. [17745]

Clare Short: I had a very interesting and constructive meeting with the Chief of Defence Staff, General Sir Charles Guthrie, which covered a number of subjects of mutual interest, and plan to meet the Secretary of State for Defence later this month.

We have been consulted on the Strategic Defence Review and continue to participate in the discussions and seminars. DFID has participated as a member of the Defence Review Steering Group chaired by the Cabinet Office, and in more detailed discussions of particular issues. These include consideration of the Government's wider international responsibilities, particularly in relation to the maintenance of peace, international order and stability, humanitarian principles and democratic rights. Particular issues of interest to us include:

Disaster preparedness;

international conflict prevention and peacekeeping; humanitarian relief and reconstruction—DFID and MOD have collaborated on peacebuilding in Bosnia; controlling arms exports;

anti-personnel landmines—co-ordination of resources to focus better military expertise in demining sector, including adaptation of existing technologies to the specific needs of humanitarian demining and the provision of training facilities;

military training and promoting civilian control of the armed forces in developing countries—Work in this field can make a significant contribution to our efforts to promote good governance and the rule of law and in curbing excessive military expenditure in poor countries;

the respective roles and responsibilities of individual countries and international organisations in emergency situations and areas of conflict; and how we can work together;

sharing relevant experience and expertise; developing regional and local capacity in peace building and conflict management.

DEFENCE

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19365]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Service Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the arrangements for compensating service personnel for death or injury due to service. [20025]

Dr. Reid: The Government share a number of concerns about the anomalous and complex nature of the current arrangements for paying compensation to Service personnel who are killed, injured or suffer serious illness as a result of their service. Experience from the Gulf conflict and operations in Bosnia underline the need for arrangements which properly reflect the special nature of the commitment which Service men and women make to the defence of our country.

We have therefore decided there should be a comprehensive review of the arrangements for compensating Service personnel (or their dependants) and for the payment of death and invaliding pension benefits. Our aim is to devise a modern, fair and simplified scheme which could apply to all Service personnel injured or killed on peacetime duties—in training or on operations—where death or injury was attributable to military service, to replace the current complex arrangements.

The main aim of the review will be to recommend new arrangements for the future, but it will also examine the extent to which personnel currently serving may be able to benefit from a simpler and more comprehensive approach. The War Pensions Scheme will continue to be available to existing ex-Service personnel.

The review will be conducted jointly with the Department of Social Security, the Department responsible for the War Pensions Scheme. We intend to publish the results of the review in a consultation document.

A review of compensation for Service personnel was recommended in the House of Commons Defence Committee Sixth Report on Gulf War illness, published earlier this year. I hope that the whole House will support the initiative we are now taking.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Cox: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reported incidents involving drug misuse in the armed forces there have been in each of the last three years. [18586]

Dr. Reid: It is not yet possible to provide confirmed figures for 1996 and 1997. However, figures for 1993–1995 are as follows:

Drug offences dealt with by Court Martial, Summary Trial or Summary Proceedings, or civilian courts

	RN/RM	Army[1]	RAF	Total
1993	286	627	79	992
1994	236	355	48	639
1995	111	174	7	292

[1] The Army figures may be subject to slight revision.

Those dismissed for drug related offences following a sentence of dismissal from Service at Court Martial, Summary Trial or Summary Proceedings, or a sentence of imprisonment from a Service or civilian courts:

	RN/RM	Army	RAF	Total
1993	51	81	20	152
1994	45	68	8	121
1995	31	37	1	69

(Latest figures available).

In addition to the above figures, the numbers of those administratively discharged for drug related incidents are:

	RN/RM	Army	RAF	Total
1993	2	204	10	216
1994	0	136	22	158
1995	0	253	14	267

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98 full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15269]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Details of central MOD expenditure on publicity and advertising are contained in the annual MOD Departmental Reports. For 1993–94, the information is shown on page 39 of Cm 2801; for 1994–95, the information is shown on page 43 of Cm 3055; for 1995–96, the information is shown on page 32 of Cm 3448; and for 1996–97, the information is shown on page 49 of Cm 3781. Copies of these Reports are available in the House.

Estimated expenditure for 1997–98 is £40.97 million. We do not publish detailed future plans as approval to commit expenditure is subject to formal endorsement through Ministers and the Parliamentary supply system.

Expenditure by non-departmental public bodies for the years in question is set out below.

1993–94	629,262
1994–95	487,663
1995–96	456,644
1996–97	408,826
1997–98 to date	291,816
1997–98 full year	421,995
1998–99	—

[1] Detailed figures not yet agreed.

Publicity expenditure for Departmental Agencies is not held centrally. I have asked Chief Executives, where appropriate, to write direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about how much was spent by Defence Agencies on publicity and advertising, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO).

I attach a table with the appropriate breakdown of costs for 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97, 1997–98 year to date and the 1997–98 full year estimate. The substantial increase in 1997–98 is due to our involvement, as part of the Army's presence, in the Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition in September 1997.

Total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising for the Army Base Repair Organisation

1993–94 (Actual)	5,036
1994–95 (Actual)	7,618
1995–96 (Actual)	30,026
1996–97 (Actual)	37,721
1997–98 (Forecast)	176,868
Total	257,269
1997–98 (To date)	77,943

Letter from M. J. Heritage-Owen to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising on behalf of the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Maintenance Group Defence Agency who is away on duty, as this matter falls within his area of responsibility.

The information requested, broken down by financial year, is as follows:

Financial year	Total (£)
1995–96	54,460
1996–97	359,741
1997–98 (To end of October)	135,668
1997–98 (Estimated full year)	405,531
1998–99	[1]—

[1] Detailed figures not yet available. Information for FY 1993/94 and FY 1994/95 is not available in the format requested and is, therefore, not provided. Expenditure includes advertising and promotional costs. The increase since 1995/96 is due primarily to increased civilian recruiting costs resulting from the drawdown of Service manpower.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from David G. Wadsworth to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about recruitment and advertising expenditure, as this matter falls within my areas of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Service Children's Education Agency.

The SCE Agency recruits teaching and specialist staff in UK and overseas. Details of the past, current and future recruitment advertising budget is attached at Annex A.

In addition to this, each of the 56 SCE Schools around the world is required to produce a school brochure in line with the practice followed by LEA maintained schools in the UK. These brochures are used largely as information for parents. However, in a few cases they may be used to advertise the benefits of attending an SCE school, where more than one is available in a given location or where irreducible spare capacity can be offered to fee paying parents.

Information on school brochure expenditure is not collected as a matter of course, as most are produced locally at very little cost. Based upon information available so far in this financial year, I would not expect the total sum to exceed £15K.

If I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to contact my office.

Annex A: Expenditure on all forms of recruitment advertising

1993–94	[1]—
1994–95	32
1995–96	52
1996–97	66
1997–98 (year to date)	18
1997–98 (full year estimate)	51
1998–99 (planned expenditure)	[2]—

[1] No information available.
[2] Not yet finally agreed.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure on publicity and advertising. For the Meteorological Office, this matter falls to me as Chief Executive.

Expenditure by the Meteorological Office on publicity and advertising (in thousands of pounds) is estimated to be as follows:

Period	Expenditure £000
1993–94	777
1994–95	758
1995–96	735
1996–97	666
1997–98 (to date)	288
1997–98 (full year estimate)	765
1998–99 (planned expenditure)	955

This should be set against income from our commercial activities as a Trading Fund, currently running at over £22 million per annum.

Letter from D. L. Burden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question (PQ 1029i) to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by the MOD, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies, in so far as it applies to the Army Personnel Centre (APC).

I should explain that the only expenditure incurred separately by my Agency which falls into these categories is related to civilian staff recruitment advertising costs during FY 1996/1997. These, inclusive of VAT, were as follows:

First advertisement, April 1996	3,578
Second advertisement, April 1996	1,037
Total	4,615

There is no planned expenditure of this nature for the remainder of this FY or during FY 1998/1999.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from D. J. Stevens to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure on publicity and advertising in respect of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency.

This agency was launched in December 1996 and is formed from a number of management areas within the MOD. The information which you requested is not available therefore for the years prior to 1996/97. The figures requested for 1996/97 and 1997/98 are given below and cover mainly recruitment advertising and external publicity, including attendance at exhibitions, advertising our irreducible spare capacity from which we earn income. I am unable to give a figure for 1998/99 as detailed budgets have yet to be agreed.

1996–97	19,464
1997–98 (to date)	37,035
1997–98 (full year estimate)	48,035

Letter from T. McG. Brown to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding expenditure on publicity and advertising. As Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency (DPCSA) I am responsible for expenditure within my Agency and I am therefore providing the details you have requested.

All publicity costs are for the production of our Annual Report and Accounts. In accordance with our Accounts Direction (issued by HM Treasury) and our Framework Document the Agency is obliged to present an annual report to Parliament. Some of the publicity costs shown below were incurred on my Agency's behalf by other areas of the MOD. All advertising costs are for staff recruitment.

Year	Publicity	Advertising	Total
1993–94	10.9	0.0	[1,2]10.9
1994–95	16.9	0.0	[2]16.9
1995–96	18.6	7.6	26.2
1996–97	23.2	6.6	29.8
1997–98 (to date)	0.7	4.2	[3]4.9
1997–98 (year end estimate)	20.0	10.0	[3]30.0

Detailed figures for 1998–99 are not available at present.
[1] Production costs for the first Annual Report, a smaller document containing unaudited accounts, were significantly lower than for subsequent larger Annual Reports with complete audited accounts.
[2] During 1993–94 and 1994–95 there were no advertising costs as staff recruitment for the Agency was the responsibility of central MOD organisations at that time.
[3] Final costs for the latest Annual Report have not been finalised.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Malcolm Bruce dated 8 December 1997:

Thank you for your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about estimates of expenditure on publicity and advertising. I am replying on behalf of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

The following figures for graduate recruitment advertising represent the majority of expenditure in this area:

i. 1993–94	[1]—
ii. 1994–95	888,000
iii. 1995–96	1,366,000
iv. 1996–97	1,392,000
v. 1997–98 (to date)	1,033,000
vi. 1997–98 (full year estimate)	1,570,000
vii. 1998–99 (planned expenditure)	1,685,000

[1] Information not available.

Other advertising and publicity costs are in the region of £200,000 per annum. This figure includes the cost of the DERA Press Office and the Annual Results Press Conference.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from M. J. A. Smallwood to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about publicity and advertising, on behalf of the Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency, as this falls into this area of responsibility. The Chief Constable/ Chief Executive is away from the office at present.

I have identified the following expenditure in respect of publicity and advertising: 1993–94 £6,572; 1994–95 £6,985; 1995–96 £36,659; 1996–97 £28,164; 1997–98 £13,775 up to 28 November 1997. I expect the final outturn for the current Financial Year to be £20,000. Spending plans for 1998–99 have not yet been finalised.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I have been asked to respond to your Question regarding all forms of publicity and advertising and give our response below.

The amount spent on advertising is as follows:

1993–94: £4,116

1994–95: £2,100

1995–96: £3,451

1996–97: £6,929

1997–98: £5,297 to date

1997–98: £5,750 full year estimate

1998–99: Details not yet agreed.

Letter to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

In November you asked the Secretary of State for Defence a Parliamentary Question relating to expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising. As this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office (UKHO), I have been asked to reply to your direct.

The information you requested is as follows:

UKHO—Total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising

Financial year	Amount (£)
1993–94	228,741.97
1994–95	226,396.90
1995–96	340,446.88
1996–97	323,672.13
1997–98 (to date)	239,776.25
1997–98 (full year estimate)	[1]494,887.15
1998–99 (planned expenditure)	687,000.00

[1] Includes to date figure.

As the UKHO operates in an international commercial market, the attainment of Trading Fund status has provided the UKHO with additional flexibility to respond to commercial activities. In the first year of operating as a Trading Fund the UKHO achieved a net profit of £3.7M which clearly demonstrates that costs are more than fully recovered by sales activities.

I hope the above has been of assistance. Should you require any further information please do not hesitate to get in touch with my Office.

Letter from J.D. Coles to Mr. Malcolm Bruce dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces about the estimate of total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising, as it relates to the Ships Support Agency, for which I am responsible.

The Agency was established on 11 December 1996 and the estimate of expenditure since that date is as follows:

(b)(iv) 1996–97	30,000
(b)(v) 1997–98, year to date	15,000
(b)(vi) 1997–98, full year estimate	15,000

Detailed budgets for 1998–99 have not yet been agreed.

The figures relate to actual and planned expenditure associated with: Agency launch; the printing of the Agency's Framework Document, Corporate Plan, and Annual Report and Accounts; and the Agency's input to the International Maritime Defence Exhibition 1997 at the Royal Naval College Greenwich.

Letter from P. D. Foxton to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to the recent question you tabled to the Secretary of State for Defence for those matters that fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA). You asked about the expenditure by ABSDA on all forms of publicity and advertising for Financial Years 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and the year 1997–98 to date, and the 1997–98 full year estimate.

For clarity I have incorporated the answer in the form of a table

Financial Year	Cost (£)	Estimate (£)
1994–95	3,788	n/a
1995–96	10,379	n/a
1996–97	5,824	n/a

Financial Year	Cost (£)	Estimate (£)
1997–98	3,649	8,248
1998–99		n/a

The Agency was not formed until 1995 and therefore no expenditure is recorded for the Financial year 1993–94.

I trust I have answered your questions satisfactorily.

Letter from S. R. Hill to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the expenditure on publicity and spending by Defence agencies as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO).

2. Attached is a summary of the figures for this Agency.

Parliamentary Question—Expenditure on Publicity and Advertising by Defence Agencies

Financial year	Recruitment costs (civilian) £	PR/Marketing and business support £
1993–94	934	988
1994–95	1,205	3,153
1995–96	1,478	0
1996–97	4,154	45,416
1997–98 (to date)	5,604	2,606
1997–98 (forecast)	11,083	15,000

The recruitment costs are for advertising.

Letter from K. A. Bradshaw to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence/Her Majesty's Government about Advertising and Publicity Costs as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Defence Codification Agency.

The Defence Codification Agency has expenditure for the years quoted as follows:

1996–97	38,438
1997–98 (to date)	14,525
1997–98 (forecast)	21,000
1998–99 (yet to be finalised)	—

For background information, the Defence Codification Agency was launched in June 1996. At that time funds were disaggregated from the Defence Information Division (DINFOD) for our Marketing function.

Letter from I. G. McIntyre to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure on publicity and advertising as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Dental Agency.

During 1996/97 my Agency spent £13,738. This figure includes the cost of the national advertising for the national advertisement for the post of Chief Executive. The spend to date in 1997/98, the current financial year, is £1,020 with the full year estimate being £2,000. Details of budgets for future years have not yet been finalised.

Letter from R. J. Mealing to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

In response to your Question, and in the unavoidable absence of the Chief Executive on business, I am writing to inform you of expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising in so far as it effects the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency.

Most of the expenditure incurred on publicity and advertising by my Agency is attributable to job advertising in newspapers. The following table shows the information you have requested.

Financial year	Expenditure (£)
1993–94	[1]—
1994–95	Nil
1995–96	5,901
1996–97	24,261
1997–98 (so far)	24,650
1997–98 (estimate)	27,053
1998–99	[2]—

[1] DCTA not formed as an Agency.
[2] Detailed budget not yet agreed.

Letter from Malcolm Westgate to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about advertising and publicity costs. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

During 1995/96 my Agency spent £6,844.37 on advertising the post of Chief Executive. All other publicity and advertising expenditure has been included in the reply given by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Letter from P. R. Wildman to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure on publicity and advertising as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

Military Survey's expenditure on publicity and advertising since 1993 is as follows:

1993–94: NIL

1994–95: NIL

1995–96: £16,737 incl VAT

1996–97: NIL

1997–98: £18,893.07 incl VAT (to-date; none further planned)

1998–99: NIL planned.

The expenditures were on recruitment advertising for civilian posts with the Agency.

Letter from M. I. Laurie to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure on publicity and advertising as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Intelligence and Security Agency. The Agency was formed on 1 October 1996 and the figures below represent expenditure after that date:

(a) 1996–97 (October 96–March 97	2,686
(b) 1997–98 (to date)	5,370
(c) 1997–98 (full year estimate)	6,694
(d) 1998–99 (estimated)	Nil

On its formation the Agency began a collocation programme, moving from five previous sites to one. The expenditure detailed above relates to newspaper advertising of job vacancies at the new site.

Letter from G. Jones to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising, by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies, in each of the last four financial years, the current financial year to date with a full-year estimate, and that planned for 1998–99, for which figures are available, as these matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Defence Agency.

Advertising by the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Defence Agency has, to date, been confined to that required for the recruitment of civilian staff. We have no record of any expenditure prior to 1996–97 because most recruitment was conducted centrally. In September 1996 the Agency was delegated additional responsibility for recruitment and, as a result, the expenditure on recruitment advertising in 1996–97 was £61,685. In 1997–98 the expenditure to date has been £43,435, with a forecast for the complete year of £120,000. Expenditure for 1998–99 is expected to be similar to that for the current year, but the funding is still the subject of the 1998 Long Term Costing process.

Letter from D. D. Allan to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about estimates of expenditure on publicity and advertising as this matter falls within my area of responsibility. I am replying in the absence of the Chief Executive of the Logistics Support Services Agency who is away on business.

2. Our expenditure on publicity and advertising, both actual and estimate, is detailed in the table below and the figures are exclusive of VAT.

	Total
1993–94	0
1994–95	0
1995–96	0
1996–97	6,990
1997–98 (spend)	5,360.08
1997–98 (estimated)	8,100
1998–99	[1]—

[1] Planned figures not yet accepted.

WALES

Inward Investment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with (a) the President of the Board of Trade and (b) the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning inward investment; and if he will make a statement. [19532]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend has had discussions about inward investment with both the President of the Board of Trade and the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency. We all recognise the importance of continued inward investment success to our aims of economic and industrial strength and stability.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the advantages of establishing the National Assembly for Wales at the Flintshire County Council Offices at Ewloe, Deeside, Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [19528]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Council Offices at Ewloe, and a wide range of other options, are being assessed against the criteria described in my consultation paper, "The National Assembly for Wales; Accommodation Options". I now wait to hear the views of the people of Wales before deciding where the Assembly will be located.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the range of estimates of the cost of the proposed locations for the National Assembly for Wales. [19599]

Mr. Ron Davies: My consultation paper sets out the range of options across Wales which we have considered in most detail. It also gives indicative costs for the different approaches to housing the Assembly, within the cost ceiling the Government have established.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the location of the National Assembly for Wales. [19529]

Mr. Ron Davies: I shall announce the location of the Welsh Assembly within the next few months, following my consultation with the people of Wales which ends on 30 January 1998.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the location of the National Assembly for Wales. [19530]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have already received a number of representations about the location of the Welsh Assembly, and expect to receive more during the period of my consultation with the people of Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the reconfiguration of NHS trusts in North Wales; when he will announce his decision; and if he will make a statement. [19531]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have received representations from a number of hon. Members, NHS Trusts, Community Health Councils, General Practitioners, Local Authorities, NHS staff groups and the general public. Public consultation on our proposals for a new configuration of NHS Trusts in Wales, in line with statutory requirements, will take place next summer. Following this, I expect a decision to be announced in October 1998.

Public Transport

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the use of public transport in rural and urban areas; and if he will make a statement. [19533]

Mr. Hain: The Government are currently embarked on a review with the aim of producing a White Paper next year setting out proposals for a new Integrated Transport Policy. Reducing dependence on car travel and the promotion of public transport will be among the key objectives of that policy. The Welsh Office is participating fully in the review and will be producing its own Welsh Transport Policy statement at around the same time as the White Paper is published.

Job Creation (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss job creation in Alyn and Deeside. [19534]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss a range of issues. The creation and safeguarding of jobs in Wales continues to be a priority for the Agency and I know that the Chairman has recently visited Alyn and Deeside constituency and met my hon. Friend and representatives of the workforce and management of the British Aerospace plant to discuss their expansion plan.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the delays in paying sheep annual premium payments to Welsh farmers; and if he will make a statement. [19099]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The timetable of payments has been delayed by the need to comply with additional information requirements to support European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund (EAGGF) payments made after the start of the new EAGGF financial year on 16 October 1997. Without the new supporting information any payments made will be subject to disallowance by the European Commission. The Welsh Office has been working to address these new requirements and this has involved substantial computer reprogramming. The position on Sheep Annual Premium is that some 85 per cent. of first advances in Wales had been paid by early October, and the payment of the second advance is now well under way.

Charities and Voluntary Groups

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the charities and voluntary groups which received grants and other assistance from his Department in the financial year 1996–97 together with the amounts given. [19096]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have asked for the information to be collated. I will write to my right hon. Friend as soon as the exercise has been completed and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on welfare reform for disability benefits. [19527]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

We are committed to modernising the Social Security system so that it helps people to work as far as they are able; provides appropriate support to those who cannot work; and makes the most effective use of the resources available.

As a first step we are undertaking a comprehensive review of the Department's expenditure. The review is wide-ranging and includes consideration of the complex range of benefits paid to people who are disabled or have health problems. We want to end the exclusion of disabled people; to empower them to play a full part in society, and to develop an approach which focuses on people's abilities and their capacities, rather than only their disabilities and incapacity.

As part of this process, up to £195 million has been made available from the Windfall Tax to test a range of options to help people with long-term health problems or disabilities to move into, or remain in, work.

We will, in due course, consider how many proposals for change should be taken forward.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

38. Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase the availability of documents in the Public Record Office. [18017]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are committed to ensuring that public access to public records is improved. There is a vigorous review of all files to ensure that as many as possible are released. In July we announced that over 77,500 records that had previously been withheld, had been released in the Public Record Office, after the Departments had reconsidered them. Further updated figures should be available soon.

Lord Chancellor (Accommodation)

39. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received about the Lord Chancellor's accommodation. [18019]

Mr. Hoon: I presume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the Lord Chancellor's Official Residence in the Palace of Westminster. This is the fifth question I have answered on this topic from hon. members, and I have received eight letters from members of the public.

40. Mr. Gray: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the redecoration of the Lord Chancellor's official residence will be completed. [18020]

Mr. Hoon: It is expected that the redecoration will be substantially completed by February, 1998.

Magistrates Courts

41. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what responses he has received following his statement on the changes to the magistrates courts procedures; and if he will make a statement. [18023]

Mr. Hoon: A range of responses have been received to the statement we made on 29 October concerning the future structure of the magistrates courts service. Responses have been received from 10 magistrates courts committees, 3 Members of Parliament, the Magistrates Association, the Justices Chief Executives Group and West Sussex County Council.

Criminal Justice (Keighley)

42. Mrs Ann Cryer: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for improvements in the administration of criminal justice in Keighley. [18024]

Mr. Hoon: My statement of 29 October 1997, Official Report, columns 901–05 set out the Government's view of the future structure of the magistrates courts service. I believe there should be fewer and larger MCC areas, more closely aligned to the areas served by other justice agencies. My first priority is to consider the position of metropolitan areas. I have recently written to the Chairman of the West Riding MCC on this subject and have indicated that, in the absence of any proposals from the committees themselves concerning the organisation of MCCs in West Yorkshire, it is likely that I will wish to consider, in the autumn of 1998, whether amalgamation is appropriate in the area.

Court Officials (Training)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the guidance and training available to judges, magistrates and other court officials in dealing with witnesses with learning or communication difficulties. [18986]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB), which is a non-departmental governmental body. The JSB has held a number of sessions in both induction and continuation training on equal treatment, including dealing with people with learning or communication difficulties, and is considering how training in this area might be developed.

Lay Magistrate training is organised and delivered by Magistrates Courts Committees based on syllabuses, advice and guidance from the JSB. Lay magistrates already address the issue of equality of treatment for all in the light of their judicial oath and the JSB has recently begun a project to develop and pilot training materials to ensure equality of treatment issues are incorporated into all aspects of magistrates training.

Staff in the Court Service receive training on customer service skills as part of an induction programme. This programme includes training on communication skills and dealing with customers including those with special needs. Further training in this area is also available to all staff whose work brings them into contact with members of the public. The Court Service makes no distinction in the training of court officials dealing with witnesses—all customers should be treated appropriately and with courtesy.

A review of the induction programme for court staff is planned as part of the work towards achieving recognition as an "Investor in People" in 1999.

HEALTH

Community Health Councils

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the operation of community health councils; if he will list the areas which are under review; what representations he has received about their (a) role, (b) independence and (c) duties; and if he will make a statement. [17210]

Mr. Milburn: No immediate changes to Community Health Councils are planned. We have received a small number of letters mainly about the role of CHCs in relation to primary care and membership matters. In addition the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales has sent to Ministers a copy of its report "Making a Difference".

Pathology Services (Kent)

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine refused training recognition to the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust Pathology Service; and what progress has been made by the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust to address the concerns of the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine expressed at the time they refused the Pathology Service training recognition. [17789]

Mr. Milburn: The Boards of the Council are the statutory bodies responsible for training recognition. The Medical Laboratory Technicians (MLT) Board withheld training recognition for the Histopathology/Cytology Department on 15 September 1992. This decision did not affect the clinical chemistry, haematology and hospital transfusion science or microbiology, which all received approval.

Subsequent inspection has shown that some improvements have been made; however, the MLT Board decided on 14 January 1997 to withhold approval for training in cellular pathology (histopathology) until the Board's requirements have been met.

Older People's Services Report

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the recent Audit Commission report. "The Coming of Age: Improving Services For Older People". [18137]

Mr. Boateng: We welcome the publication of the Audit Commission's report "The Coming of Age: Improving Care Services for Older People". The Department has already looked in detail at the recommendations made in the report and these will contribute to work we already have in hand, which is actively addressing issues of particular concern to elderly people. This area includes the Long-Term Care Charter and the Royal Commission on long-term care for the elderly, announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 4 December. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already issued instructions to health authorities, the National Health Service and local authorities on services for the elderly setting out priority areas to meet their medium and long-term needs.

Prescription Drugs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what audit procedures exist to deal with the disposal of returned prescription drugs by health authorities; [18815]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost to the National Health Service of items prescribed but returned to community pharmacists or GPs unused; [18814]

(3) what audit procedures exist to deal with the return of prescription drugs to community pharmacists. [18816]

Mr. Milburn: We encourage the public to take unused medicines to a community pharmacy for safe destruction. This reduces the risk of accidental ingestion, especially by children, and allows the medicines to be destroyed in line with environmental law. Prescription-only medicines have to be disposed of as clinical waste. Funding has been made available to the National Health Service since 1993 to run schemes through community pharmacies for the safe disposal of waste medicines. As at 31 March 1997 schemes were running in every health authority area in England and Wales, and 98 per cent. of community pharmacies in these areas were taking part in these schemes. No national estimate has been made of the value of returned medicines.

Dental Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for further regulation of the dental profession. [18861]

Mr. Milburn: The General Dental Council has made proposals for changes in the Dentists Act 1984, which would give it more appropriate powers for professional regulation and protection of the public. We intend to address these issues when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

NHS Bureaucracy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 427, on savings in NHS bureaucracy, if he will list by health trust the trust management costs for the last two years. [18624]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service trust management costs are available for 1994–95 and 1995–96 listed by trust in Trust Management Costs 1994–95 (published December 1995) and Health Authority Costs and Management Costs in NHS Trusts Financial Year 1995–96 and planned costs for 1996–97 (published March 1997). Copies are available in the Library. Figures for 1996–97 together with 1997–98 plans will be published shortly.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 427, on savings in NHS bureaucracy, if he will list by health authority the quarterly management costs for the last six quarters. [18623]

Mr. Milburn: Health authority costs are published annually. 1995–96 figures are listed by health authority in Health Authority Costs and Management Costs in NHS Trusts Financial Year 1995–96 and Planned costs for 1996–97 (published March 1997). Copies are available in the Library. Figures for 1996–97 together with 1997–98 plans will be published shortly.

The quarterly monitoring of health authority costs, referred to in my reply to the hon. Member on 24 November at column 427, provides regional offices of the National Health Service Executive with information on the likely year-end position of health authorities to assist with in-year performance management.

Health Service Funding (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make available additional resources to the NHS Hospital in Northallerton through the North Yorkshire Health Authority to compensate for the scaling down of the military hospital in Catterick. [18802]

Mr. Milburn: We understand the Defence Secondary Care Agency is currently considering various options for the future of the Duchess of Kent Military Hospital at Catterick and is assisting with a consultation exercise led by North Yorkshire Health Authority.

North Yorkshire Health Authority has recently been allocated £1.7 million for winter pressures. It will also receive a £14.3 million increase in its allocation for next year, of which £5.8 million is growth funding. Any additional pressures due to changes at the Duchess of Kent Military Hospital would be expected to be met by this extra funding.

Alcohol and Drugs

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made in the current year to provide assistance to those with alcohol and drug problems. [19108]

Ms Jowell: Health and local authorities are responsible for assessing the level of need for alcohol and drug services locally, and making arrangements to meet that need in accordance with local priorities and the resources available.

The Drug Misuse Special Allocation is a significant element in the resources available to health authorities to address the needs of drug misusers. In 1996–97 the special allocation stands at £37.191 million. This will rise to £41.296 million in 1998–99, an increase of 8 per cent. in real terms.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions he has had with the mobile phone industry as to whether a health and safety warning is needed on all handsets; [19127]

(2) what discussions he has had with the National Radiological Protection Board about potential health risks from use of mobile phones. [19130]

Ms Jowell: The Department regularly discusses advice on the health implications of exposure to electromagnetic fields, including mobile phone frequencies, with the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB). NRPB's view is that mobile phones currently used in the United Kingdom comply with the recommended exposure limit. The Department has had no discussions concerning health and safety warnings with the mobile phone industry.

Health Promotion

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made in the current year by his Department to promote healthy living through general practitioner practices and primary healthcare services. [19109]

Mr. Milburn: Advice on healthy living and disease prevention is integral to the activity of general practitioners and primary health care teams. Most consultations in primary care will include an element of opportunistic health promotion. A patient is entitled to a health check on registering with a doctor or after three years without a consultation and patients over 75 years are entitled to an annual health check. The health of children is promoted through the immunisation and child health surveillance programmes. Most practices engage in chronic disease management programmes in asthma and diabetes, in the national cervical cytology screening programme and in structured health promotion activity under arrangements introduced in October 1996.

The initial cash-limited and non-cash limited total general medical services allocation for 1997–98 is £2,980 million. This figure will however be reviewed shortly at spring supply and will be subject to change.

Meningitis

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to combat recent outbreaks of meningitis. [19012]

Ms Jowell: The Department takes meningococcal disease very seriously.

Guidance on the control of meningococcal infection is issued by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS). The most recent guidelines were issued on 8 December 1995 and guidance on the management of clusters of meningococcal disease was issued in January 1997. Copies of this guidance are sent to all Directors of Public Health and local Consultants in Communicable Disease Control and it is published. The guidance is constantly under review and careful thought is given to whether any lessons can be learnt from any incident and to whether any revision of the guidance might be required. The guidance was last reviewed on 21 November 1997 drawing on recent experiences in Southampton and it was agreed that no change to the guidance was necessary.

PHLS experts are routinely involved in dealing with serious outbreaks of disease. Advice on the diagnosis of meningitis is contained in the Department's memorandum "Immunisation against infectious disease" which is provided free to all doctors. Additionally, the Chief Medical Officer (CMO) writes annually to all doctors alerting them to the expected winter rise in cases of meningococcal infection and reminding them of the value of early antibiotic treatment and urgent referral to hospital. The Department contributes to the many information articles in newspapers and the medical press, and television and radio programmes that appear during the winter increase in cases.

The CMO also holds an annual press briefing for journalists to raise public, professional and media awareness of meningococcal disease. This year's briefing was held on 3 November and CMO was supported by representatives of the National Meningitis Trust and the Meningitis Research Foundation. The vital message at the briefing was that, in the absence of an effective meningococcal Group C vaccine suitable for routine use, and with no Group B vaccine at all, it remained essential that parents and, in places of further education, students, are aware of the signs and symptoms of meningitis and septicaemia and remain alert to seek urgent treatment if illness is suspected. Information materials continue to stress this message as well. This year, the Department's information leaflet "Knowing about meningitis and septicaemia" has been rewritten; it is available to the public from general practitioners' surgeries. The Health Education Authority (HEA), funded by the Department, has also relaunched its leaflet, "Look out for your mate", which is targeted at students. This year about 1.2 million "Look out for your mate" fliers and posters were distributed to over 750 colleges in England and Wales; 4,000 leaflets and 40 posters were sent to Southampton University before the recent outbreaks there. Information on recognising the signs and symptoms of meningitis is provided to new parents in the HEA's booklet "A Guide to Childhood immunisations". The Department also provides funding under Section 64 of the Health and Personal Social Services Act to support the work of the two meningitis charities in raising awareness among health care professionals.

Studies to evaluate meningococcal and pneumococcal vaccines in United Kingdom children, funded by the Department at a total cost of over £1 million, are being carried out by the PHLS in collaboration with the National Institute for Biological Standards and Controls, the Centre of Applied Microbiology and Research and the Institute for Child Health. These studies have shown very encouraging results already for Group C vaccines and early indicators for Group B are encouraging. There are reasonable prospects that these vaccines will eventually be able to induce long-term immunity although more research is needed before their suitability for widespread use can be considered.

Hospital Complaints Procedures

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the effectiveness of hospital complaints procedures in order to establish a code of best practice. [19453]

Mr. Boateng: We will be commissioning an independent evaluation of the National Health Service complaints procedures during 1998. It is intended that one of the areas on which the evaluation focuses should be the identification of good practice.

Health Council

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Health Council on 4 December. [20003]

Ms Jowell: Following discussion, the Council reached a common position on a proposed Directive on tobacco advertising. The Council also reached political agreement on the Commission's proposal for a programme of Community action on rare diseases. The Council discussed the public health aspects of food safety. The Council agreed the text of a resolution following up the Commission's report on the state of women's health in the European Community. The Council also agreed conclusions of the European Union-United States Task Force on communicable disease, emphasising the importance of co-ordination between the activities of the Task Force and other appropriate bodies working on disease surveillance. The Council also took note of developments since its last discussion of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies and agreed to keep the subject under review. There was a brief discussion of the Commission's proposals for programmes of Community action on injury prevention and pollution-related diseases. Finally, the Council took note of a Commission proposal for a Recommendation on the suitability of blood and plasma donors and the screening of donated blood.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19369]

Ms Jowell: The Department has 288 car parking spaces associated with its London buildings, of which 14 are specifically allocated to visitors and six are shared between Department of Health and Department of Social Security Ministers. The remainder are allocated to staff but available to visitors when not in use.

In the rest of the United Kingdom there are a further 1,504 car parking spaces associated with Department of Health buildings, of which 66 are specifically allocated to visitors, 476 to staff and the remainder are available for both staff and visitors.

Incontinence Products

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is provided in this year's allocations for NHS for the cost of VAT on incontinence products. [19717]

Mr. Milburn: Resources are not allocated to fund particular services or costs. It is for health authorities and general practitioners to use these resources to plan and arrange services for their residents, following an assessment of their needs, and to make decisions about the level of resources required for any particular service. However, the National Health Service has always been liable to Value Added Tax and NHS funding allocations take account of this.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how health authorities and trusts are notified of the amounts in their allocations which are provided to fund them to meet the costs of VAT on incontinence products. [19715]

Mr. Milburn: There is no separate allocation of funds to health authorities in respect of Value Added Tax liability.

National Health Service trusts receive most of their income through contracts with commissioners of health care services, i.e. health authorities and general practitioner fundholders. Contract prices are intended to recover all relevant costs including liability to VAT.

Drugs, Medicines and Aids (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date his Department was notified of the Treasury's intention to table the Value Added Tax (Drugs, Medicine and Aids for the Handicapped) Order 1997. [19718]

Mr. Milburn: The Department was notified of the intention to legislate on 13 August 1997.

Medical and Dental Students

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will fund the cost of the special support covering the proposed tuition fees beyond year four for English and Welsh medical and dental students studying at Scottish universities; and what estimate he has made of the costs. [19589]

Mr. Milburn: It is the Government's intention that all eligible United Kingdom medical and dental students should benefit from the special provisions announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 September. Clarification of the arrangements and costs will be the subject of discussions between the departments concerned.

SCOTLAND

Language Teaching

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many secondary schools offer the opportunity to study two languages at each level indicating the number offering (a) French, (b) German, (c) Spanish and (d) any other modern languages; and what were the figures (a) two years ago and (b) 10 years ago. [18132]

Mr. Wilson: The information requested is not available centrally in the form requested. The table shows the number of education authority secondary schools with pupils presented in more than one modern language subject at SCE Ordinary or Standard Grade and at SCE Higher Grade by the time they had left school.

	SCE Ordinary/Standard Grade			SCE Higher Grade

Student Tuition Fees

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with the CBI regarding the effect on the labour market of the introduction of tuition fees for students. [18349]

Mr. Wilson: I wrote to Mr. Lain McMillan, Director, CBI Scotland on 23 July, inviting the CBI Scotland to comment inter alia on the Government's preferred approach to future funding arrangements for higher education, which were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in Parliament on that day, Official Report, columns 949–51. I received the CBI Scotland response on 26 September.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he had with Sir Ron Dearing prior to his announcement of tuition fees for students. [18350]

Mr. Wilson: I have not met with Sir Ron Dearing. However, I met Sir Ron Garrick, Chairman of the Scottish Standing Committee of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, on two occasions prior to the Government's announcement on 23 July 1997, Official Report, columns 949–51, of its plans to reform higher education funding, and also when I addressed the COSHEP Annual Forum on 27 October.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the principals of higher education institutions in Scotland regarding the introduction of tuition fees. [18358]

Mr. Wilson: In addition to various informal discussions with individuals and representative bodies, I received a paper from the Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals responding to various aspects of the Dearing and Garrick Reports including the introduction of tuition fees. I am placing copies of the paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to Scottish local authorities to require them to provide free school transport for all children whose families are in receipt of means-tested benefits. [17206]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 1 December 1997]: No. It is entirely a matter for each authority to decide whether or not to provide free school transport, taking account of individual circumstances.

Council House Sales

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reinstate the cost floor arrangement for council house sales; and if he will make a statement. [18649]

Mr. Chisholm: The current cost floor rules relating to sales of council houses in Scotland have been in place since 1989. My right hon. Friend is considering possible changes to these rules. Any changes proposed would be subject to consultation.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of council houses sold for less than the outstanding debt in each of the past five years and the amount of remaining debt involved (a) in total and (b) in each council area. [18608]

Mr. Chisholm: Information on the selling prices and outstanding debt of individual council houses is not held centrally.

Schools

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for repeal of the legislation which allows schools to opt out of education authority control; and if he will make a statement. [18906]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 4 December 1997]: My right hon. Friend will bring forward legislation to repeal these provisions at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools have opted out of education authority control; where they are located; and if he will make a statement. [18905]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 4 December 1997]: Two—St. Mary's Episcopal Primary School, Dunblane and Dornoch Academy. Fort William Primary School's proposal for self-governing status was accepted last December but it has not been implemented.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Guinness Affair

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library the text of the legal advice taken by her Department on which she based her decision not to institute proceedings under the Companies Act 1985 against any of the individuals referred to in her Department's report on Guinness PLC. [19459]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: No. The decision by the President of the Board of Trade not to institute proceedings under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 against any of the individuals referred to in the inspectors' report into Guinness PLC was based on, and in accordance with, the legal advice she had received. That legal advice included advice from independent Counsel.

Technology Foresight Programme

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made with the technology foresight programme; and if she will make a statement. [19289]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to driving forward the Foresight programme. They have brought Foresight into the heart of Government policy on business competitiveness. Soon after the election, the President of the Board of Trade commissioned an audit to assess the level of departmental activity in support of Foresight and identify areas where more emphasis is required. The findings and recommendations were published in October. Following the audit, the Government have set up a Ministerial Foresight Group, to provide top-level co-ordination of the programme across Whitehall. Progress is also being made in increasing business participation in Foresight, the top priority for the current phase of the Programme and a key objective for the next round of Foresight which will start in 1999. Planning for this exercise is already under way. A consultative document seeking views from interested parties will be published in the Spring of next year.

As a practical demonstration of its commitment to Foresight, the Government has launched the Foresight LINK awards, which bring together business and the science base to work together on projects addressing Foresight priorities. We have also launched several new LINK programmes in response to Foresight, notably the Foresight Vehicle programme, which will develop the technologies for cleaner, leaner and safer vehicles of the future.

Coal Industry

Mr. Prior: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the future of the Coal Research and Development Programme. [19330]

Mr. Battle: My Department has undertaken a detailed review of the UK's future clean coal technology requirements in consultation with industry and universities. This review has just been completed and examined what further support the Government should provide to clean coal technology research, development and demonstration. An announcement will be made about the outcome of the review in the New Year.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Indian-based British firms she visited and how many contracts were signed during her trip to India; and if she will make a statement. [18820]

Mrs. Beckett: I attended a breakfast meeting involving some 30 members of the British Business Group in Delhi and spoke at a lunch hosted by the Confederation of Indian Industry for the local business community. I visited Rolls-Royce's premises. I was able to announce the creation of 10 Golden Jubilee Fellowships under the Indo-British Partnership and witnessed the signing of a joint venture agreement between Libra Weighing Machines Ltd., Sheffield, and Giri Brothers P Ltd. based in Chennai. The visit followed on from the successful Towards 2000 exhibition in October and re-emphasised the Government's strong commitment to the Indo-British Partnership.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers she has to require the energy utilities to provide annual figures for energy consumption by postcode area. [18993]

Mr. Battle: Under the Statistics of Trade Act 1947, the President of the Board of Trade has powers to ask for information from any undertakings on questions about matters in the schedule to the Act. This includes consumption by locations. The use of these powers to collect information must be balanced against a clear need for the data and the compliance burden placed on the companies in question.

Arms Export Licences (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which companies were awarded a licence to export machine guns to Indonesia in 1995. [14827]

Mrs. Roche: As I stated in my answer to my hon. Friend of 21 July 1997, Official Report, column 451, one such licence was granted during 1995.

Inquiries are being made as regards the release of the identity of the licensee concerned under the non-statutory Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and, since this is confidential information, the consent of the licensee is being sought for its disclosure. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library.

Genetic Testing

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if NHS trusts will have to negotiate their own licences to test with or for a patented gene; and if she will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of ensuring that genetic testing is equally available throughout the United Kingdom. [16372]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 17 November 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

It is for a patent owner to give permission for someone else to use his invention by granting a licence. The terms of this licence is a matter for the patent owner and the potential licensee. As separate legal entities, trusts, individually or as members of consortia are in a position to negotiate their own patent licences. Genetic testing is usually provided through clinical genetic services purchased by health authorities for their local population.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Eastern Arts Council

9. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the funding available to the Eastern Arts Council. [17984]

Mr. Fisher: Grant-in-aid, distributed through the Arts Council of England to the Eastern Arts Board during the financial year 1997–98 totalled £4,985,614.

Additional funding from the British Film Institute and the Crafts Council gives an overall total of £5,425,060.

Sports Sponsorship

10. Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received from sports bodies on business sponsorship; and if he will make a statement. [17985]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health and I recently met governing bodies of sports in receipt of tobacco sponsorship. We discussed how to end tobacco advertising and sponsorship while minimising any damage to the sports concerned. Agreement has now been reached on the EU Directive and as a result, all sports have five years in which to find alternative sponsors. I am also setting up a task force of sports and business interests to help them do just that.

24. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on sources of sponsorship available to United Kingdom sporting events. [18002]

Mr. Banks: The sports sponsorship market has grown to over £300 million a year. We estimate that it increased by 6 per cent. last year alone. It is flourishing. I congratulated 700 delegates at a sportsmatch sponsorship award ceremony some three weeks ago.

Public Libraries (Information Services)

11. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to develop information services in public libraries. [17986]

Mr. Fisher: New Technology presents public libraries with the opportunity to enhance their traditional services and provide information to users in new and exciting ways. We are currently considering a report from the Library and Information Commission which recommends the development of IT in public libraries. We will be responding to the report's recommendations early in the New Year.

Cricket

12. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met the President of the MCC; and what subjects were discussed. [17987]

Mr. Banks: Neither my right hon. Friend I nor have had the opportunity to date to meet the President of the MCC

Film Industry

13. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary for State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of the British film industry. [17988]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The British film industry is booming. However, we cannot be complacent about its continuing success, which is why I am co-chairing with Stewart Till of PolyGram Filmed Entertainment a comprehensive Film Policy Review. The Review Group will report early next year with an agenda for action by the industry and Government.

Tourism

15. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage financial institutions to invest in tourism projects. [17990]

Mr. Tom Clarke: A Tourism Forum working group led by Charles Allen of Granada is working on ways of helping investors to reassess the industry. In addition, the need to raise the profile for tourism opportunities in the financial sector was highlighted in the report, "Visitors Welcome", produced by the CBI's Tourism Action Group, on which my Department is represented.

16. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the work opportunities which the tourism industry can provide for the welfare-to-work programme. [17992]

Mr. Tom Clarke: At the New Deal Conference which I hosted on 24 November, I was greatly encouraged by the very positive response to the New Deal from almost 160 key industry leaders present. Further, a survey recently conducted by the British Hospitality Association suggests that 86 per cent. of the BHA membership is willing to offer placements under the programme.

22. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to boost the United Kingdom's income from tourism. [18000]

Mr. Tom Clarke: At a meeting of the new revitalised Tourism Forum on 26 November, I announced that I would be developing a strategy for tourism, for publication next summer, which will specifically address the issue of enabling further growth in tourism.

Football

17. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his Department's assistance for the bid for the soccer World Cup in 2006. [17993]

Mr. Banks: The Government are committed to attracting major sporting events to the UK, and are giving the fullest possible promotional and diplomatic support to the Football Association's bid to host the 2006 World Cup. I have written to hon. Members asking them to back the bid whenever an opportunity arises.

20. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage families to support their national soccer team at the 1998 World Cup finals. [17997]

Mr. Banks: I hope that next year's World Cup Finals will be enjoyed by all football supporters both at home, and those fortunate enough to travel to France. The Government are offering the French authorities every assistance so that those genuine supporters from this country attending this celebration of world football can have a safe and memorable time.

Media Ownership

18. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning media ownership. [17994]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received representations about the public interest test applying to mergers between local newspapers and local radio stations and about a possible EC Directive on Media Ownership in the Internal Market.

Inner-city Theatres

19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the Department's strategy in promoting inner-city theatres. [17995]

Mr. Fisher: The arts have an important part to play in the regeneration and building of local communities; this can have particular importance in inner city areas. Strategic funding decisions for theatres are made by the Arts Council of England and the regional arts boards in conjunction with local authorities and other funding partners. I know that none of them underestimate the wider benefits which the arts can bring to their audiences and communities.

Development Through Play

21. Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage children's development through play. [17998]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Playing Fields Association is currently carrying out work for the Department in the areas of information dissemination, playwork education and training and play safety. I also made it clear in the White Paper "The People's Lottery" that we are particularly committed to the development of children's play. I am currently discussing with Lottery distributors how we can best ensure that Lottery funding for it is more easily accessible.

Jazz

23. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy on the role of the Arts Council of England in developing audiences for jazz. [18001]

Mr. Fisher: All the Arts Council's funding for jazz is designed to develop and build new audiences: the Government agree that the development of audiences in all art forms is a high priority.

Athletics Training

25. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to help improve the quality of training for British athletes.[18003]

Mr. Banks: We are committed to improving the quality of training for our athletes. In particular, the United Kingdom Sports Institute will provide our athletes with the best training facilities possible and the English Sports Council's World Class Performance Programme provides Lottery support to our best athletes.

National Lottery

26. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had with the lottery distribution fund boards. [18004]

Mr. Chris Smith: I hold regular meetings with the Lottery distributors. I last met the Chairmen and the Chief Executives of the London-based Lottery distributors on 26 November. This was the fourth in a regular series of such meetings. The main topic of discussion was the Lottery Bill.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate his Department has made of the effect on the share of funding which will be received by humanitarian charities from the national lottery as a result of the introduction of a sixth good cause. [17975]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Lottery Charities Board can expect to receive £1.8 billion over the period of the current licence. This matches its original expectation when the Lottery was launched. In addition, charities can expect to benefit from projects funded under the new good cause, covering health, education and the environment.

Subtitling and Sign Language

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to ensure that the agreed levels of subtitling and sign language inserts that will apply to terrestrial television over the next 10 years will apply equally to United Kingdom providers of satellite and cable television service. [18788]

Mr. Chris Smith: Channel 3 and 5 licensees are required to meet targets set out in the Broadcasting Act 1990 for the provision of subtitling. The BBC, Channel 4 and S4C, in pursuit of their public service commitments, aim to provide a similar amount of subtitling. Digital terrestrial television programme service licensees will be required to meet the subtitling and signing targets set under the Broadcasting Act 1996.

There are no statutory subtitling or signing targets for cable and satellite broadcasters. I am nevertheless keen that cable and satellite channels should provide more subtitling and sign language services. I am therefore asking them what plans they have to make their services more accessible in the future.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of television football coverage is supplemented with live subtitling on (a) terrestrial and (b) satellite television stations. [18789]

Mr. Chris Smith: From 1 January–2 November 1997, the BBC provided live subtitling for 63.25 per cent. of its network football coverage. I understand from the Independent Television Commission that during the same period, the ITV Network subtitled all its live coverage of football matches. Neither Channel 4, Channel 5 nor, as far as the Commission are aware, any satellite television services provided any live subtitling of football coverage.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to extend to satellite television channels the obligations regarding subtitling set out in the Broadcasting Acts. [19563]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have no plans (and no current powers) to extend the statutory subtitling targets for subtitling to satellite broadcasters, but I am, nevertheless, keen that satellite channels should provide more subtitling services. I am therefore asking them what plans they have to make their services more accessible in the future to viewers with hearing difficulties.

British Library

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if the British Library (a) Board and (b) Management Committee are required to publish details of their remuneration in the annual report; [19054]

(2) what information the British Library is required to provide in its annual report in respect of income from the disposal of (a) freehold and (b) leasehold properties. [19055]

Mr. Fisher: Under arrangements agreed with the Treasury, the British Library and other Non-departmental Public Bodies may produce summary financial information in their Annual Reports, indicating that the detail is available in the Annual Accounts. The Library's Accounts, which are published after the Annual Report, disclose remuneration of members of the British Library Board, the pay bands of senior employees earning more than £40,000 and the remuneration of the Chief Executive. The Accounts also show the income from the sale of freehold and leasehold properties.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what revenue was generated by readers in the British Library in respect of (a) London and (b) Boston spa reading room, in the last five years for which figures are available. [19045]

Mr. Fisher: Reading room revenue for the last five years was as follows:

	London reading rooms	Boston Spa reading rooms	Total
1992–93	510	14	[1]—
1993–94	537	19	[1]—
1994–95	835	25	[1]—
1995–96	1,019	31	1,050
1996–97	729	34	1,007

[1] Prior to 1993–94, no distinction was made in revenue from readers and remote users.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the number of reader places for science and medical readers in the new British Library; and what previous estimates of these numbers have been presented to Parliament. [19046]

Mr. Fisher: The total number of reader desks in the Science reading rooms is 273, with a further 41 dedicated for special functions such as CD-ROMS. These are available on a general basis and not specifically designated as "science" or "medical". Previous estimates of this provision were presented to Parliament on the following occasions:

8 December 1988 (OR, WA, col 255) 238 reader seats for science and technology in the first phase of the new building.

NAO Report, October 1990: New Building for the British Library: Revised reader seat provision for Science Reference Information Services: 242.

National Heritage Committee Report, July 1994, The British Library: Reading rooms for science, technology and business: 209 desks in Phase 1A; 61 desks in Completion Phase.

NAO Report, May 1996: Progress in Completing the New British Library: Capacity of the science and oriental reading rooms . . . 351 seats [i.e. 273 science and 78 oriental desks].

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what are his proposals for 29 Exhibition Road, South Kensington, when the National Sound Archive vacates the building; [19052]

(2) what are his plans for 25 Southampton Buildings, Holborn, when the present tenants vacate these buildings. [19051]

Mr. Fisher: Subject to approval by the relevant authorities, the Library will sell the freehold of the property at 29 Exhibition Road in 1998–99. The freehold of the property at 25 Southampton Buildings will be sold after their present tenants have vacated the buildings in 1999.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the floor area of the office accommodation in the British Library St. Pancras building; and how many offices it contains. [19053]

Mr. Fisher: The total floor area of office accommodation in the St. Pancras building is 11,500 sq m. Under current plans, the number of individual offices is expected to be 40, as well as some 22 large open plan areas.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if 17 deg. C. and 50 per cent. relative humidity has been achieved in all the vault areas in the British Library. [19044]

Mr. Fisher: Tests in the vault areas have confirmed that the plant has achieved and maintained environmental conditions of 17 deg. C. (plus or minus one degree) and 50 per cent. relative humidity (plus or minus 5 per cent.) in accordance with the technical specifications laid down for the areas.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the cost of the (a) new and (b) proposed British Library buildings at Boston Spa. [19047]

Mr. Fisher: In 1995 the Library completed construction of a storage building at Boston Spa to accommodate reference material at a cost of £2.25 million. The Library is considering leasing additional office space to accommodate staff for functions relocated from London.

Ballet and Opera

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what initiatives he proposes to increase access for young people and those on low pay to ballet and opera. [17982]

Mr. Chris Smith: Access is a central theme of my Department's policies for the arts. The public has a right to expect a return for the substantial public funding which the arts receive. The Government are considering proposals for a number of initiatives to enhance access, such as an artscard scheme for young people and open theatre nights. More recently, we have asked Sir Richard Eyre to look at the future of the Royal Opera House companies and English National Opera, to see how the future of all the companies can best be secured, and how the work of each company can become more accessible to all of us—whether through more touring activity, through education work or broadcast opportunities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Upratings

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would have been the extra cost to the National Insurance Fund that would have arisen from uprating contributory invalidity benefit or incapacity benefit by the higher of average earnings or prices in each year since 1980–81; [15452]

(2) what the basic rate of invalidity benefit or incapacity benefit would have been in each year since 1980–81 if it had been uprated by the higher of average earnings or prices; and what was the actual rate for each of these years. [15453]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

Year	Actual rate of basic invalidity benefit (incapacity benefit from April 1995) (£s per week)	Rate if uprated by the higher of earnings of prices	Estimated additional annual costs £s million
1980–81	26.00	26.45	5
1981–82	28.35	29.60	40
1982–83	31.45	32.10	60
1983–84	32.60	34.90	75
1984–85	34.25	36.70	160
1985–86	38.30	41.60	190
1986–87	38.70	43.45	325

Notes:

1. In April 1995 invalidity benefit was replaced by incapacity benefit. The amounts shown are those for the long term rate of incapacity benefit.
2. Uprating indices used are the Retail Prices Index (all items) and the Average Earnings Index (whole economy) as supplied by the Office of National Statistics.
3. The uprated figures have been rounded to the nearest five pence.
4. Estimates of additional costs are:
   (i) rounded to the nearest £5 million,
   (ii) cover invalidity pension-basic incapacity benefit and adult dependency additions and invalidity allowance only (IVA was replaced by age additions in April 1995),
   (iii) converted to 1997–98 prices using the GDP deflator and take account of offsetting costs in the income related benefits using family expenditure survey data.

Website for Women

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the new Website for Women and how many visits have been made since the site went on-line. [17272]

Ms Ruddock: The new website of the Ministers for Women was set up at a total cost of £2,450 (£2,200 staff time, plus £250 for registration of the domain and IP address http://www.womens-unit.gov.uk).

The number of unique hosts accessing the site in the weeks since the site has been on-line are as follows:

Weeks-ending	Number
8 November	508
15 November	332
22 November	175

Child Support

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents without care and control have been assessed by the CSA as having arrears in excess of £15,000. [16917]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients throughout the child support assessment process. We are looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements from the Agency, in particular on getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlog and improving customer service.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 5 December 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of parents without care (normally known as absent parents) that have maintenance outstanding in excess of £15,000.

The number of maintenance assessments completed and recorded on the Child Support Computer System currently stands at approximately 679,000; at 19 November 1997, the total number of cases with more than £15,000 of maintenance arrears outstanding was 18,890.

In 90% of these cases (16,912), the arrears recorded as outstanding are the result of a Category A interim maintenance assessment. This measure, which sets maintenance at a punitive rate for absent parents who fail to co-operate, is imposed until the Agency is provided with the information needed to complete a full maintenance assessment. The Agency issued many interim maintenance assessments in its first two years—73,303 in 93/94. The emphasis now is to encourage absent parents to co-operate early and therefore avoid building up excessive maintenance arrears; the number of interim maintenance assessments has now greatly reduced to 11,718 in 1996/97.

From April 1995 regulations were changed, so that the liability under an interim maintenance assessment reverts to the level of the full maintenance assessment once the absent parent co-operates; once sufficient information is provided to complete a full maintenance assessment in the interim maintenance cases the amount of arrears actually owed will be considerably reduced.

I hope this is helpful.

Weather Stations

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to her answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 79, if she will indicate the location of the two new weather stations; and if she will make a statement. [17528]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the member for Streatham (Mr. Hill) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 855–56.

The Government are determined that pensioners will stay warm in their homes this winter. In his pre-budget report on 25 November, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced additional help for pensioners, to help with winter fuel bills for this winter and next.

A payment of £50 will be made to pensioners receiving Income Support and £20 to other pensioners. This is in addition to any Cold Weather Payments they may also receive.

Housing Benefit (Young People)

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects the review of the operation of the changes in eligibility for housing benefit for under-25s to be completed. [17315]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We want to build up a national picture of the effects of this change. In order to enable us to do that, we are gathering evidence from a variety of sources and, in addition, we have commissioned research jointly with Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to ascertain the effects of this change on Housing Benefit and the private rented sector. We will consider fully all the available evidence which will be coming on stream over the next few months. We will then decide on the way forward.

Lone Parents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents in the London, south-east and eastern regions, receive the lone parent element of (a) income support (b) child benefit. [19359]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Income Support and Child Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 5 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many parents in the London, south-east and eastern regions, receive the lone parent element of (a) Income Support (IS) and (b) Child Benefit (CHB).

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA District Offices. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or specific geographical areas.

From April this year, the lone parent premium was replaced by a higher rate of family premium for lone parents. Information relating to parents in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium is shown in the attached Annex.

Information relating to parents in receipt of the lone parent element of CHB could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex: Income support customers in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium as at 31 August 1997

	Number of lone parent rate of family premium recipients
Benefits Agency Area Directorates
AD1—East London and Anglia[1]	108,666
AD2—Chilterns[2]	104,289
SD3—London South[3]	147,945
London[4]	193,948

The BA collates statistics by Distric Offices. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or this specific geographical area. The 125 Districts are grouped together into 13 Area Directorates.

[1] Includes the BA Districts of Barking and Havering, Cambridgeshire, City East, Essex South East, Essex South West, Hackney and Islington, Lea Roding, Leaside, Newham, North Essex, Norwich and Suffolk.

[2] Includes the BA Districts of Barnet, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Ealing, Euston, Harrow and Hillingdon, Neasden, North and East Hertfordshire, Northamptonshire, Oxfordshire, Thames Valley and West Hertfordshire.

[3] Includes the BA Districts of Bankside, East Kent, East Sussex, Hampshire North, London Central, North and West Kent, Palace, Solent and New Forest, South Circular, Central Sussex, South East Hampshire and Isle of Wight, South West Thames, Surrey Unit, Thameside and West Sussex.

[4] Includes the BA Districts of City East, Hackney and Islington, Lea Roding, Leaside, Newham, Barnet, Ealing, Euston, Neasden, Harrow and Hillingdon, Bankside, London Central, Surrey Unit, Palace, South Circular, South West Thames, Thameside and North and West Kent.

The information has been provided by the BA's Central Data Unit, it is provisional and maybe subject to change. The figures provided relate to the number of income support customers in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium as at 31 August 1997. It does not include those lone parents customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who would qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability premium.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19370]

Mr. Field: The breakdown of car park spaces provided for Ministers, employees and visitors is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Department of Social Security Ministers are accommodated in Richmond House. Facilities in this building, including car parking, are provided by the Department of Health as the major civil service occupier.

The numbers of car park spaces provided within the Department of Social Security for all users are as follows:

	Number
In London	293
In the United Kingdom	10,945

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the costs and media of advertising campaigns designed (a) to combat benefit fraud and (b) to encourage benefit take-up for the year 1996–97. [19237]

Mr. Field: The costs of advertising combat benefit fraud and to encourage benefit take-up for the year 1996–97 were £3.776 million and £3.991 million respectively.

Media used for advertising are as follows:

Media	Fraud	Take-up
National press	Yes	No
Local and regional press	Yes	Yes
Direct mail	Yes	Yes
Specialist press	No	Yes
Radio	Yes	Yes
Posters	Yes	Yes
Promotional events	No	Yes

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the value of unclaimed benefits for the year 1996–97 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland. [19234]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Estimates for 1996–97 are not yet available. The total amount of unclaimed income-related benefits in Great Britain in 1995–96 is estimated as between £2.3 billion and £3.5 billion. The total amount of unclaimed benefit in Scotland in 1995–96 is estimated as between £200 million and £300 million.

Estimates relating to Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Family Resources Survey.

Notes:

1. Estimates relate to the four main income related benefits: Income Support, Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit and Family Credit only. All take-up estimates exclude the self-employed as their entitlement to income-related benefits cannot readily be established from survey data.

2. Estimates for 1996–97 are not yet available.

3. The estimate for Scotland should be regarded as indicative only, as it is based on modest sample sizes.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

28. Mr. Prior: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what estimate he has made of the entrance fee for the millennium experience. [18006]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is actively considering a range of entrance fees and ticketing arrangements, with a view to ensuring that as many people as possible have the opportunity to visit the Experience at Greenwich.

29. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what steps are being taken to promote the Millennium Experience to visitors from overseas. [18007]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is in detailed discussions with the domestic and overseas travel trade and journals. Initial promotion began at the World Travel Market in London last month. Detailed promotion will begin in Spring 1998, including a feature stand at the British Travel Trade fair in March.

The Millennium Experience will be featured in all relevant travel guides and programmes as a focal event in 2000. The NMEC will participate with British Incoming Tour Operators Association and other appropriate trade groups. The Millennium Experience will feature prominently in the British Tourist Authority's and the London Tourist Board's promotional and liaison programmes. The NMEC's ticketing strategy will recognise the importance of the travel trade to the Millennium Experience.

31. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is his policy on encouraging private sector contributions to the cost of the Millennium Experience. [18009]

Mr. Mandelson: My policy is, with the New Millennium Experience Company, to give every possible encouragement to the private sector to contribute to the cost of the Millennium Experience.

30. Ms Ward: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he proposes to publish the names of the successful contractors, and their plans, for the exhibitions within the millennium dome. [18008]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) announced on 2 December that they had concluded contracts with the first 10 designers for the large-scale exhibition structures within the Millennium-Experience. They are Bentheim, Eva Jiricna Architects, HP:ICM LTD., Jasper Jacob Associates, Land Design Studio Ltd., Media Projects International, MUF Architects, Park Avenue, Spectrum, and Work. In association with the NMEC, sponsors and specialist advisers, these designers are now developing further the concepts for the Experience attractions. I have placed a copy of the NMEC'S press release in the Library of the House. Since that announcement the company has concluded a contract with Zaha M. Hadid.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what will be the contents of the Millennium Dome. [18984]

Mr. Mandelson: [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) announced on 2 December that it had concluded contracts with the first 10 designers for the large-scale exhibition structures within the Millennium Experience. In association with the NMEC, sponsors and specialist advisers, these designers are now developing further the concepts for the Experience attractions. I have placed a copy of the NMEC's press release in the Libraries of the House. Plans for a spectacular central experience that will be shared by all who visit the Dome are also well under way.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997, [15226]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Expenditure on hospitality by Ministers and officials is shown in the table.

	MAFF
1980–81	n/a
1987–88	30,291
1990–91	54,420
1991–92	64,852
1992–93	72,986
1993–94	79,758
1994–95	64,092
1995–96	59,646
1996–97	70,104
1997–98 (May–September)	39,143

n/a = not available.

These figures do not include the expenditure by the Department's Agencies nor its non-departmental public bodies. Agencies will respond independently. The Department does not hold information about its NDPBs, and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on official hospitality within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA).

FRCA is a new agency which came into being on 1 April 1997, and cannot, therefore show expenditure for financial years prior to 1997/98.

For the period 1 May 1997 to 30 September 1997 expenditure on official hospitality was £5,805. This figure includes costs of refreshments for meetings, which are not separately identifiable from hospitality.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning the level of expenditure on official hospitality for various periods has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

The MHS was established as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 1 April 1995. It therefore does not have any information on expenditure on official hospitality prior to 1995.

I can advise you that the MHS spent the following sums, on an accruals basis on hospitality during the respective financial years:

Year	Expenditure (£)
1995–96	5,750
1996–97	13,011
1 April 1997–30 September 1997	4,697

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on official hospitality by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1st May to 30th September 1997, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

The Directorate was established as a Next Steps Agency on 2 April 1990 and did not maintain its own accounts until 1991/92. Since that date expenditure on official hospitality is as follows:

1991–92	1,239
1993–94	1,035
1994–95	1,817
1995–96	123
1996–97	186
1 May 1997–30 September 1997	Nil

The figures shown for the years up to 1994–95 included the cost of lunches for industry liaison meetings and advisory groups which is now accounted for separately.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

In response to your Parliamentary Question on official hospitality, I have been asked to provide you with the relevant figures covering the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science (CEFAS). These are as follows:

1980–81	n/a
1987–88	n/a
1990–91	1,000
1991–92	645
1992–93	213
1993–94	1,645
1994–95	1,491
1995–96	1,292
1996–97	1,614
1997–98 April–September	1,026

n/a = not available.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning expenditure incurred by PSD on official hospitality.

The Directorate was launched as an Executive Agency on 1 April 1993. Figures prior to this date are not available. Expenditure from this date is set out below:

Year	£
1993–94	380
1994–95	422
1995–96	1,269
1996–97	1,609
1997–98 (May to September)	964

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning expenditure on official hospitality

Expenditure prior to 1992, when CSL was first launched as an Agency, is included in Departmental Figures. The Agency was significantly enlarged and relaunched in 1994 and collocated to a new side between 1996 and the summer of 1997.

1992–93	4.2
1993–94	4.7
1994–95	12.5
1995–96	23.6
1996–97	9.4
1997–98 (May –September)	4.0

Expenditure on hospitality in 1995–96 includes the cost for the Visiting Group to CSL's Agriculture and Environment Directorate. The purpose of Visiting Group was to assess the quality and management of the science delivered by Directorate.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on expenditure by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) on official hospitality.

The VLA was launched as an Agency on 1 October 1995 as a result of the merger between the Central Veterinary Laboratory, already an Agency since April 1990, and the Veterinary Investigation Service, which was formerly part of the State Veterinary Service.

Figures for expenditure on hospitality are as follows:

1993–94	16,720
1994–95	12,076
1995–96	18,900
1996–97	27,152
May–September 1997	14,392

Figures prior to 1993–94 are included in MAFF figures.
Figures from 1996–97 include the Veterinary Investigation Service following the merge in 1995.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15228]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The costs of each overseas trip undertaken by myself or by members of my Ministerial team, including the costs of accompanying officials, since 2 May are as follows:

Expenditure for air fares is not separately identifiable.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning expenditure on overseas travel.

The Directorate was launched as an Executive Agency on 1 April 1993. Figures prior to this date are not available. Expenditure by PSD on all forms of overseas travel since this date are set out below:

	Actual expenditure
1993–94	97,668
1994–95	74,980
1995–96	107,914
1996–97	80,819
1997–98 (May to September)	34,128

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

In response to your Parliamentary Question on overseas travel, I have been asked to provide you with the relevant figures covering the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science (CEFAS). These are as follows.

1980–81	n/a
1987–88	n/a
1990–91	98,173
1991–92	122,525
1992–93	126,244
1993–94	98,554
1994–95	130,259
1995–96	154,883
1996–97	162,125
1997–98 April–September	4,672

n/a = not available.

Unfortunately it is not possible to separate the air fare costs.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning the level of expenditure on overseas travel for various periods has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

The MHS was established as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 1 April 1995. It therefore does not have any information on expenditure on overseas travel prior to 1995.

I can advise you that the MHS spent the following sums, on an accruals basis, on the overseas travel during the respective financial years:

Year	Expenditure
1995–96	Nil
1996–97	Nil
1997–98 (to date)	£878 (£245 air travel)

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on overseas travel within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA).

FRCA is a new agency which came into being on 1 April 1997, and cannot, therefore show expenditure for financial years prior to 1997–98.

For the period 1 May 1997 to 30 September 1997 expenditure on overseas travel was £485.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on expenditure by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) on overseas travel.

The VLA was launched as an Agency on 1 October 1995 as a result of the merger between the Central Veterinary Laboratory, already an Agency since April 1990, and the Veterinary Investigation Service, which was formerly part of the State Veterinary Service.

Figures for expenditure on overseas travel are as follows:

1993–94	61,700
1994–95	66,200
1995–96	63,900
1996–97	111,900
May–September 1997	74,300

Figures prior to 1993–94 are included in MAFF figures. Figures from 1996–97 include the Veterinary Investigation Service following the merger in 1995. It is not possible to break down expenditure into air fares and expenditure relating to overseas travel.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15229]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Expenditure on publicity and advertising by Ministers and officials is shown in the table:

	MAFF
1980–81	—
1987–88	—
1990–91	—
1991–92	—
1992–93	—
1993–94	4,649,589
1994–95	4,961,303
1995–96	5,324,791
1996–97	5,138,192
1997–98 (year to date)	1,948,160

These figures do not include the expenditure by the Department's Agencies nor its non departmental public bodies. Agencies will respond independently. The Department does not hold this information about its NDPBs, and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on expenditure by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) on publicity and advertising.

The VLA was launched as an Agency on 1 October 1995 as a result of the merger between the Central Veterinary Laboratory, already an Agency since April 1990, and the Veterinary Investigation Service, which was formerly part of the State Veterinary Service.

Figures for expenditure on publicity and advertising are as follows:

	Publicity[1] £	Advertising[2] £
1993–94	68,500	7,656
1994–95	47,000	13,429
1995–96	42,000	15,787
1996–97	52,800	42,000
April—October 1997	47,400	52,653
1997–98 estimate	61,200	70,000
1998–99 planned	62,000	40,000

[1] This includes annual reviews, marketing brochures, customer newsletters and leaflets.
[2] The majority of advertising is for staff recruitment in newspapers and specialist journals.

The figures from 1996–97 include the Veterinary Investigation Service following the merger.

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on publicity and advertising within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA).

FRCA is a new agency which came into being on 1 April 1997, and cannot, therefore show expenditure for financial years prior to 1997–98.

For the period 1 May 1997 to 30 September 1997 expenditure on publicity and advertising was £19,291, which includes £10,842 spent on advertising staff vacancies.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning the level of expenditure on publicity and advertising for various periods has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

The MHS was established as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 1 April 1995. It therefore does not have any information on expenditure on this item prior to 1995.

The MHS spent the following sums, on an accruals basis, on the requested items during the respective financial years:

Year	Expenditure (£)
1995–96	1,000
1996–97	34,000
1997–98 (forecast)	49,000
1998–99 (estimate)	49,000

The expenditure on publicity and advertising predominantly covers expenditure on the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts. It excludes recruitment advertising.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98 year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

Expenditure on publicity and advertising is as follows:

1993–94	80,106
1994–95	52,129
1995–96	48,723
1996–97	63,917
1 April to 31 October 1997	43,614
1997–98 forecast	65,000
1998–99 forecast	65,000

The above figures cover the announcement of the grant and expiry of marketing authorisations in the official gazettes, direct recruitment advertising, the VMD's Annual Report and Accounts, publicity relating to the safe use of organophosphorus sheep dips and expenditure on the VMD's quarterly newsletter MAVIS. This newsletter is circulated to the veterinary profession, the veterinary medicinal products industry, representative bodies and opinion formers.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

In response to your Parliamentary Question on publicity and advertising, I have been asked to provide you with the relevant figures covering the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science (CEFAS). For clarity, the figures are shown in separate categories: staff advertising/recruit-ment, and publicity/marketing.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question regarding expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising.

The Directorate was launched as an Executive Agency on 1 April 1993. Figures prior to this date are not available. Direct expenditure by PSD on all forms of publicity and advertising from this date is set out below. PSD makes use of MAFF advertising and publicity where appropriate and the costs are borne directly by MAFF on PSD's behalf.

Year	£
1993–94	15,471
1994–95	4,400

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 December 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising.

CSL was first launched as an Agency in 1992. The Agency was significantly enlarged and relaunched in 1994.

Year	£000
1993–94	16.4
1994–95	41.1
1995–96	26.5

Agenda 2000

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the impact in the United Kingdom of Agenda 2000 on each of the agricultural sectors where proposals have been made. [19549]

Dr. John Cunningham: Formal legislative proposals to implement the ideas outlines in Agenda 2000 are not expected to be published by the European Commission until the first part of 1998.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to the Sixth Report of the Select Committee on European Legislation's considerations of Agenda 2000 (HC 155-vi), if he will list the environmental and rural development measures referred to in paragraph 2.5; which Commission rural policy and targeted agri-environmental measures referred to in paragraph 2.6 he supports and for what reasons; if he will set out the basis for his calculation of the savings to consumers in paragraph 2.7; and which member states had the difficulties with the proposed level of the cuts in support prices for cereals and milk referred to in paragraph 2.8; and for what reasons. [19594]

Dr. John Cunningham: No. I will formulate my detailed response to the Commission's legislative proposals giving effect to Agenda 2000 when they are tabled next year.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of its EU budget he estimates would be spent on agriculture if the current Agenda 2000 proposals were adopted in full. [19545]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Commission estimate that the agricultural guideline would stand at 50 billion ecu in 2006 (at 1997 prices), out of total budgetary commitments of 114.5 billion ecu. The Commission envisages that actual spending on agriculture would be less than the guidelines, at 46 billion ecu (at 1997 prices). This estimate includes expenditure in new Member States and on pre-accession aid for countries which have yet to join the EU.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the United Kingdom will press the Council to review the level of its agriculture guidelines as part of the Agenda 2000 negotiations. [19541]

Dr. John Cunningham: Decisions on the level of the agricultural guideline are for ECOFIN, not the Agriculture Council. The Commission has proposed keeping the method of calculating the guideline unchanged and reviewing this in about 2005. The UK will be pressing for agricultural spending to be set well below the guideline, which should be a ceiling, not a target, as I made clear at the November Agriculture Council.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the way in which Agenda 2000 will affect the prospects for the production of bio-mass for energy usage. [19544]

Dr. John Cunningham: It is not yet clear what effect Agenda 2000 will have on the prospects for the production of biomass for energy usage. While the Commission's paper recognises that renewable energy crops represent a new opportunity for agriculture, forestry and rural job creation, it also proposes to suspend obligatory set-aside and reduce the aid for voluntary set-aside, measures which currently support these crops.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which proposals in Agenda 2000 will help (a) improve the environment, (b) encourage reduced usage of agro-chemicals, (c) protect wildlife, (d) increase organic production, (e) prepare the community for enlargement, (f) assist the community to negotiate successfully in the next World Trade Organisation round, (g) enable the Community's expenditure on agriculture to stay within its guidelines, (h) allow efficient British farmers to prosper, (i) require environmental objectives to be achieved before CAP payments are made or received, (j) set environmental objectives for the CAP, (k) encourage the production of non-food crops, (l) affect forestry, (m) help the beef sector and (n) affect hill farmers. [19546]

Dr. John Cunningham: In the Government's view, the Agenda 2000 proposals are a step in the right direction towards a market-oriented CAP with less production-related support and more emphasis on agri-environmental and rural development objectives. A CAP which is radically reformed along these lines, as favoured by the Government, should be beneficial in most of the areas identified by the right hon. Member.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the required increase in productivity in each sector affected by the Agenda 2000 proposals to trigger a reduction in levels of direct payments; and what recommendations the United Kingdom Government will make on this matter to the Council. [19539]

Dr. John Cunningham: None. In the Government's view, direct payments should be time-limited and degressive, giving producers time to adjust their businesses to a market-oriented system which does not rely on production-related subsidies.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Agenda 2000 is to be fully implemented before further Community enlargement takes place. [19540]

Dr. John Cunningham: Reform of the Common Agricultural Policy is essential to enable the EU to meet its future challenges, including early successful enlargement. I will use our Presidency to launch negotiations in the Agriculture Council as soon as the Commission's legislative reform proposals appear.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons peas and beans will receive supplementary aid under the Commission's proposals for Agenda 2000. [19550]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Commission has explained the purpose of its proposal as being to maintain the competitiveness of protein crops with cereals and to encourage their production.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the environmental impact studies of Agenda 2000 carried out by his Ministry or any of its specialised advisory groups. [19542]

Dr. John Cunningham: My Department is in the process of commissioning one project from the Centre for Agricultural Strategy at Reading to assess the implications of Agenda 2000 for land use in England and Wales, using the Land Use Allocation Model, and another desk top study to identify the likely consequences for the environment if the Agenda 2000 reforms are implemented. It is normal practice to allow researchers to publish the results of their work.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of Agenda 2000 on the countryside stewardship scheme; and if he will make a statement. [19538]

Dr. John Cunningham: In the absence of detailed legislative proposals, the impact of Agenda 2000 on the Countryside Stewardship Scheme cannot be assessed.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the removal of crop specific payments for oilseeds proposed under Agenda 2000 will end the requirements for a maximum area for these crops; [19547]

(2) what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the Agenda 2000 proposals for non-specific payments in respect of oilseed crops with existing World Trade Organisation rules. [19548]

Dr. John Cunningham: The compatibility with WTO rules of any trade arrangement can only be definitively determined under WTO dispute settlement procedures. The Commission's preliminary view, which we share, is that the introduction of a non-crop specific aid for oilseeds would relieve the EU from the restrictions on the maximum area of oilseeds laid down in the 1992 Blair House Agreement between the EU and the USA.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the financial effects which Agenda 2000 will have on the United Kingdom beef sector; and if he will make a statement. [19543]

Dr. John Cunningham: The effects of the Commission's proposals for the reform of the beef regime will depend upon the extent to which the proposed cut in support prices is reflected in market prices.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what rate and over what time scale under the terms of Agenda 2000 the Government propose that direct payments should be decoupled from production and reduced. [19537]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Commission has not yet tabled legislative proposals to implement the ideas set out in the Agenda 2000 series of papers. The Government will respond appropriately to those proposals when we receive them.

Food Safety

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 640, on food safety, what factors in respect of the management of risk his research programme is examining; what are the programme's findings to date on the public perceptions of food safety risk; which other relevant opinion surveys he has assessed; and what were their results. [19595]

Dr. John Cunningham: My Department's risk management research programme, which has been running for five years, covers all aspects of risk management including perceptions of risk, the way that risk messages are received by the public, risk communication and methods by which consumer views on food safety might be best taken into account in decision making. Other relevant opinion surveys are published by others, such as, for example, the Consumers Association, as a result of research into a variety of food-related issues.

Scientific Research (Corporation Tax)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the Board of Trade's proposed changes to the guidelines on granting exemptions from corporation tax to scientific research associations. [19551]

Dr. John Cunningham: The proposed changes to the guidelines would have a significant impact on a number of bodies under my Department's sponsorship and, following representations from several of these, both my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary and I, have raised the matter with colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry.

Support Schemes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Community funded agricultural support schemes he estimates will underspend their budgeted amounts in 1997–98; and by how much. [19552]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 November 1997, Official Report, column 356.

Hill Farming

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those elements of his hill farming policy which are compatible with Article 33 of the treaty establishing the European Community. [19536]

Dr. John Cunningham: Hill farmers receive specific financial help via the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances scheme. This has been approved under the terms of the EC farm structures Regulation 950//97, and is therefore compatible with Article 33 (ex 39) of the Treaty.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons he decided to consult publicly on the banning of unpasteurised milk following his receipt of the scientific advice from the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food. [19585]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 357.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Travel Expenses

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Council if she will estimate the cost of travel incurred by hon. Members returning to Westminster for one day. [19226]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: It is not possible to provide a realistic estimate of the travel cost of one day's travel to and from Westminster.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Education and Conduct Report

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct intends to publish its sixth annual report. [20115]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct has today published its sixth annual report, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Information Services

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the President of the Council what was the aggregate amount spent by her Department and its agencies during 1996–97 on (a) advertising, (b) public relations, (c) promotions, (d) public information campaigns, (e) press and information services and (f) market research and opinion polls. [19163]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: In 1996–97, a total of £49,919 was spent by my Department on press and information services.

SCOTLAND

NHS White Paper

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish his White Paper on the future of the NHS in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [20239]

Mr. Dewar: Our White Paper on the future of the NHS in Scotland, "Designed to Care", is published today. Copies have been laid before the House. Copies are available in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

Our objective is a modernised patient-centred health service designed to ensure that wherever patients make use of the services of the NHS they receive the highest quality care. We will create a seamless service which gives patients continuity of care from GP through hospital to rehabilitation. And we will harness new technologies to improve reliability and effectiveness of patient care.

The White Paper sets out clearly the system which will replace the internal market in health care. The cost of the internal market has been fragmentation, bureaucracy and the beginning of a two-tier service. Our proposals will save £100 million over the lifetime of this Parliament, money which will be reinvested in patient care. "Designed to Care" honours our commitment to retain the central role for primary care whilst removing the disadvantages of GP fundholding. We will do this by giving strong organisational support to primary care through the creation of Primary Care Trusts, which will allow professionals to take the lead in combining locally to organise health services for the benefit of all patients in their area. We have retained distinct roles for those responsible for strategy and those responsible for service delivery to promote devolved decision-making.

"Designed to Care" re-focuses NHS Trusts on improving services to patients and gives clinicians and those who use their services a bigger say in their management. We are committed to fewer NHS Trusts, and the White Paper sets out the criteria to guide this process to a speedy conclusion.

"Designed to Care" sets out our vision for the future of the NHS in Scotland, with solutions suited to Scottish needs. It lays the foundation for the work of the Scottish Parliament in continuing to improve the health of the people of Scotland.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Mixed Oxide Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions have taken place in the European Environment Council on the environmental implications of the transportation of mixed oxide fuel from the European Union to Japan; and if he will ensure that a full report is prepared on this subject during the period of the United Kingdom presidency. [18493]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are unaware of any such discussions. However, the fourth report of the Standing Working Group on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material of DG XVII has recently been submitted to the Commission and will be submitted to the Council of Ministers, the European Parliament, the Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of Regions. We have no plans to issue any further report on this matter.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans are in place to deal with accidents involving

(a) aircraft and (b) ships whilst transporting mixed oxide fuel from the United Kingdom to (i) mainland Europe and (ii) Japan. [18476]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Transporters of radioactive material within the United Kingdom are required, by statutory safety regulation, to have contingency plans in place to respond to accidents. The UK transporters of mixed oxide fuel have such plans in place for air and sea modes.

Rail Operators

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been awarded in bonuses for (a) meeting and (b) exceeding service standards to rail operators in the last 12 months. [19340]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director operates financial incentive regimes under franchise agreements which supplement the pressure of market forces where necessary; intercity train operating companies are not covered by such regimes. The regimes reward or penalise operators according to performance compared with historical benchmarks. Details of these appear in the Franchising Director's quarterly bulletins and in his Annual Report which are in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the district, county and unitary councils that have not been permitted to spend above their 1990–91 capping level for each of the years from 1990–91 to 1998–99. [19476]

Mr. Raynsford: Capping levels were only set for 21 authorities in 1990–91. Of these, the following have had provisional caps at or below the level of their 1990–91 cap in the years shown:

Barnsley, 1992–93;

Basildon, 1991–92 to 1998–99;

Bristol, 1991–92 to 1995–96;

Derbyshire, 1991–92, 1993–94[1], 1997–98[2].

[1] The cap limit was lower in 1993–94 as a result of the adjustment for the transfer of Further Education out of the local authority sector.

[2] The cap limit was lower in 1997–98 as a result of the transfer of functions to the new unitary authority of Derby City Council.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what have been the total community charge and council tax receipts in each year since 1991–92. [19929]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Community charge	6,590	7,300	584	278	167	103
Council tax	n/a	n/a	6,807	7,549	8,149	8,717

These figures are the amounts received in each financial year.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the level of spending by English local authorities in each year since 1991–92; and if he will indicate the annual percentage change in real terms. [19821]

Mr. Raynsford: The information is given below. There has been a number of changes in local authority responsibilities in the period covered. In particular; in April 1993 responsibility for further education was transferred to the Further Education Funding Council; from 1994–95 onwards, Care in the Community responsibilities were transferred to local authorities; in 1997–98 budgeted expenditure decreased by some £500 million as the result of the introduction of the nursery voucher scheme.

For these reasons it is not always valid to make comparisons between years.

Net revenue expenditure—English authorities

Year	Cash[1] (£ million)	Percentage change (Real terms)[2]
1991–92	38,454	3.8
1992–93	40,801	1.8
1993–94	39,742	–5.3
1994–95	41,677	3.3
1995–96	43,087	0.6
1996–97[3]	45,828	3.5
1997–98[4]	46,486	–1.2

[1] Net revenue expenditure is net of all specific grants except, for years since 1995–96, police specific grants. Hence, for consistency, the figures for the years prior to 1995–96 have been adjusted to include the principal police specific grant.

[2] The percentage change in expenditure in real terms has been calculated by using the GDP deflator.

Road Users (Disabled People)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his Answer of 26 November 1997, Official Report, column 554, if he will ensure that orange badges for disabled motorbike riders are produced in a form which will fit into their normal vehicle tax disc holder. [19452]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Orange Badges should be displayed by motorcyclists only when they are in use in connection with parking. Any secure holder may be used to display the badge as long as the details on the front of the badge are visible.

British Airways

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations (a) his Department and (b) authorities responsible for air traffic control and safety have received about problems in identifying in the air British Airways aircraft following the new decorations on their tailplanes. [19916]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None.

Aviation Fuel

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has undertaken into the environmental damage arising from burning of aviation fuel (a) at ground level and (b) in the upper atmosphere. [19742]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We continue to support research on the nature and effects of local and global emissions from aircraft engines. Many of these projects are major international collaborative efforts. The Department has a leading role in the International Civil Aviation Organisation's environmental committee, which includes an emissions group. It also supports participation by UK experts in major science and technology assessments, for example the European inventory of aircraft NOx emissions and the current assessment by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) of aviation and the environment.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the future role and responsibilities of the Rural Development Commission and if he will make a statement. [19749]

Mr. Caborn: We are considering this as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. We expect to reach conclusions in the New Year.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he last met the Chairman of the Rural Development Commission to discuss the future of the Rural Development Commission; [19782]

(2) pursuant to his oral statement of 3 December 1997, Official Report, columns 357-59, when he received a request from the Chairman of the Rural Development Commission for a meeting to discuss the future of the Commission. [19819]

Mr. Caborn: Ministers in the Department of the Environment, Transport and Regions had several meetings with Lord Shuttleworth at which the future of the Rural Development Commission was discussed, including on 21 July, 23 July, 16 September and 2 December 1997.

Lord Shuttleworth's letter requesting a meeting with the Deputy Prime Minister to discuss the future of the Commission was dated 27 October 1997.

Alexandra Palace and Park

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the correspondence between his Department and the London Borough of Haringey regarding Alexandra Palace and Park which is of a non-commercial nature. [19734]

Ms Armstrong: Identifying this information from the considerable volume of correspondence with Haringey over Alexandra Palace and Park would be time consuming and could not be undertaken except at disproportionate cost.

In November 1996 the Department gave the London Borough of Haringey directions, allowing an increase in their aggregate credit limit totalling £55 million, in connection with the Council's proposals for establishing the future of Alexandra Palace and Park. The directions are technical measures and do not convey additional financial support. I am arranging for a copy of the directions to be placed in the library.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what proposals his Department has received from (a) the London Borough of Haringey and (b) other interested parties for the closure of Alexandra Palace and Park; and if he will make a statement; [19731]

(2) what financial guarantees his Department has given since 1990 to the London Borough of Haringey with regard to Alexandra Palace and Park. [19732]

Ms Armstrong: None.

Local Self-government

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which clauses of the European Charter of local self-government the Government plan to sign up to. [19680]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on Thursday 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 546.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions whether the boundaries of regional development agencies and regional chambers will be co-terminous. [19679]

Mr. Caborn: Regional chambers are being established under voluntary arrangements by local authorities and others. However, we wish to encourage a single chamber covering each region to provide a coherent voice for the region, in particular to offer views to the Regional Development Agency.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indian Sub-continent (Visa Applications)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many (a) visit, (b) settlement and (c) other visa applications made at the British High Commission in (i) Islamabad, (ii) Karachi, (iii) New Delhi, (iv) Mumbai, (v) Calcutta, (vi) Madras, (vii) Dhaka and (viii) Colombo were (1) made, (2) refused initially, (3) granted initially and (4) deferred in each year since 1992; [19013]

(2) how many (a) visit, (b) settlement and (c) other visa applications made at the British high commissions in (i) Islamabad, (ii) Karachi, (iii) New Delhi, (iv) Mumbai, (v) Calcutta, (vi) Madras, (vii) Dhaka and (viii) Colombo were (1) made, (2) refused initially, (3) granted initially and (4) deferred in each month since January 1996 to the latest convenient date. [19023]

Mr. Fatchett: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visit visa applications from people aged over 65 years were (a) made, (b) granted initially, (c) refused initially and (d) deferred at the British High Commission (i) Islamabad and (ii) New Delhi in each year since 1992. [19100]

Mr. Fatchett: The details are as follows:

Islamabad

10,864 applications were made between 1992 and November 1997 as follows:

1992: 504

1993: 1,086

1994: 1,091

1995: 2,846

1996: 3,645

1997 (to November): 1,692

A breakdown into issues, refusals and deferrals cannot be given without a physical search of all applications which would entail disproportionate cost to public funds.

New Delhi

New Delhi only maintains non-settlement records for 2 years after a visa is issued. The figures for 1996 and to the end of November 1997 are as follows: Deferred figures are not available.

Year	Applications made	Granted	Refused
1996	4,801	2,647	991
1997	4,084	3,394	439

Ottawa Convention

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) of 24 November 1997, Official Report, columns 398–99, on the Ottawa Convention, when he plans to introduce the legislation necessary for the ratification of the Convention. [19323]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We attach great importance to the Ottawa Convention, signed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development on 3 December. We intend to ratify it as soon as possible. The timing of the legislation necessary for ratification will depend on our legislative programme. We intend to introduce the legislation as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the maximum number of Greek military personnel allowed in Cyprus in accordance with its role as a guarantor power; how many Greek Army personnel are presently in Cyprus; how many military aircraft are in Cyprus; which authority monitors the level of Greek military presence in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [19512]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under the 1960 treaties, Greece is allowed to station a force of up to 950 military personnel in Cyprus. We estimate that there are about 2,000 Greek military personnel in Cyprus at present. There are no fixed-wing military aircraft permanently based in Cyprus. No international authority monitors the level of Greek military presence in Cyprus.

European Commission Directorates

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals currently work for each directorate of the European Commission. [19559]

Mr. Doug Henderson: According to July 1997 figures, the numbers of British nationals working at A Grade in each Directorate-General of the European Commission are as follows:

I: 38

IA: 58

IB: 30

II: 11

III: 36

IV: 17

V: 27

VI: 32

VII: 20

VIII: 44

IX: 9

X: 14

XI: 26

XII: 48

XIII: 43

XIV: 5

XV: 23

XVI: 21

XVII: 22

XIX: 8

XX: 8

XXI: 17

XXII: 15

XXIII: 10

XXIV: 8.

In addition, there are the following numbers of British nationals working at B, C and D Grade for the European Commission:

B Grade: 237

C Grade: 308

D Grade: 7.

These figures include staff paid from the Central and Research Budgets, and permanent and temporary staff.

Western Sahara

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to contribute financial resources and personnel to

MINURSO, to ensure that the United Nations supervised referendum on self-determination for the people of Western Sahara is free and fair. [19708]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK contributes 6.568 per cent. in UN assessed contributions to the total costs of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO). Accordingly, we will pay 6.568 per cent. of the estimated costs (£129 million) of the expansion of MINURSO as set out in the Secretary-General's report of 13 November and its addendum of 19 November 1997. We have no plans to contribute personnel.

We fully support the expansion of MINURSO to facilitate the full implementation of the settlement plan.

Brazil

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Brazilian Government concerning the eucalyptus plantation established by Aracruz Cellulose on land previously occupied by Tupirikim Guarani Indians. [19710]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: After meeting representatives of the Tupinikim and Guarani Indians, I wrote to the Brazilian Ambassador on 1 July about their claim to land occupied by Aracruz Cellulose. I also raised it with the Head of the National Foundation for Assistance to Indians (FUNAI), when I visited Brazil in September 1997. Our Embassy in Brasilia continues to monitor this particular case. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised other indigenous issues with the Brazilian Foreign Minister during their talks on 3 December.

Gibraltar

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the policy on voting rights of Gibraltarian citizens in European Parliament elections. [19272]

Mr. Doug Henderson: To include Gibraltarian citizens in European Parliament elections would require an amendment to annexe II to the EC's 1976 Act concerning the election of the representatives of the European Parliament. This would require the unanimous agreement of all Member States, and ratification by each Member State in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements. We keep policy under review in the light of those facts.

Sudan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards aiding the development of democratic government in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [19273]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made clear both to the Government of Sudan and to the opposition National Democratic Alliance our wish to see progress towards a pluralist democratic system of government and respect for human rights in Sudan. Development of bilateral relations is dependent on progress in this and other fields.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the new Government in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [19274]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There is no new Government in Sierra Leone. We condemned the military coup which took place there on 25 May 1997 and have consistently called for the restoration of the legitimate Government of President Kabbah. The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) reached agreement with the military junta on 23 October in Conakry on a framework for the restoration of that Government. We have played a leading role within the international community in promoting discussion of the implementation of that agreement. With our encouragement, the United Nations is currently considering how best it can support ECOWAS activities in this regard.

Raicha Jivan Parmar

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the British High Commission in Bombay is taking in respect of the case of Raicha Jivan Parmar of Maidston Road, Leicester, currently in India. [19949]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked the High Commission in Bombay to provide a detailed account of the position. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons will write to my hon. Friend within one week of receiving that account.

Hamir, Lakhu and Devshi Vega

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refusal of Bombay to issue a visa to Hamir, Lakhu and Devshi Vega (ref. R/973542), whose parents reside at Avonside Drive, Leicester. [19950]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked the High Commission in Bombay to provide a detailed account of the position. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons will write to my hon. Friend within one week of receiving that account.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Biodiversity

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's Biodiversity Strategy. [19672]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) is committed to providing continued assistance to help poor people in developing countries benefit from safeguarding biodiversity, both through the bilateral programme and the UK contribution to the Global Enviornment Facility (which is the financial mechanism for assisting developing countries implement the Convention on Biological Diversity). During negotiations with multilateral organisations, DFID will also pay particular attention to the impact of intellectual property rights on the interests of indigenous and local communities who depend on local biodiversity for their livelihoods. To assist in the identification and provision of assistance in situations with opportunities for both alleviating poverty and safeguarding biodiversity, DFID is reviewing its bilateral biodiversity strategy in co-operation with interested parties, including NGOs.

Environment and Development

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the Government will initiate a joint Environment and Development Council during its presidency of the European Union. [19785]

Clare Short: We do not propose to hold a joint Environment and Development Council but will contribute fully to the Environment Council's preparations for the Commission on Sustainable Development next year and continue to work closely with our environment colleagues on other issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures the Government will take to improve the effectiveness of EU overseas aid devoted to environment protection and enhancement schemes. [19784]

Clare Short: We will discuss any recommendations arising from the Commission's independent evaluation of the environmental performance of EC-funded programmes which is due to be completed in the new year, and continue to encourage the EC to integrate fully environmental considerations into the design of its projects. We will continue to participate in the Commission's Scientific Environmental Monitoring Group and the forestry and water expert groups, and have agreed to provide a project leader to prepare an EC/Member States strategy for biodiversity conservation. We have also seconded a forestry specialist to work for the Commission on the management of tropical forestry programmes.

Sustainability

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals he has to promote the integration of sustainability through the Development Council. [19787]

Clare Short: We will continue to promote the integration of sustainability into the Community's aid programmes by seeking to ensure that due weight and consideration are given to it in the Community's legislation and policies. This will be one of our top priorities in the discussions on the future of Lomé during the UK Presidency.

India (Port Development)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received regarding the proposed port development by P & O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India. [19918]

Clare Short: The Department of Trade and Industry takes the lead on this question. The Department for International Development and other Government Departments have received a number of letters on this subject.

DEFENCE

Cadet Forces

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sum his Department has spent on supporting combined cadet forces in schools in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97, broken down between (i) private schools and (ii) state schools. [19737]

Mr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence has allocated the following sums to schools in support of the Combined Cadet Forces. The figures are in £million at current prices.

1994–95: 6.6

1995–96: 6.2

1996–97: 5.8.

I regret that my Department keeps no separate records detailing the overall costs attributable to individual schools, whatever their category. This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

HMS Caroline

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Royal Navy has for the future use of HMS Caroline; and if he will assess the advantages of converting it to a museum. [19560]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Caroline will continue in use as the RN Reserve Training Centre (RTC) for the Belfast area for the foreseeable future. Consideration would be given to moving the Centre to a shore-based site if suitable accommodation could be identified, and if the requisite funding could be made available. The Ministry of Defence has no plans to assess the advantages of converting Caroline into a Museum.

Resource-based Accounting

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the impact on his Department's budget of the introduction of resource-based accounting; and if he will make a statement. [19839]

Dr. Reid: When fully implemented, resource accounting will provide visibility of the full costs of all resources consumed. This will enable better informed management and decision taking throughout the department.

PRIME MINISTER

Hospitality

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister what sums he has spent on hospitality for representatives of business at No. 10 Downing Street since 1 May. [19101]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 5 December, Official Report, columns 376–77.

Ministerial Appointments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the mechanism by which the security services are able to make representations to him about his proposed ministerial appointments. [18919]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 December 1997]: No representations are made to me by the Security Services about proposed Ministerial appointments. Advice is available to me when relevant.

BSE

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of an inquiry into BSE. [19909]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will make a statement shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Transsexuals

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current arrangements for the (a) police, (b) courts and (c) prison service in respect of transsexuals; what plans he has to review these arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [19730]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: (a) The Association of Chief Police Officers suggested to forces in 1995 that a transsexual prisoner be asked to state a preference for the gender of the searching officer and to sign the custody record in confirmation. In the event of a lack of co-operation, the custody officer would treat the prisoner as being of the sex under which they were documented and living their lives. Best practice guidance for dealing with transsexuals is being drawn up and will be issued to forces.

(b) The Court Service has no special arrangements in respect of transsexuals. Where appropriate, the police and prison service escort service address any special accommodation requirements of which they may be notified. There are no plans to review this arrangement.

(c) The Prison Service decides where to locate and how best to care for transsexual prisoners on a case by case basis, taking account of such factors as their sex in law, their most obvious physical characteristics and their ability or otherwise to integrate with other prisoners. It is currently engaged in drawing up guidelines for issue to establishments on the care, management and treatment of prisoners with gender dysphoria.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to combat under-age drinking. [19842]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan) on 16 July 1997, Official Report, column 173, and to the letter which I sent to all hon. Members on 17 July.

Firearms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the differences between the Draft Firearms (Amendment) (No. 2) Act 1997 Compensation Scheme laid before the House on 27 November 1997 and the ex gratia scheme under Schedule 1, Paragraph 10 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [19598]

Mr. Michael: The Government have given assurances that those who chose to surrender their small-calibre pistols voluntarily under the present ex-gratia scheme would not be disadvantaged compared to claimants under a future statutory scheme, and so the two schemes are identical as regards the range and values of firearms and ancillary equipment covered. There are some minor textual changes to the claims handling procedures described in the new draft scheme to reflect practice in the Firearms Compensation Section, and three items have been added to the list of ancillary equipment qualifying for compensation at Annex B of the scheme: speedloaders, speedloader pouches and spare parts held by registered dealers. While these items were not included explicitly under the previous published scheme, compensation has been paid for them on an exceptional basis.

Czech and Slovak Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to answer the question of the hon. Member for Hertsmere of 20 November on asylum seekers from the Czech Republic and Slovakia. [19752]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I replied to the Question on 5 December 1997, Official Report, columns 361–62.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many random drugs tests in United Kingdom prisons proved positive; and how many prisoners found positive were subsequently charged with a criminal offence as a result of the test in the most recent year for which figures are available. [18991]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of random drug tests on prisoners which proved positive in England and Wales in 1996–97 was 13,797.

The use of illicit drugs is not a criminal offence as such. Consequently, there is no central record kept of prisoners who may have been charged with a criminal offence following a drug test.

A prisoner whose drug test is positive will generally be charged with a disciplinary offence under Prison Rules. Data held centrally do not separate charges concerning random mandatory drug tests from charges following positive results from the other aspects of the mandatory drug testing programme. In 1996–97, there were 21,588 mandatory drug tests in total which were positive. Disciplinary proceedings under Prison Rule 47 or Young Offender Institution Rule 50, "administering a controlled drug or failing to prevent its administration", followed in 16,757 cases.

Handcuffs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued in relation to the use of rigid handcuffs; and under what circumstances they permit police officers to use such handcuffs. [18990]

Mr. Michael: A Home Office circular to chief police officers containing guidance about the use of handcuffs was withdrawn on 23 January 1997. This was replaced by guidance issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) which reflects the provision in section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 that a person may use such force as is reasonable in the circumstances in the prevention of crime, or in effecting or assisting in the lawful arrest of offenders or suspected offenders. I am placing a copy of the ACPO guidance in the Library.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the last four years the metropolitan police has invited representatives of the media to be present at the scene of (a) a raid and (b) an arrest. [19048]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The Commissioner informs me that the information requested on the number of occasions the Metropolitan Police has invited the media to be present at the scene of a raid or an arrest is not readily available and could be only obtained at disproportionate cost.

He tells me that on occasions when Metropolitan Police operations are a matter of public interest the media may be invited to accompany the police on raids. On some of these occasions, arrests may take place. The Commissioner says that if the Metropolitan Police decides to invite the media to attend, their involvement is strictly controlled and carefully planned.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Wiltshire Constabulary were asked to collaborate with the Metropolitan Police in the raid on the Rectory at Donhead St. Andrews on 21 November. [19050]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The Chief Constable of Wiltshire Constabulary informs me that Wiltshire Constabulary were requested to participate in the inquiry on 13 October 1997. The request came from Sussex Police.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the media representatives who were invited by (a) the Wiltshire Constabulary and (b) the Metropolitan Police to be present at the police raid on the Rectory at Donhead St. Andrews on 21 November. [19049]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 8 December 1997]: I am told by the Chief Constable of Wiltshire Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police that no representatives of the media were invited to be present at the raid on the Rectory at Donhead St. Andrews on 21 November.

Police Officers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the total numbers of police officers required; and if he will make a statement. [19270]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 8 December 1997]: Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force. We are already working with the police to reduce administrative burdens and to enable chief constables to put more officers on the streets.

My right hon. Friend announced on 2 December that the spending power of the police in England and Wales next year can increase by £258 million, or 3.7 per cent. over 1997–98. The provisional settlement includes an additional £40 million of police grant in 1998–99. This sum is to ensure that police authorities have funds available which would allow them to increase spending on meeting the key objectives for the police in 1998–99. This could include the recruitment of additional police officers if the chief constable considers that this is the most beneficial way of delivering the objectives.

Speed Camera Detectors

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to prohibit the sale of speed camera detectors; and if he will make a statement. [19467]

Mr. Michael: The use of such detector devices without a licence is already an offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 and successful prosecutions have been taken out by the police against motorists who have used them. This Department has carried out tests which showed such devices to be largely unreliable and ineffective. We have no plans to create a new offence but we have asked the Association of Chief Police Officers Traffic Committee to keep us informed of any significant increase in the use of these devices and of any difficulties which forces experience. In addition, where an advertisement for such a device is brought to this Department's attention we lodge the papers with the Advertising Standards Authority so that the Authority can ensure that the advertising copy makes the legal position clear.

Intrusive Surveillance

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the leaflet "The Police Act 1997, Complaints About the Use of Intrusive Surveillance"; and if he will make a statement. [19284]

Mr. Michael: The leaflet will provide guidance to members of the public and their representatives regarding the mechanism for complaints about intrusive surveillance operations authorised under Part III of the Police Act 1997. It will be published when the provisions of Part III are implemented next year.

TREASURY

National Register

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to charge Departments for the value of their assets recorded on the National Register. [18194]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Departments, and parts of Departments, which are trading funds already incur a charge for their fixed assets; this forms part of the full cost of services provided which they are obliged to recover from income. As part of the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting, all fixed assets on all departmental balance sheets will be subject to a capital charge. This will affect departmental budgets from 2001–02 when the system is fully implemented. I shall make a further statement on the Government's plans under resource accounting and budgeting in due course.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many car park spaces are provided for his Department's (a) Ministers, (b) employees and (c) visitors in (i) London and (ii) the United Kingdom. [19363]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 8 December 1997]: There are six parking spaces allocated to Ministers, and 46 available to Treasury staff and visitors in London. There are no other parking facilities outside London.

Banks and Building Societies

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many bank and building society branches in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland were open in each year between 1979 and 1996; [19723]

(2) if she will list the number of open banks and building society branches in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland, together with the number and percentage rate of closed branches, broken down into the smallest available geographical areas, in each year between 1989 and 1996; [19724]

(3) how many bank and building society branches in Northern Ireland were open in each year between 1979 and 1996; [19721]

(4) if he will list the number of open bank and building society branches in Northern Ireland, together with the number and percentage rate of closed branches, broken down into the smallest available areas, in each year between 1989 and 1996. [19722]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury does not have this information.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the amount of windfall gains from the demutualisation of building societies that will be spent in the current and forthcoming financial years; and how this differs from his estimate at the time of the July budget. [19702]

Mrs. Liddell: Estimates of spending out of windfall gains are set out in the box on "Windfall Payments" in Appendix A of the November 1997 Pre-Budget Report (Cm 3804, page 75).

Insurance

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the inability of travel agents to value-shift between holiday and insurance products. [19661]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of such representations but all the evidence suggests that value shifting between holiday and insurance is widespread in the travel industry, as reflected by respective profit margins applied to these products.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the tax gain resulting from the higher insurance premium tax rate; and what are the reasons for the change in his previous estimate of £70 million. [19663]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest estimate of the overall tax gain from applying the higher rate of insurance premium tax to travel insurance is £60 million. This revision from the earlier estimate of £70 million took place prior to the introduction of this measure and reflected a reassessment of the share of the UK travel insurance market enjoyed by travel agents and tour operators.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has received showing that the lower rate of insurance premium tax is being used as a marketing promotion by those insurance retailers who compete with travel agents levied at the higher rate. [19665]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of examples of advertising literature on travel insurance, some of which mention the higher rate of insurance premium tax charged by travel agents.

Veterinary Fees

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was received from value added tax levied on fees charged by veterinary surgeons in the last financial year for which figures are available; and how much was received from VAT on medicines sold by veterinary surgeries; and if he will reduce the level. [18932]

Dawn Primarolo: In the year to 31 March 1997, £80 million net VAT was received from veterinary practices. Figures are not separately available for VAT on veterinary surgeons' fees and medicines sold by veterinary surgeries, as veterinary practices are not required to show these amounts separately on their VAT returns. The Government have no plans to reduce the level of VAT on such supplies. However, there is already a VAT zero rate on veterinary medicines where they are supplied to animal welfare charities that provide treatment to sick animals.

VAT (Domiciliary Care)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding VAT on domiciliary care services. [19160]

Dawn Primarolo: The policy on the VAT treatment of domiciliary care services depends upon their nature. Where those services constitute medical care or welfare they are exempt from VAT. Domestic services such as laundry, cleaning, etc. do not qualify for VAT relief under any exemption. However, many of these are provided by people below the threshold for VAT and are tax free.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what calculations he has made of the total unfunded pension liabilities of the member states of the European Community; and what assessment he has made of the potential impact of that liability within EMU on interest rates to the year 2025. [18987]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has made no independent calculations of other Member States' unfunded pension liabilities. Estimates and projections of pension expenditure by Member States are available in "Public pension expenditure prospects in the European Union; A survey of national projections" published by the European Commission in European Economy No. 3 1996. Pension liabilities are unlikely to have a major impact on interest rates, given the rigorous constraints imposed by the Stability Pact on public borrowing.

Government Assets

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance he has given on the arrangements for determining which assets listed in the register of Government assets are surplus to requirements. [18651]

Mr. Darling: It is for each individual Department, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, to review its asset holdings as set out in the National Asset Register and decide whether they meet the Department's aims and objectives. If they do not, it is for Departments to decide the appropriate course of action in each case. The measures I announced on 24 November will give Departments the right incentives to do this.

Statistical Surveys

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) the Family Expenditure Survey, (b) the Family Resources Survey, (c) the British Household Panel Survey, (d) the New Earnings Survey, (e) the General Household Survey and (f) the Social Attitudes Survey include samples from the area north and west of a line from Fort William to Inverness; if these surveys can be disaggregated to a Scottish level; and if he will increase the sample size of these surveys so that accurate statistics be produced for Scotland. [19154]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. John Swinney, dated 9 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on the sampling arrangements for various surveys and the disaggregation of survey analyses to a Scottish level.

As regards the Family Expenditure Survey (FES) and the General Household Survey (GHS), samples include the mainland part of Scotland north of the Caledonian Canal (i.e. line from Fort William to Inverness) but do not include the islands.

The samples are designed to be representative of Scotland, minus the islands, and some analyses from these surveys are produced for Scotland. However, the sample sizes are not large enough to produce reliably all the analyses available for Great Britain.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) is a 1% sample of employees in Great Britain who are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) income tax schemes. The sample includes employees north of the Caledonian Canal. Results from the NES can be disaggregated to unitary authority level in Scotland.

The Family Resources Survey (FRS) is sponsored by the Department of Social Security. It does not include samples from the area north of the Caledonian Canal due to the disproportionate fieldwork costs in this area. Some analyses are (can be) produced for the population of Scotland south of the Caledonian Canal but the sample sizes are not large enough for all the analyses that are available for Great Britain. The information on this survey was provided by a statistician from the Government Statistical Service within the Department of Social Security.

ONS co-ordinates the user requirements for a number of nation-wide surveys—including the FES, GHS and NES—in consultation with other government departments including the Scottish Office. Departmental requests for increases in the sample sizes of these surveys in particular areas, and their source of funding, are considered along with all other requests for information from the surveys. There are no plans to increase the sample size of the FRS in Scotland.

Information regarding the British Household Panel Survey can be obtained from Nick Buck (01206 873 066) at the ESRC Research Centre on Micro-Social Change at the University of Essex.

Information regarding the Social Attitudes Survey can be obtained from Alison Park (0171 250 1866) at Social and Community Planning Research.

Devolution

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements will be made for determining changes to the budgets of the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales under devolution; and if he will make a statement. [20062]

Mr. Darling: The Government set out their position on the funding of the budgets for the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales in the White Papers published in July (Cm 3658 and Cm 3718). The key to these arrangements is block budgets which the devolved Administrations, like the Secretaries of State now, will be free to deploy between the functions under their control in response to local priorities. Changes in these block budgets will be linked to changes in equivalent English spending plans by the Barnett formula which gives Scotland and Wales a population-based share of planned changes in comparable spending in England.

In order to help inform debate about these arrangements during the passage of the Scotland and Wales Bills, the Government published yesterday a statement of the principles which govern the existing block/formula arrangements and which will continue to do so under devolution. A copy of the statement is appended. Copies were placed yesterday in the Libraries of both Houses and referred to by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales when he opened the Second Reading debate on the Government of Wales Bill.

Although the block and formula arrangements have operated for nearly 20 years, this is the first time that these principles have been spelt out in public.

PRINCIPLES TO GOVERN DETERMINATION OF THE BLOCK BUDGETS FOR THE SCOTTISH PARLIAMENT AND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY FOR WALES

1. The Government set out its position on the Block and formula arrangements in its White Papers on Scottish and Welsh devolution published in July (Cm 3658 and Cm 3718 respectively). The Scottish White Paper, Scotland's Parliament, said:

> "In practice these arrangements, based on the Block and formula, have produced fair settlements for Scotland in annual public expenditure rounds and have allowed the Secretary of State for Scotland to determine his spending decisions in accordance with Scottish needs and priorities. They have largely removed the need for annual negotiation between the Scottish Office and the Treasury. The Government have therefore concluded that the financial framework for the Scottish Parliament should be based on these existing arrangements with, in future, the Scottish Parliament determining Scottish spending priorities."

The Wales White Paper, A Voice for Wales, said:

"The Government proposes that the financial arrangements for the Assembly will largely replicate the existing system.

Annual changes to the Welsh Block will be calculated by the population-based formula used at the moment. These arrangements based on the Block and formula have worked in practice, producing fair settlements for Wales in annual public expenditure rounds."

2. The Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales will therefore have block budgets, which they will be free to allocate in response to local priorities among the functions under their control and for which they will be accountable to local people. This note outlines the principles set out in the White Papers and describes how they will govern changes made to these block budgets under devolution.

Setting Scotland's and Wales' shares of UK public expenditure: the "Barnett" formula

Existing position

3. All UK tax revenues are pooled. Decisions about the allocation of UK public expenditure are made in the light of the Government's judgement of relative priorities and relative needs. Changes to the shares of public expenditure available to the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are determined by a formula linked to changes in provision for equivalent spending programmes in England.

4. This formula, which has operated for almost 20 years, is known as the "Barnett" formula. It provides that, in settling new plans for public expenditure, Scotland and Wales should receive a share of the planned cash changes in provision for equivalent public services in England which is proportionate to their population. In other words, Scotland's and Wales' shares of changes in relevant planned spending in England are the same proportions as their populations represent of England's population. The formula applies only to changes in spending plans, not to the underlying baselines which remain unaffected. The formula also applies only to changes in the block budgets: expenditure in Scotland and Wales, and expenditure on nationalised industries in Scotland, is outside the block budgets at present and is settled separately.

After devolution

5. These arrangements will continue under devolution, with only minor adjustments. Changes to the block budgets for which the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales will become responsible will continue to be determined by a formula linked to changes in provision for the equivalent spending programmes in England. The formula will continue to be based on relative populations. The spending for which the devolved administrations in Scotland and Wales will assume responsibility is set out in the annexes to this note.

6. The Government intends that these population shares will be re-calculated annually on the basis of the latest population estimates for England, Scotland and Wales published each year by the Office of National Statistics. The population ratios will next be updated for the purpose of determining changes in the Scottish and Welsh block budgets for 1999–2000.

7. The Government intends that this population-based formula will apply to changes in almost all the expenditure under the control of the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales. It will not apply to changes in agriculture programmes 100 per cent. funded by the EU. The Government will also want to consider whether this approach or another formula is appropriate in relation to provision for Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit which will both come within the Scottish Block for the first time after devolution; Housing Benefit is already within the Welsh Block, but, as in Scotland, Council Tax Benefit will come within the Block for the first time.

Adjustments to the Scottish and Welsh block budgets not determined by the Barnett formula

8. There are a number of circumstances in which the block budgets under the control of the Secretary of State for Scotland and Wales are open to adjustment other than on the basis of the Barnett formula. These exceptions will continue to apply under devolution. Adjustments may be made where:

(a) the UK Government decides to make a uniform general adjustment to public expenditure programmes;

(b) action taken by the Scottish or Welsh administrations in a devolved area has knock-on costs for the UK Government or vice versa. The block budgets may be adjusted downwards to compensate for costs incurred by the UK Government as a result of the action of the devolved administrations, or upwards to compensate the devolved administrations for costs which they incur as a result of actions by the UK Government and are not allowed for through the operation of the Barnett formula. The block budgets will not however be adjusted upwards by reason of additional costs incurred as a result of actions by the UK Government which the UK Government is expecting English departments with parallel responsibilities to absorb within existing spending plans;

(c) the devolved administrations receive capital receipts as a result of a privatisation or major change in the role of the public sectors in Scotland or Wales. In these circumstances, the block budgets may be adjusted downwards in the year in which the receipts occur to reflect the continuing interest in these receipts of UK taxpayers as a whole who financed the underlying capital assets in the past. Proceeds from the sales of other capital assets under the control of the Scottish Parliament or National Assembly for Wales will be available to be re-cycled within Scotland or Wales;

(d) the devolved administrations receive significant trading surpluses from the commercial exploitation of publicly funded assets: the Uk Government may take these surpluses into account in settling block budgets;

(e) local authority self-financed expenditure grows more rapidly than equivalent expenditure in England over a period and in such a way as to threaten targets set for public expenditure as part of the management of the UK economy. In such circumstances it will be open to the UK Government to take the excess into account in considering the level of the block budgets.

9. These principles concern the determination of changes to the block budgets under the control of the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales, not the level of Westminster grant to support these budgets. The latter may also be affected by changes in the level of self-financed items of expenditure—local authority capital expenditure funded by borrowing, for example—which currently count towards the block Budgets.

In-year changes to the block budgets for Scotland and Wales

10. The arrangements outlined above apply to changes in the plans for expenditure in future years in Scotland and Wales. These paragraphs deal with changes in-year to the budgets arrived at under the arrangements outlined above and in particular with access to the UK Reserve for the devolved Scottish and Welsh administrations.

11. The general presumption, as at present, is that the Scottish and Welsh administrations will contain in-year pressures on their budgets by re-allocating priorities within their Blocks, not through access to the UK Reserve. Access to the Reserve may however be considered at the discretion of the UK Government in exceptional circumstances and specifically where:

(a) the Government is making available additional provision in-year for equivalent services in England in order to cope with exceptional circumstances affecting the UK as a whole unforeseen at the time spending plans for the year concerned were settled; and

(b) Scotland or Wales face exceptional and unforeseen domestic costs—arising, for example, from a natural disaster—which cannot be reasonably absorbed within the planned block budgets without major dislocation to existing services.

Revising these principles

12. As noted above, the formula will be updated annually to take account of population changes and from time to time to take account of other technical changes. Any more substantial revision would need to be preceded by an in-depth study of relative spending requirements and would be the subject of full consultation between the devolved administrations and the UK Government.

ECOFIN

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 1 December. [19569]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 1 December. The Financial Secretary accompanied me.

The Council agreed a package of measures for tackling harmful tax competition in the EU. This comprises a Code of Conduct on Business Taxation, and agreement that the Commission should come forward with proposals on the taxation of savings by non-residents, and on interest and royalty payments between companies in different Member States.

The Council continued its discussion of economic co-ordination in Stage 3 of EMU, in the response to the remit from the Amsterdam European Council in June this year. No agreement was reached on what ECOFIN's report to the European Council should say about proposals for informal discussions of issues relating to Economic and Monetary Union. The European Council will consider this at Luxembourg on 12 and 13 December.

Agreement was reached on a common position on the FISCALIS programme (which facilitates administrative co-operation between the indirect tax authorities).

The Council noted the important economic and fiscal issues surrounding the development of electronic commerce.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Healey: To ask the Security of State for Culture, Media and Sport what job opportunities the tourism industry can offer as part of the New Deal programme. [17996]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge) on 8 December 1997, Official Report, columns 465–66.

Sport and Schools

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many sportsmark award have been awarded in the past 12 months; [19478]

(2) how many gold star awards have been awarded since April 1997; [19479]

(3) if he will list those schools which have received sportsmark awards in the past 12 months, indicating the date of award. [19481]

Mr. Banks: The first round of Sportsmark and Sportsmark Gold awards were made in June this year. Three hundred and eighty-two schools achieved a Sportsmark award and a further 30 achieved a Sportsmark Gold. A full list of successful schools has today been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what actions he is taking arising from the audit of the in-service needs of teachers and schools undertaken by the National Coaching Foundation; [19483]

(2) what plans the National Coaching Foundation has to organise further training weeks for teachers and trainees, indicating the sports involved and the number of teachers participating. [19486]

Mr. Banks: The National Coaching Foundation (NCF) delivers the coaching for teachers programme on behalf of the English Sports Council (ESC). This is a four year programme. The second year of the programme will be run in spring-summer 1998.

There will be coaching for teachers weeks in every Sports Council region. Sports included in the programme are cricket, hockey, swimming, athletics, football, netball, rugby and tennis. Following the evaluation of the needs of teachers and schools conducted by the NCF during the pilot scheme, two new sports, badminton and volleyball, are to be introduced in 1998, as well as sports for people with disabilities including boccia.

About, 8,000 teachers took part last year and a similar number are expected to attend in 1998.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many hours of sporting opportunity per week are required to achieve a sportsmark. [19480]

Mr. Banks: In order to achieve a Sportsmark award schools should provide a minimum of two hours a week of timetable PE lessons for every pupil and a minimum of four hours a week of organised sport outside timetabled lessons for all interested students.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what has been the take-up of moneys from the Challenge Fund to assist school or club links; [19492]

(2) what steps he is taking to promote links between sporting clubs and schools. [19502]

Mr. Banks: One of the criteria for the Sportsmark award is for schools to develop links with a number of local sports clubs as a way of providing students with further opportunities outside school hours.

A £1 million Challenge Fund was made available in October 1996 to promote links between local schools and clubs or governing bodies of sport. Guidance was sent to all secondary schools and over 400 schools successfully applied and received financial support for local initiatives that established or strengthened the links between local schools and clubs.

The take-up of moneys in the first year of the scheme was around half a million pounds. A similar amount is budgeted for the 1997–98 academic year.

Sport (Participation)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for further regional conferences to generate interest in sports participation. [19489]

Mr. Banks: We are planning to hold a series of regional conferences in the new year.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how he is implementing the OFSTED survey's findings on the need for improved co-ordination of information to young people to help them towards independent adult sport participation. [19488]

Mr. Banks: The English Sports Council are currently working on proposals for a Community Sports Co-ordinators Initiative. The Co-ordinator would be based in a secondary school with the task of liaising and working closely with all the agencies and providers beyond the schools to ensure the best possible provision of physical education and sport for pupils at school and when they leave.

In addition, the Top Club initiative, developed by the Youth Sport Trust, the English Sports Council and the governing bodies of sport is designed to help clubs build a better future in sport for children of all ages through the governing bodies of sport. This initiative is currently being piloted.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Care

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of funding she will be allocating for child care centres in 1998–99; how many child care centres will be proposed for Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [18224]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 28 November 1997]: We will announce shortly the level of funding in 1998–99 for a planned expansion of high-quality pre-school education in Northern Ireland. The number of centres to be funded will be determined at local level by Education and Library Boards in consultation with local pre-school Education Advisory Groups and may include settings in the private, voluntary and statutory sectors.

Additional funding for out-of-school activities will begin in April 1999, but during 1998–99 details of the arrangements will be made known and applications sought from providers.

Fair Employment Legislation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to implement the recommendations contained in the SACHR Review on Fair Employment legislation. [18591]

Mr. Worthington: The Government's consideration of the recommendations contained in the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights report on employment equality is well advanced. The Secretary of State has already indicated certain recommendations on which the Government propose to take action—clarification of the law on direct recruitment of the long-term unemployed and firmer powers against persistent discriminators. The Government will give a response to the full range of SACHR's proposals in a paper to be published early in the New Year. Decisions on foot of SACHR's recommendations will be implemented as soon as possible.

WALES

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the GDP per capita of (a) South West Wales and (b) North Wales as a percentage of the (i) United Kingdom and (ii) European Union averages. [19110]

Mr. Hain: The latest available information is shown in the following table.

Gross Domestic Product per head, 1994

	PPS[1] units (thousands)	Percentage of United Kingdom average	Percentage of European Union average
Dyfed (South West Wales)	11.9	72	71
Gwynedd and Clwyd (North Wales)	13.8	84	83

Source: Eurostat.
[1] Figures are given in PPS (purchasing power standard) units to cancel out differences in price levels between countries.

Breast Implants

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision there is within the National Health Service in Wales for women who suffer from ruptured silicone breast implants, to have them removed. [19287]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The removal of a ruptured silicone breast implant is a clinical matter for individual clinicians to address with their patients.

Agri-environment Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) name of, (b) employer of and (c) organisation being represented by each of the members of the Wales Agri-environment Steering Group. [19670]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There is no Steering Group for the new agri-environment scheme; my right hon. Friend will decide the form the scheme is to take.

The members of the Working Group which is advising us on the technical detail of the management prescriptions for each feature have been chosen for their personal expertise; they do not represent any organisation. They are as follows:

Name	Employer
Mr. D. Archer	Snowdonia National Park
Mr. J. D. Cowie	Welsh Office
Mr. H. Davies	The Forestry Authority
Mr. C. Gillmore	Countryside Council for Wales
Mr. G. E. Jones	Farming and Rural Conservation Agency
Ms C. Keenleyside	Countryside Council for Wales
Mr. Bob Merriman	Environment Agency
Ms R. Nowell-Phillips	Farmers Union Wales
Mr. B. Pawson	Countryside Council for Wales
Dr. S. Rees	Cadw
Mr. J. Salmon	Country Landowners Association (Wales)
Mr. M. Thomas	National Farmers Union (Wales)
Mr. N. Thomas	Royal Society for the Protection of Birds
Mr. J. Young	Welsh Office

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned budget of the All Wales Agri-environment Scheme in each of the next three years. [19671]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The allocation of funds for the new scheme is yet to be decided.

Less Favoured Areas

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of Objective 5B funding in the less-favoured areas of Wales in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) 1996. [19919]

Mr. Hain: There is not direct relationship between less favoured area status and objective 5B funding, and records are not kept in the form requested.

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the level of spending by local authorities in each year since 1991–92; and if he will indicate the annual percentage change in real terms. [19824]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is given in the following table.

Local authority expenditure in Wales[1]

	Net revenue expenditure (£ million) (Cash prices)	Annual percentage change in real terms (Constant 1997–98 prices)
1991–92	2,411.2	5.0
1992–93	2,577.1	2.6
1993–94	2,554.8	–3.7
1994–95	2,684.0	3.5
1995–96	2,862.9	3.8
1996–97[2]	2,969.6	0.9
1997–98[3]	3,005.0	—1.5

[1] Excluding expenditure funded by specific grants. For consistency, the figures shown for the years prior to 1995–96 have been adjusted to include police specific grants. Includes additional resources for community care for 1993–94 onwards. The annual changes in 1992–93 and 1993–94 were effected by the transfer of higher and further education colleges from the local authority sector on 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will ensure during the United Kingdom presidency that implementation of United Nations Standard Rules for the Equalisation of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities is subject to annual review; [19676]

(2) what arrangements exist to monitor progress towards implementing the UN Standard Rules for the Equalisation of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities. [19681]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 8 December 1997]: Progress towards implementing the UN Standard Rules for the Equalisation of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities is monitored by the UN Special Rapporteur on Disability, Bendt Lindqvist, whose work the Government support.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment who will be involved in the review of the threshold exempting employers with fewer than 20 employees from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [19678]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The review of the exemption provision includes a consultation exercise to gather views and evidence from a wide range of disability organisations, particularly those representing the interests of disabled people in employment or seeking employment, and employer organisations, especially those representing the interests of small firms, as well as individual disabled people and employers. The review will include meetings with interested parties.

The Government will consider the responses to the consultation carefully before deciding whether the threshold should be lowered to extend the Act's employment rights to more disabled employees and job applicants.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the time scale of the review of the 20 employee threshold in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [19677]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Section 7 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 requires that a review of the effects of the small employer exemption threshold must be completed within nine months. I announced such a review on 3 December 1997 and expect that it will be completed in the late Spring of 1998. Any change to the threshold has to be made within one year of the review commencing.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment whether he will ensure that research into the impact of European economic policy on disabled people is commissioned during the UK presidency. [19682]

Mr. Alan Howarth: DfEE officials have provided the European Commission with details of research undertaken across Government into disability issues. This information will be used by the Commission in conjunction with similar reports from the other member states to identify where there is a significant need for co-ordinated research at a European level. It is not yet possible to say which subjects, if any, the Commission will identify as suitable for this kind of treatment but no areas have been ruled out.

The Department has an extensive and continuing programme of disability research which addresses current priorities. The Department routinely publishes the results of the research it commissions in line with the requirements of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

New Deal

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance New Deal participants aged over 25 years and unemployed for more than two years will receive during the period before their six month placement begins. [19180]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are currently considering the detailed design of the new deal for people aged 25 years or over and unemployed for two years or more. We will make an announcement as soon as possible.

School Sport

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools are currently providing sports annual reports and prospectuses. [19482]

Ms Estelle Morris: All maintained schools are required to publish in their prospectus a statement indicating the aims of the governing body with respect to sport at their school and the provision made for sport. In its annual report to parents, the governing body must indicate the extent to which its aims were met and to give details of any notable sporting achievements by the school's teams. In our White Paper "Excellence in schools" we undertook to consult on the balance between requiring schools to include specific information and leaving more to their discretion.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers coaching at (a) primary school level have obtained NVQ 1 and (b) secondary level have obtained NVQ 2. [19484]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected by the Department.

Rushey Mead School, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much aid he plans to give to Rushey Mead School, Leicester, under the New Deal for Schools. [19177]

Mr. Byers: All LEAs will be entitled to bid, on behalf of the schools they maintain, for the £1 billion-worth of resources which remains to be allocated under the New Deal for Schools, in addition to the £83 million that has already been allocated in the first round of NDS. Bids will be considered on the same basis as in the first round; namely, cost-effectiveness, urgency, and how far they will raise educational standards.

If Rushey Mead School believes that it has a project that can be supported by NDS, I suggest that it discusses with Leicester City Council the possibility of including it in a future bid for NDS resources.

National Curriculum (Music)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that music is made part of the national curriculum. [19350]

Ms Estelle Morris: Music is a foundation subject in key stages 1, 2 and 3 of the National Curriculum.

Development Education

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his Department's estimate of the cost of providing relevant teaching materials for the integration of development issues into the national curriculum; [18941]

(2) what arrangements will be made to ensure that the development education material proposed by the White Paper "Eliminating World Poverty" will be presented in an objective manner; [18947]

(3) which Minister in his Department is responsible for integrating development issues into the national curriculum. [18948]

Ms Estelle Morris: I am responsible for the school curriculum, including the National Curriculum, and its assessment. There are already requirements and opportunities for pupils to study development issues through the National Curriculum, particularly in geography and history. The choice of materials to support the school curriculum is primarily a matter for individual schools. I understand, however, that the Department for International Development makes funds available to support organisations which produce materials to help schools address these issues.

There are legal safeguards against biased teaching in schools. Schools are required to ensure that pupils are offered a balanced presentation of opposing views when they are taught about any political issue.

E-mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 441, if he will list the e-mail addresses of (a) Ministers, (b) senior officials and (c) chief executives of agencies for which he is responsible. [15879]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 13 November 1997]: The Department is planning to introduce a Department-wide Internet e-mail service by the end of this year. We will publish the information requested, on the Department's Internet home page, in the New Year, as soon as implementation of the new service has been completed.

Pupil Admission Appeals

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many appeals he has heard concerning pupil admissions to (a) GM primary schools; and (b) non-GM primary schools; and, in each case, how many time she has ruled that schools should accept additional pupils in classes in excess of 29 pupils. [19491]

Ms Estelle Morris: School admission appeals are heard by statutory independent appeal committees. The Secretary of State does, however, have a duty to consider any referral from a school directed under section 431 of the Education Act 1996 to accept a pupil. Since 1 May, he has only considered two primary school referrals, both from the same GM school. In each case the directions were issued by Essex LEA and resulted in a decision by the Secretary of State that the school should admit the pupil to a class in excess of 29.

Careers Service

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money was allocated to the Careers Service in London in (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94, (d) 1994–95, (e) 1995–96 and (f) 1996–97; what sums have been allocated for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [19373]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The former Employment Department, which became part of the Department for Education and Employment in July 1995, allocated money for the careers services in London as follows:

	£ million
1994–95	25.3
1995–96	26.2
1996–97	26.5
1997–98	25.8

Amounts for 1998–99 are not decided.

Until 1994 careers services were largely financed through the Department of the Environment's Revenue Support Grant. Separate budget allocations for careers service regions within this budget are not available.

Child Care

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish the National Strategy for Child Care. [19948]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are currently developing the National Child Care Strategy which will help parents, especially women, to balance family and working life and will make an announcement in the first part of next year.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to vary the level of grant in aid to the Equal Opportunities Commission. [19987]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The grant in aid for the Equal Opportunities Commission in 1998–99 will be set out in the DfEE Departmental Report, to be published in the new year.

National Targets

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to update the national targets for education and training. [15144]

Mr. Blunkett: I will today announce the publication of a Consultation Document on the National Targets—"Targets for our Future", copies of which are being placed in the Library. The Government are inviting views on a number of new Targets which they believe better reflect their priorities and are more likely to generate the widespread commitment that is essential if we are to improve skills levels and be a competitive and inclusive nation.

Education and Work

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the range and quality of opportunities for young people to link their education to work. [18478]

Mr. Blunkett: Today I shall be making a public announcement about investing in Young People, a strategy designed to tackle the problem of under-achievement, widen the range and improve the quality of education and training available to young people aged 14–18 and prepare them for the world of work. The strategy is aimed at making sure as many as possible of our young people stay on in education and training after the age of 16, and that everyone in this age group achieves their full potential. As a Government we are committed to ensuring that all education and training for these young people provide the essential foundation for lifelong employability.

The measures which make up the investing in Young People strategy include:

I. All schools to set targets for raising attainment of qualifications at NVQ Level 2 at age 16.

II. Widening the range of vocational options and the work relevance of the curriculum for 14–16 year olds.

III. Introducing a single school leaving date at the end of June each year, so that no child should be able to leave school, in the year they become 16, until they have had a chance to sit for GCSE or other external examinations.

IV. Measures to help young people plan and manage their own learning—including a new National Record of Achievement.

V. The introduction of a Learning Card, promoting young people's entitlement to continue in learning post-16.

VI. Refocusing the Careers Service to target support and guidance on those who need it most.

VII. Developing a New Start strategy to re-engage disaffected young people from age 14 upwards in learning, where they have already dropped out or are in danger of doing so.

VIII. Legislating to ensure that all young employees—with the support of their employer—can undertake education and training up to NVQ Level 2.

IX. Introducing National Traineeships as a high-quality work-based route to NVQ level 2, building on the successful Modern Apprenticeships and including key skills.

X. Raising Standards by improving the quality of all post-16 provision: setting targets, identifying success, spreading good practice, and eliminating failure.

Schools, colleges TECs, careers services and the Youth Service all have a part to play in achieving our goals. But the involvement of employers is also essential. We want all employers to commit themselves to the training needs of all their young employees. If all our employers emulate the performance of the best, we will have the best-trained workforce in Europe.

A booklet accompanying the launch of the investing in Young People strategy is being widely distributed to partners throughout industry, education and training, and copies will be available in the Library.

Employment Zones

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on introducing prototype employment zones; and if he will make a statement. [20116]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 17 November, I received bids from local partnerships in the eight areas invited to put forward proposals for prototype Employment Zones. All were of a high standard and included innovative solutions to local problems.

I am pleased to announce that I have now decided to make funds available to the following five areas to develop prototype Employment Zones: Glasgow, Liverpool, North West Wales, Plymouth and South Teesside.

We will also be examining how best to carry forward the good work completed in the other three areas which submitted proposals.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Sprays

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has evaluated into the effect on wildlife of spraying potato crops with sulphuric acid. [19242]

Mr. Rooker: All pesticides are carefully evaluated and approval for marketing or use is given only if it is established that a given product can be used without unacceptable risks to people, wildlife and the wider environment.

The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides reviewed the approval of sulphuric acid in October and recommended that use could continue subject to specific restrictions.

Food Packaging

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether consumers have adequate information about food packaging which is potentially disruptive to endocrine systems. [19711]

Mr. Rooker: It is recognised by most scientists that evidence of the disruption to endocrine systems by chemicals which might migrate from packaging is not conclusive at present and that considerable further research is required before there is adequate information about effects and causes. The Government have an active programme of research and surveillance on the migration of chemicals from packaging including possible "endocrine disrupters". The results of this work are reported in the MAFF/DH "Food Safety Information Bulletin" together with advice from expert committees.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of irradiated foodstuffs. [19791]

Mr. Rooker: The irradiation of food is permitted provided it has been irradiated in accordance with the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990 and labelled in accordance with the Food Labelling Regulations 1996. The Government support the common position text of the proposed food irradiation Directive agreed by the Council of Ministers on 27 October 1997.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of diagnostic tests to detect food that has been irradiated. [19790]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has developed an extensive range of methods to detect irradiated foods. Of these, four have been published in the Department's series of reports on non-statutory validated methods and a further six are currently in the process of being validated. Together, these cover all the categories of food that might be irradiated.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 619, (1) when he expects to make a statement on his preferred option for the disposal of meat and bonemeal arising from the over-30-months scheme; [19820]

(2) further to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 619, if he will make a statement on the options for disposal of animal carcases under the over-thirty-months scheme. [19845]

Mr. Rooker: The Government will announce their decisions on the various disposal options when a wide range of investigations and negotiations are complete. Good progress is being made and the Intervention Board will write this week to companies which bid for incineration under its integrated tender.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he has issued on the use or disposal of tallow produced from the render of animals under the over-30-months scheme. [19781]

Mr. Rooker: The majority of tallow produced under the over-30-months scheme (OTMS) is being stored pending a decision being taken on the disposal options. These are under active consideration. In the meantime, subject to the consent of the local authority, a small amount of OTMS tallow is being burned as fuel to power the rendering process.

Beef Assurance Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to ensure that markets and processors are notified of the details of the Beef Assurance Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [19846]

Dr. John Cunningham: Further to the answer given to the hon. Member on 19 November 1997, Official Report, column 229, the organisations which received details of the Beef Assurance Scheme included the main trade organisations representing livestock auctioneers, meat wholesalers, meat manufacturers, butchers and producers of meat products, as well as consumers and other bodies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were taken at the EU Ministerial Council on Telecommunications on 1 December; and what matters were voted upon. [20240]

Mrs. Roche: I represented the UK at the Telecommunications Council held in Brussels on 1 December.

The Council reached unanimous agreement on a multi-annual programme to stimulate the establishment of the information society in Europe (Stimulis). There was political agreement to adoption shortly of a common position on a directive, amending directive 97/33/EC on interconnection in telecommunications, concerning number portability and carrier pre-selection. The Council also unanimously adopted, without discussion, a directive on the processing of personal data and the protection of privacy in the telecommunications sector. There was also a televised debate on internet issues.

Following European Commission presentations, the Council adopted conclusions on two Commission Communications: on the further development of mobile and wireless communications in Europe (universal mobile telecommunications system); and on digital signatures and encryption in electronic communication. The Commission also made oral presentations on a Communication on implementation by Member States of Community legislation in the telecommunications sector, and on the forthcoming Commission Green Paper on convergence in broadcasting, telecommunications and information technology. The Council took note of a progress report on negotiations on a draft directive on terminal equipment.

I raised the problem of the century date change for computer systems and presented a paper on the subject.

Insurance Companies

Gillian Merron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to change the regulations made under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 regarding financial reporting by insurance companies. [20242]

Mrs. Beckett: Regulations have been laid before Parliament which make certain amendments to the Insurance Companies (Accounts and Statements) Regulations 1996 in the light of experience of the first year of implementation. These amendments are set out below.

The information which life insurance companies are required to submit in respect of the long term business in their annual returns has been extended to provide the regulator with the additional detail necessary to be satisfied that "with profits" life insurance policies are meeting the reasonable expectations of policyholders.

Two areas of disclosure have been removed from the scope of audit. Firstly, it was the intention under the previous Regulations that the inclusion of directors' certification on compliance with the money laundering guidelines within the scope of audit be optional, in recognition that in the normal course of business auditors are unlikely to be in a position to give an opinion on the reasonableness of this statement. The amendment clarifies this position. Secondly, it is important that the regulatory framework provide for independent audit assurance that directors' statements that their companies' practices are consistent with representations to policyholders have been reasonably made.

The formulation in the existing regulations for obtaining this independent assurance has not provided satisfactory in practice and has been removed pending further consultation with the audit profession on how to introduce a more effective provision for future years. The statutory requirements relating to certificates by directors remain unaffected by these changes to the scope of audit.

Some of the wording and forms in the Insurance Companies (Accounts and Statements) Regulations 1996 have been clarified without materially changing their meaning.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Watts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were taken at the EU Ministerial Council on the Internal Market on 27 November; and what matters were voted upon. [20241]

Mrs. Beckett: My Noble Friend the Minister for European Trade and Competitiveness represented the United Kingdom at the Internal Market Council in Brussels on 27 November.

The Council reached political agreement by qualified majority voting on proposals on legal protection of biotechnological inventions, on insurance groups, on the extension of the KAROLUS programme (for exchanges of Single Market enforcement officials).

Common positions were agreed by qualified majority on proposals on Action Robert Schuman, an initiative to improve the training and informing of the legal profession about European law; on a proposal on in vitro diagnostic medical devices; on a modification of Directive 83/189/EC, to extend to information society services its mechanism for Member States to notify draft technical measures to the Commission and other Member States; on amendment of the food additives Directive 95/2/EC; and on a proposal on coffee and chicory extracts.

The Council discussed the Single Market Action Plan, legislative simplification, including proposals for revising the INTRASTAT regulations, and the proposals on chocolate, the Commission's Green Paper on food law, the legal protection of designs, and the free movement of goods.

The Council also received presentations from the Commission on proposals on foodstuffs, bus and coach construction, reform of the Community customs transit system, the European Company Statute, product liability, and the Community patent system.

Correspondence

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton dated Tuesday 30 September regarding the Inntrepreneur Pub Company. [19733]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: A letter from the hon. Member about the Inntrepreneur Pub Company dated 13 August was received by my Department on 19 August. A reply was sent on 26 August. My Department has not received a further letter from that hon. Member on this matter since that date. On receiving the Parliamentary Question my Department telephoned the hon. Member's office to obtain a copy of the letter dated 30 September. I have since replied to that letter.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many claims for unfair dismissal have reached an industrial tribunal; and what were the outcomes and compensation paid for (a) employment tribunals, (b) the Insolvency Service, (c) Companies House, (d) the Patent Office, (e) the Radiocommunications Agency and (f) ACAS in each of the last two years. [19517]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In the past two years, one unfair dismissal case brought by an employee of the Government Agencies was heard by an industrial tribunal. The case involved Companies House. At the hearing on 16 June 1997, the tribunal ruled that the applicant was not unfairly dismissed.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what export controls her Department operates in respect of the export of mixed oxide fuel; [18495]

(2) what non-proliferation measures her Department undertakes in respect of the export of mixed oxide fuel; [18492]

(3) what assessment she has made of the compliance of United Kingdom (a) manufacture and (b) export of mixed oxide fuel with the United Kingdom's international obligations in respect of (i) export control and (ii) non-proliferation. [18497]

Mrs. Roche: The UK's export controls on nuclear and nuclear-related goods are derived from international nuclear non-proliferation commitments and membership of international nuclear export control regimes, in particular the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) whose members have agreed common guidelines for the transfer of nuclear and nuclear-related goods and technology.

These commitments are given effect in the relevant legislation, which in this case is Council Regulation (EC) No. 3381/94 on the export of dual use goods and the related Council Decision 94/942/CSFP as amended.

In accordance with the legislation, mixed oxide fuel (MOX) requires an export licence. Individual applications for licences for exports of MOX are considered on their merits, but before any licence is issued certain conditions have to be fulfilled. These include assurances from the recipient government:

- that the goods will not be used for any purpose that would result in any nuclear explosive device;
- that the goods will be placed under effective physical protection;
- that the transfer will only take place once the receiving State has brought into an agreement with the IAEA requiring the application of safeguards on all source and special fissionable materials in its current and future peaceful activities;
- that the goods would only be transferred to a third country if the recipient country had provided the same assurances as those required by the supplier for the original transfer.

Both the manufacture and export of MOX are entirely consistent with the UK's international obligations in the field of export control and non-proliferation. In addition to the controls on the export of MOX outlined above, all civil nuclear materials in the UK, including MOX, are subject to Euratom safeguards.

Inward Investment

Dr. Fox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry)of 20 November 1997, Official Report, column 281, on the concordat on inward investments, when she expects the concordat to be published. [18150]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 3 December 1997, Official Report, column 255.

Investment (United States)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current annual level of (a) US inward investment into the United Kingdom and (b) United Kingdom investment into the US; and if she will make a statement. [19736]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In 1995, the latest year for which figures are available, the United Kingdom's net inward direct investment from the US was £9.1 billion. The UK's net outward direct investment in the US was £10.4 billion.

Barclays Bank (Dispute)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will request ACAS to invite Barclays Bank and the unions representing Barclays' staff to use its conciliation services to help resolve the current dispute. [19813]

Mr. Ian McCartney: ACAS is an independent body and the Government cannot and should not direct it to act in any particular way. ACAS of course stands ready to assist but can become involved in talks only where both sides agree.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from (a) Barclays Bank, (b) BIFU, (c) UNIFI and (d) ACAS on the current dispute between Barclays Bank and its staff; and if she will make a statement. [19812]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has received some representations from the Banking Insurance and Finance Union and UNIFI about this dispute. ACAS is an independent body and it does not make representations to Government about individual disputes.

Industrial disputes are matters for the parties concerned to resolve with the assistance of ACAS where both sides agree.

Horticultural Industry

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the Government's proposals for a minimum wage will take account of piece work payments in the horticultural industry. [18592]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The National Minimum Wage Bill make provision for the hourly rate of remuneration of workers to be determined in regulations following consideration by the Low Pay Commission. The statutory minimum pay rates for agricultural workers, including those on piece work in the horticultural industry, will not be set at a level lower than the National Minimum Wage.

Temporary Workers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the legal rights applicable to temporary workers who have been employed for less than two years. [19578]

Mr. Ian McCartney: All employees, whether temporary or not, have the same statutory rights, some of which depend on the length of service. Many employment rights apply as soon as an employee starts work, including protection against unlawful deductions from wages, against adverse treatment on grounds of sex, race, disability, trade union membership or non-membership or activities, or for taking specified types of action on health and safety grounds, and against dismissal for maternity-related reasons or for seeking to enforce statutory rights.

Invest in Britain Bureau

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many overseas offices the Invest in Britain Bureau has; and if she will indicate (a) the number of staff operating out of each office, (b) the location of each office and (c) the countries or regions covered by each office. [19253]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Invest in Britain Bureau has an overseas sales force of 57 in 17 FCO posts abroad carrying out full time inward investment promotion work, the majority of whom are FCO staff. In addition a further 34 staff give some of their time to inward investment promotion work.

Energy Policy

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her energy policy. [19709]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government's broad energy policy is to ensure secure, diverse and sustainable energy. We are reviewing a number of specific policy areas, such as the regulation of utilities' support for renewables and clean coal technology, and how the issues of security of supply and fuel diversity should be addressed in considering applications for power station developments.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many section 36 applications for permission to build and use gas-fired power stations are awaiting decision; [16535]

(2) what factors led her Department to approve BP's application to build a gas-fired power station at Baglan Bay; how long it took her Department to determine the application; and what has been the average time applications have taken to be determined since 1 May. [16524]

(3) if she will estimate the coal production the new Baglan Bay gas station will displace. [16575]

Mrs. Beckett: No decision has yet been made on the proposed power station at Baglan Bay. Following the announcement by my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry on Wednesday 3 December, this is one of the 28 applications on which we propose to defer a decision until the work on the review has been completed.

Incorporated Financial Accountant Qualification

Mr. Burstow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will review the list of qualifications under the European Communities Professional Qualification Regulation 1991 to assess the advantages of adding the incorporated financial accountant qualification. [14267]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Regulation lists professions which are regulated by statute, law, administrative provision or, under a special paragraph applying to the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland, by virtue of membership of a chartered professional body. The list is reviewed regularly and updated when necessary. The Institute of Financial Accountants does not fall within the above categories.

Trade Unions

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on trade union recognition in the workplace. [18777]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government believes that employees should be free to belong, or not to belong, to trade unions and, where a majority of a relevant workforce vote for it in a ballot, unions should be recognised for collective bargaining purposes. My Department will be publishing a White Paper on fairness at work, and principally on union recognition, in the first part of next year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on participation in stakeholder pensions. [16732]

Mr. Denham: Stakeholder Pensions will be a new type of pension scheme which will provide simple, secure, flexible and value-for-money pension arrangements for many of those who do not have the opportunity to build a secure retirement income under the current system; they include many women, part-time workers, those on temporary contracts and many of the self-employed.

In developing and promoting Stakeholder Pensions, the Government sees a key role for new partnerships involving financial services organisations, employers, employees, trades unions and other affinity groups. The Stakeholder Pension consultation document seeks views on how a detailed framework may best be established which allows these partnerships to develop.

Benefits Legislation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultation will be undertaken with the local communities, members of the public, voluntary organisations and charitable groups in respect of forthcoming legislation on social security benefits. [17889]

Mr. Field: Our manifesto set out our commitment to review and reform welfare in consultation and partnership with the people. We aim to modernise the structure and delivery of Social Security to encourage financial independence, while simultaneously promoting social cohesion and well-being; to develop an active welfare system which supports work, savings and honesty; and to help tackle effectively unjustifiable social and economic inequalities.

We want to encourage widespread debate throughout the country. For example, we have already completed the first part of the consultation exercise on the Pensions Review. Further consultation will follow in due course. We will also be publishing a Green Paper on Welfare Reform at the turn of the year which will set out the principles underlying the new directions for welfare in the 21st Century.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual savings to date arising from the termination of invalidity benefit and the introduction of incapacity benefit; and what proportion of those savings have been achieved by the removal of or reduction in benefit from those in receipt of invalidity benefit. [18654]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

	£ million
1995–96	280
1996–97	790

1. Figures are in 1996–97 prices.
2. It is not possible to identify separately savings attributable to removal or reduction in benefit from claimants previously in receipt of invalidity benefit.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of persons prosecuted in England and Wales for making a false declaration in respect of benefit claims for 1996. [19374]

Mr. Denham: The total number of persons prosecuted in England and Wales for making a false declaration in the calendar year 1996 amounted to 12,408. This figure includes all benefits administered by the Benefits Agency and excludes Housing Benefit which is administered by Local Authorities.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations the Minister for Women has made to the Department for Education and Employment about the grant in aid for the Equal Opportunities Commission. [19985]

Ms Ruddock: As Ministers for Women, both I and my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Security and Minister for Women, are routinely in contact with Department for Education and Employment Ministerial colleagues on a range of matters of mutual interest, including the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Women's Issues (Cabinet Sub-Committee)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the membership of the Cabinet sub-committee on women's issues. [19988]

Ms Ruddock: The information is as follows:

Secretary of State for Social Security and Minister for Women—right hon. Harriet Harman MP (Chair);

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland—right hon. Dr. Marjorie Mowlam MP;

Secretary of State for International Development—right hon. Clare Short MP;

Financial Secretary, Treasury—Dawn Primarolo MP;

Minister of State, Home Office—Joyce Quin MP;

Minister of State, Scottish Office—Henry McLeish MP;

Minister of State, Department of Health—Tessa Jowell MP;

Minister of State, Department for Education and Employment—right hon. Andrew Smith MP;

Lone Parents

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures are being taken to ensure that the insecurity of employment does not act as a disincentive to work to those lone parents eligible for income support before 5 April 1998. [19847]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Independent research suggests that the average additional income for lone parents already in work and on Family Credit is over £50 a week above the estimate of their out-of-work income. Research also shows that lone parents want to work but face a number of barriers that prevent them from doing so. In particular, they need practical help with job-search, training and with finding and paying for childcare. The Government has provided all of this with the New Deal for Lone Parents and the National Childcare Strategy. This will help make the transition to work seem much more attractive to those lone parents who currently feel trapped in benefit dependency.

The Government has taken steps to preserve work incentives for lone parents who are already receiving Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance. Those who are receiving either of these benefits with the lone parent rate of family premium at 5 April 1998 will be able to claim the lone parent rate of Child Benefit after 31 May 1998 if they move off benefit into work.

Attendance and Disability Allowances

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in Warrington, North constituency are currently in receipt of attendance allowance; [19592]

(2) how many people in (a) the North West Region and (b) Warrington, North constituency are currently in receipt of disability living allowance; [19591]

(3) what estimate she has made of the number of new claims for disability living allowance which are likely to be made over the next five years in (a) the North West Region and (b) Warrington, North constituency. [19590]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Helen Jones, dated 8 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking for details of the number of people in Warrington North constituency and North West region who are currently in receipt of Attendance Allowance (AA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The number of customers in receipt of AA in the Warrington North constituency is approximately 1,900, as at 31 August 1997.

The number of customers in receipt of DLA in the Warrington North constituency is approximately 4,100 and in the North West region is approximately 229,600, as at 31 August 1997. The North West Region consists of Cumbria, Cheshire, Greater Manchester and Lancashire counties.

These figures have been extrapolated from a 5% sample in conjunction with postcode data.

The forecast for New Claims for DLA is not available.

I hope you find this helpful.

HEALTH

Emergency Hospital Admissions

13. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to cater for an increase in emergency hospital admissions this winter. [18242]

Mr. Boateng: We have provided an additional £269 million for the NHS in England in the current financial year. This is being used to ease pressures on the health and social care system during the winter, as well as to start rebuilding the NHS for the future.

Buckinghamshire Health Authority

18. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with Buckinghamshire health authority on its plans for achieving equity of funding across their area. [18247]

Mr. Milburn: Officials from Anglia and Oxford Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive have held discussions with Buckinghamshire Health Authority. The Health Authority recognise the need to target resources at the area of greatest need in the county. An exercise comprehensively to map current expenditure is near completion and any proposed redistribution of resources will begin in 1998/99.

Waiting Lists

19. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the numbers of patients who will have been waiting for more than 12 months for treatment in May 1998. [18248]

Mr. Milburn: The substantial extra resources we have made available for the NHS for this year and next should enable us to make a start on restraining the growth in waiting lists and times we inherited from the previous administration. The programme of action announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 18 November will ensure we have shorter waiting lists and times by the end of the present Parliament. For the short term our priority is to eliminate 18 month waits for admission to hospital by 31 March 1988.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce hospital waiting lists. [18241]

Mr. Milburn: On 18 November my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a wide-ranging programme of action for reducing waiting lists.

We are determined that waiting lists will be shorter by the end of this Parliament.

Haemophilia

20. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the provision of recombinant factor VIII for the treatment of haemophilia sufferers. [18249]

Mr. Boateng: We take the same sound and fair approach to all treatments, namely that they should be clinically effective and based on sound evidence.

Concerns have been raised about access to this particular treatment. We are actively addressing them.

Private Health Insurance

21. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to address the additional burden placed on the National Health Service arising from elderly persons cancelling their private health insurance. [18250]

Mr. Boateng: In allocating resources to the National Health Service there is no account taken of the incidence of private medical insurance. Health authorities are charged with assessing the total health needs of their local population and do so based on clinical need and not ability to pay.

Nutrition Standards

22. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has for improving nutrition standards in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on health initiatives in this area. [18251]

Ms Jowell: Our new health strategy for England will be set out in a Green Paper and issued for consultation later this winter. The underlying principle is to improve the health of all the population and, especially, to improve the health of those who are worst off. We know that a healthy and balanced diet has an important part to play.

Improving nutritional standards in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and any associated health initiatives, are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Improving nutritional standards of school meals is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Expensive Drug Treatments

23. Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the basis on which patients in different parts of the country are given access to expensive drug treatments. [18252]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper gives details of our plans to ensure that patients have access to the treatment they need, wherever they live.

Elderly People (Treatment Costs)

24. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates his Department has made of the cost of treating people over 60 years of age. [18253]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not collected centrally that would enable an estimate to be made of the costs of treating people aged 60–64. Treatment for people aged 65 and over, who make up about 16 per cent. of the population, accounts for about 40 per cent. of expenditure on hospital and community health services. Elderly people use a proportionately greater volume of services than those used by the rest of the adult population, primarily because their incidence of disease is higher, but also because their pace of recovery after illness may be somewhat slower. People aged 75 and over in particular show more complex patterns of health problems. They often have a combination of several conditions and these may be complicated by general frailty and social problems such as the recent death of a spouse or relatives living some distance away.

Telemedicine

25. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to increase the use of telemedicine in the National Health Service. [18254]

Ms Jowell: We are encouraging developments in telemedicine in the National Health Service. Telemedicine is a research priority within the Health Technology Assessment programme and several projects to assess its effects on the NHS will be announced shortly.

NHS (Co-operation)

26. Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he plans to take to increase co-operation between purchasers and providers in the National Health Service. [18255]

31. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to overcome fragmentation between trusts and health authorities in the NHS. [18260]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper on the National Health Service sets out our plans to replace the fragmentation and competition of the internal market which we inherited with co-operation and a single National Health Service.

Annual Contracts

27. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he plans to make to the system of annual contracts in the national health service. [18256]

30. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he plans to make to the system of annual contracts in the NHS. [18259]

Mr. Milburn: The short-termism of the market which was characterised by annual contracting will be replaced by longer-term agreements.

NHS Trusts (Non-executive Directors)

28. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role and experience of non-executive directors of national health service trusts. [18257]

Mr. Milburn: Non-executive Directors come from a variety of different backgrounds and experience. What they are expected to share is a commitment to the aims of the National Health Service and to meeting the healthcare needs of their local community.

NHS Management and Finances

29. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the management and finances of (a) Mount Vernon and Watford Hospitals Trust and (b) West Hertfordshire health authority. [18258]

Mr. Milburn: The health authority and trusts in West Hertfordshire face an underlying recurrent deficit of £12.5 million. A discussion document has been issued for local comment, prior to formal consultation in the spring, on options to restore financial balance within the next 2–3 years. The authority has been awarded an additional £9 million in 1998–99 of which £3 million is growth money.

The Mount Vernon and Watford Hospitals National Health Service Trust is currently facing financial constraints but a financial recovery plan has been agreed with the NHS Executive, North Thames Regional Office to restore financial balance over the next 2–3 years.

NHS Best Practice

32. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to promote best practice throughout the NHS. [18261]

Mr. Milburn: "The New NHS" White Paper sets out a fresh approach to promoting best practice in the National Health Service.

Health at Work

33. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priorities for promoting health at work he intends to set NHS trusts. [18262]

Mr. Milburn: The Government attach very high priority to the occupational health and safety of National Health Service staff. Our priorities include stopping avoidable accidents, developing proper strategies for avoiding violence, and recognising the effect of occupational stress, addressing its causes and supporting staff accordingly. The Government have, through the Health at Work in the NHS project, piloted work on organisational stress, developed networks for the exchange of best practice and produced guidance on risk assessment, and sickness absence management, and are working with the Health and Safety Executive to produce guidance on avoiding violence to staff.

Barnet Health Services

34. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the delivery of National Health Service services in the Borough of Barnet, with particular reference to the future of the Edgware Hospital site. [18263]

Mr. Milburn: Barnet Health Authority's review of local health services, which included services to be provided from the Edgware Hospital site, has just been concluded. The health authority will now consider the findings of the review.

Managers

35. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the number of managers in the National Health Service. [18264]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are committed to maximising the proportion of National Health Service resources that are dedicated to patient care. We have no doubt that good management is essential to the effective running of the National Health Service. But we want to target unnecessary bureaucracy so that management effort is focused on improving health and health services. Our action to reduce management costs, including the changes announced in today's White Paper, will release £1 billion over the lifetime of this Parliament which will be ploughed back into direct patient care.

Private Finance Initiative

36. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress with the PFI hospital building programme. [18265]

Mr. Milburn: The prioritisation of major acute hospital Private Finance Initiative (PFI) schemes and the passing of the National Health Service (Private Finance) Act 1997 in July have resulted in financial close and start on site for the first two whole-hospital PFI schemes, at Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust (£115 million) and Carlisle Hospitals NHS Trust (£87 million). The other 13 major acute PFI schemes that have been prioritised are scheduled to reach financial close by the end of 1998. We are also considering how PFI can usefully be extended into the non-acute and primary care fields.

Commissioning

37. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to involve patients in the new GP commissioning pilot projects. [18266]

Mr. Milburn: One of the selection criteria for the General Practitioner Commissioning Group pilots was that they should have plans to work closely with carers and patients in planning and commissioning services. Each GP Commissioning Group will need to explore locally how best to achieve this. The pilots are to be evaluated so that best practice can be identified and shared. Arrangements for involving patients will form part of the evaluation.

Long-term Care

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plan to establish a Royal Commission on the funding of long-term care, indicating its start date. [17942]

Mr. Boateng: Details of the Royal Commission on long-term care were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the House on 4 December 1997, Official Report, columns 489–99.

Chitosan

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the Government's guidance ont he sale of the amino polysaccharide Chitosan as a slimming product; [18590]

(2) what clinical trials his Department has evaluated in respect of the (a) safety and (b) effectiveness of the amino polysaccharide sold as Chitosan for slimming purposes. [18588]

Ms Jowell: The sale of Chitosan is not controlled by the Foods Intended for Use of Energy Restricted Diets for Weight Reduction Regulations 1997. Chitosan is classed as a food product and as such it is covered by the general provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990, which provides that all foods shall be safe, of the quality intended and not misleadingly labelled.

The Department is not aware of any clinical trials of this product.

Aricept and Beta-interferon

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce national prescribing policies for (a) Aricept and *(b)*beta-interferon. [18599]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to introduce national prescribing policies specific to Aricept or beta-interferon. EL(94)72, issued in 1994, asked health authorities to set up Area Prescribing Committees to ensure the appropriateness of hospital-led prescribing and to develop authority-wide policies for the managed entry of new drugs such as Aircept and beta-interferon into the NHS. Copies of EL(94)72 are available in the Library.

The White Paper, published today, sets out plans for a National Institute for Clinical Excellence which advises the NHS on the clinical and cost effectiveness of treatments. Individual health authorities will then be able to make more informed judgments on the relative benefits of treatments.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the resistance of tuberculosis to drugs; and if he will make a statement. [18399]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has not directly commissioned any research into the resistance of tuberculosis to drugs. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC supports a number of studies into tuberculosis and these take the form of both grants to Universities and research funded in its own Units and Institutes. In 1995–96, the MRC's spend on tuberculosis research was £1.5 million. However, little of this research addresses the issue of drug resistance directly; it is largely basic research which will underpin and inform future work in the area.

The Department and its expert advisers do keep under review the results of studies in this field.

The Public Health Laboratory Service, together with similar organisations throughout the United Kingdom, has heightened its surveillance of drug resistance in tuberculosis. An Expert Working Group has been set up under the Interdepartmental Working Group on Tuberculosis to make recommendations for the prevention and control of tuberculosis in immunocompromised patients and of drug resistant tuberculosis. Consultation on its draft guidance has been completed and the final report is expected to be issued shortly.

Internal Market

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the savings across the NHS from ending the internal market; how this money will be redistributed; and over what time scale. [19685]

Mr. Milburn: The action the Government are taking to abolish the internal market and reduce bureaucracy, including the changes announced in the White Paper "The New NHS" (Cm 3807), which has been published today, will reduce the amount spent on management costs by £1 billion over the lifetime of the Parliament. Savings will be re-invested in direct patient care.

Locality Commissioning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of (a) the Audit Commission and (b) other bodies involved in the process of replacing the internal market system in the National Health Service with a system of locality commissioning. [19684]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper "The New NHS" (Cm 3807) published earlier today sets out the new roles and responsibilities of health authorities, National Health Service trusts, Primary Care Groups and other bodies in securing quicker, better treatment and care for patients.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incentives the Government intends to give general practitioners to participate in locality commissioning projects. [19683]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper "The New NHS" (Cm 3807), which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House today, sets out the Government's plans for Primary Care Groups which will bring together general practitioners and community nurses to commission services.

The new arrangements will offer them the opportunity to shape services for their patients. They will have available their population's share of the local resources for hospital and community services, prescribing and the general practice infrastructure, and will have the opportunity to deploy resources and savings to strengthen local services and ensure that patterns of care best reflect their patients' needs. Further details are contained in the White Paper.

Local Health Care

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he intends to make to the role of NHS trusts in respect of the delivery of local health care. [18239]

Mr. Milburn: As set out in the White Paper "The New NHS" (Cm 3807), there will be a new focus on quality in National Health Service trusts.

They will no longer compete, but work in partnership with other local bodies to provide the best health care possible for local needs.

Ayaz Sheikh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the case of Ayaz Sheikh of Thorpewell, Leicester; and what representations he has received from hon. Members on this case. [19947]

Mr. Boateng: We are aware of this case which is a matter for Leicestershire Health Authority. My hon. Friend wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State about this case on 28 October 1997 and my noble Friend the Minister of State replied on 25 November 1997.

We have asked the Chairman of Leicestershire Health Authority, Mr. Neil Townsend, to write to my hon. Friend setting out the latest position as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Employment Trading Schemes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals there are to exempt local employment trading schemes from benefit calculations undertaken by local government. [18930]

Mr. Raynsford: Local government does not undertake any benefit calculations on behalf of my Department. For information on benefit calculations undertaken on behalf of the Department for Social Security, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham).

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on planning regulations in respect of the building of telecommunication masts in the countryside. [19331]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning regulations governing the building of telecommunications masts in the countryside are found in the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995. This grants a general planning permission for certain telecommunications masts providing

- the mast is erected by a telecommunications code system operator licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984;
- the mast does not exceed 15 metres in height;
- the mast is not erected in a National Park, area of outstanding natural beauty, conservation area, or the Broads; and
- the mast is not refused prior approval by the local planning authority within the period allowed under the Order. The authority must be given the opportunity to say whether they wish to approve, within 28 days, details of the mast's siting and appearance. The authority may refuse approval if they consider there to be a serious threat to amenity.

A full application for planning permission is normally required for any mast which does not meet these criteria.

Road Deaths (A38 Cornwall)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many fatalities have occurred as a result of accidents on the A38 in Cornwall in each of the last 10 years. [19250]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The numbers of fatalities on the A38 in Cornwall in the past ten years are as follows:

Total number of fatalities on A38 Cornwall: 1987–1996

Year	Number of fatalities
1987	1
1988	3
1989	5
1990	6
1991	2
1992	3
1993	0
1994	4
1995	3
1996	6

Advisers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19302]

Dr. Strang: There are six paid special advisers in DETR. Two of these are employed on a part time basis each working for half of the week. Prior to 1 May, there were four special advisers in the Department of the Environment and one in the Department of Transport. Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

DETR sponsors eight task forces and review panels. The members of these bodies are drawn from bodies including local authorities. The voluntary sector, industry, green bodies and academics. Some members are unpaid or are paid expenses only. Where members are paid their fees are negotiated individually and remain confidential. Information on the membership of task forces and review panels prior to 1 May is not held centrally.

Local Government (Political Activity)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local government posts are subject to regulations on political activity; and how many officials have been disciplined under these regulations in each of the last three years. [19256]

Mr. Raynsford: I understand that about 47,000 local government posts in England and Wales are politically restricted under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Information on the number of officials who have been disciplined under these regulations is not held centrally.

National Parks

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account is taken of PPG Note 22 in determining applications for visible power generation in national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty. [19564]

Mr. Raynsford: Local planning authorities are expected to have regard to relevant published statements of national planning policy, including Planning Policy Guidance notes, in the exercise of their planning functions. PPG22 states that in assessing proposals in designated areas there is a need to take full account of the specific features or qualities which justified designation.

London Underground

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on current expenditure on the modernisation of the London underground service; and if he will list the current modernisation projects. [19810]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport expect to invest some £324 million in the Underground network in 1997–98 (excluding investment in the Jubilee Line Extension and in Private Finance Initiative projects). We are looking urgently at public-private partnerships for the Underground in order to increase this level of investment substantially and to create a modern, reliable Underground system.

Among the larger projects completed or in progress this year are the installation of a new signalling and control system on the Central Line, the refurbishment of the East London Line, the modernisation of stations at the southern end of the Northern Line (including Tooting Bec and Tooting Broadway) and investment in new trains for the Northern Line under a PFI contract with GEC-Alsthom.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the standard spending assessment per head of population for each English shire county in ascending order (a) for 1996–97 and (b) under the draft 1998–99 settlement. [19944]

Mr. Raynsford: The figures for shire counties are shown in the tables enclosed. Note that the provisional 1998–99 and settlement 1996–97 Standard Spending Assessment figures are not comparable owing to changes in local government responsibility and local government reorganisation affecting Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Derbyshire, Dorset, Durham, East Sussex, Hampshire, Leicestershire, Staffordshire and Wiltshire in 1997 and Berkshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Devon, Essex, Hereford and Worcester, Kent, Lancashire, Nottinghamshire and Shropshire in 1998.

Airport Signs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require operators of major airports to display signs in languages in addition to English. [19788]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 9 December 1997]: No. The UK follows the Recommended Practice on international signs contained in the Chicago Convention, Annex 9, provision 6.9, published jointly by the International Civil Aviation Organisation and the International Maritime Organisation for use at airports and Ports. Among the general principles set out in the joint publication (Document 9636) are that as far as possible symbols should be used without words on signs at airports and Ports.

Drink-driving Campaign

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources have been allocated for the campaign to deter drink-driving over the Christmas period. [19843]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The Department has allocated £1.9 million to the 1997 Christmas Drink/Drive campaign. The campaign uses national television supported by cinema and radio advertising. Print material for use in pubs, clubs and restaurants and by road safety officers has also been distributed.

The Department's campaigns have over the years helped to change the general public's attitude to drink driving to a point where such behaviour is no longer generally acceptable. Deaths have fallen from 1,643 in 1979 to 540 in 1993 and remain steady at this level.

This year's campaign takes a new approach and addresses those drivers who deceive themselves that they know how much they can drink and still be safe to drive, and who fail to recognise the increased risk they pose to themselves and other road users.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will appoint a new Chairman of the Rural Development Commission; and what criteria he will apply in making the appointment. [19748]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 9 December 1997]: We will appoint someone to chair the Commission, as soon as possible. Criteria include appropriate knowledge and experience, and the ability to take up the appointment without too much delay.

Registered Fishing Vessels

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce regulations governing the carriage of survival suits on board all United Kingdom registered fishing vessels. [19554]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The 1993 Protocol to the International (Torremolinos) Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels, though not yet in force, will require the carriage of immersion suits on larger new vessels. Its provisions will be applied within the European Union during 1999 by means of a Directive for a harmonised safety regime for fishing vessels of 24 meters in length and above. Accordingly, we will introduce regulations to require the carriage of immersion suits on new vessels of 24 meters in length and above. We have no plans to extend this requirement to other UK registered fishing vessels without further consultation with the industry.

Vehicle Safety

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made towards the introduction of measures to improve the safety of coaches and minibuses with particular reference to the transit of school children; and what additional measures he has evaluated. [19689]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Seat belts already have to be provided for children being taken on organised trips in coaches first used after 1 October 1988 and in all minibuses. From 10 February next year this requirement will also apply to older coaches.

We take the adequacy of seat belts very seriously. We are therefore proposing that all belts in minibuses and coaches are checked at the annual MOT test, and also that the Vehicle Inspectorate include the condition of all minibus and coach seat belts in the random roadside inspections which they carry out. We have consulted on details and hope to announce shortly how we intend to take this forward.

Mixed Oxide Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the risk of terrorist activity associated with the United Kingdom's export of mixed oxide fuel. [18496]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

Measures designed to minimise the risk of terrorist activity directed against nuclear materials in transit are reviewed constantly in the light of the risk assessments by the government's security experts.

All international movements of nuclear material carried out by the UK comply fully with the requirements of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and with the international guidelines on physical protection published by the IAEA.

Road Licences (Revocation)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many licences have been rescinded by the Traffic Commissioners, following inquiries, over the last six months. [19691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: During the 6 months ended 30 September 1997 the Traffic Commissioners revoked a total of 73 goods vehicle operator and public service vehicle operator licenses following disciplinary Public Inquiries.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Numeracy

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce proposals for numeracy hours for schools; and if he will make a statement. [19753]

Mr. Byers: Numeracy and literacy are at the centre of the Government's drive to raise standards in schools. The Numeracy Task Force was set up in May and is expected to publish a consultative report in January. The length and content of teaching time for mathematics in primary schools will be covered in the report.

Departmental Information

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the internal departmental guidance on the dissemination of information; and if he will make a statement. [16298]

Dr. Howells: The Department has no specific internal guidance about the dissemination of information but it has made available to its staff details of the Six Central Government Standards for correspondence, appointments, information, consultation, complaints and access. The third of these deals with providing information about services.

In general terms, the Department follows the Conventions of Central Government Publicity and Advertising in all of the information it makes available to the public via publicity materials and campaigns. It also follows the centrally agreed rules (currently being revised) for the Government Information Service when it supplies information to the media.

Finally, the Department's staff have been made aware of the requirements of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information to ensure openness.

Training (Road Haulage)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to safeguard training provision in the road haulage industry. [16679]

Dr. Howells: In July this year, the Road Haulage and Distribution Training Council was recognised by the Secretary of State as a National Training Organisation, one of a growing network of National Training Organisations currently being established. NTOs have the key responsibility for developing education and training arrangements in their sectors. TECs play a major role in the provision of training and contract with employers and training providers in that sector.

Out-of-school Hours Activities

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision has been made in the current year for out-of-school hours activities (a) in general and (b) by training and enterprise councils. [19107]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department makes funds available for after-school childcare under the Out of School Childcare Initiative (OSCI). The Initiative is delivered locally by Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) who have drawn up strategic plans which best meet the needs of their local labour market. For 1997–98 we made £4.1 million available under OSCI to create 7,200 new places.

We have made a further £50 million available for OSCI over the next five years as part of the £300 million investment in childcare announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. For 1998–99, this means that funding has more than doubled (from £4.1 million to £10.1 million) and will create 20,000 new places. The Initiative has already created some 78,000 places and offers parents, especially women, the opportunity to participate more fully in the labour market by increasing the supply of good quality, affordable out of school childcare.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the proposed arrangements to means test parents or spouses for the payment of tuition fees; what procedure will be adopted for parents or spouses of EU students; and if he will make a statement. [19185]

Dr. Howells: New entrants to higher education in 1998–99, including EU students, who are eligible for a mandatory award will be eligible for assistance with their fees if they are from a lower income family. A parental or spouse's contribution to the award will be assessed by the student's local education authority in accordance with the provisions in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations for 1998–99 which will be laid before Parliament in due course. The means test arrangements will be the same as for 1997–98, subject to any changes which may be needed to ensure that it applies properly to EU citizens, and will ensure that the assessed contribution will be no greater in real terms than this year.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's current estimate of the proportion of businesses which are exempted from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 due to the exemption under the legislation for employers with fewer than 20 employees. [19352]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Around 95 per cent. of private employers have fewer than 20 employees and are therefore exempt from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. There are also many businesses which have no employees and are therefore not covered by the Act's employment provisions.

On 3 December, I announced the beginning of a review of the exemption provision, including a wide-ranging consultation exercise.

School Sport

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements are in place for OFSTED to report to him on the range and quality of games offered as part of the PE curriculum. [19487]

Ms Estelle Morris: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on schools' compliance with the National Curriculum. This includes the National Curriculum for physical education, in which games is a compulsory area of activity for all five to 16 year-olds.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportions of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools are providing two hours or more per week for physical education; what proportions of (a) and (b) offer extra-curricular sport; and what is the average time spent on extra-curricular sport in (a) and (b). [19473]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected or held centrally.

Further Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the expenditure per student on capital projects within the further education sector for each year from 1978–79 to 1998–99. [17402]

Dr. Howells: It is not possible to give figures since 1978–79 on a comparable basis. The following figures show capital expenditure in £s per full-time equivalent student in further education in England since the establishment of the FE sector.

Academic years	[1]1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
FEFC funded	166	278	244

[1] The figure for 1993–94 relates to the 16 months April 1993–July 1994.

Student Funding

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give details of the support that will be available to students in England and Wales through mandatory awards and student loans in the academic year 1998–99. [20568]

Dr. Howells: The total level of support available to students through grant and loan together in 1998–99 will be 3 per cent. higher than for 1997–98 in line with forecast price increases. I am placing a Memorandum in the Library giving full details of the new grant, loan and fee rates for 1998–99. These rates will be incorporated in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations and the Education (Student Loans) Regulations to be laid before Parliament in due course.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the 1996–97 annual report of the President of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal will be published; and if he will make a statement. [20567]

Ms Estelle Morris: The report has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

I welcome the report. It demonstrates that the SEN Tribunal has achieved a great deal over the last year and has continued to meet and improve upon its targets for dealing with appeals.

The Tribunal provides a valuable and independent mechanism for considering appeals. It is to the credit of all those working for the Tribunal—the President, members and staff—that it has gained a reputation for fairness and impartiality, whilst also ensuring that its hearings are as informal as possible.

A great deal has been achieved over the three year life of the Tribunal and I am confident that it will continue to build on its excellent record.

General Teaching Councils

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if teachers working in the independent sector will be required to register with the appropriate general teaching council. [19851]

Mr. Byers: It will be open to teachers in independent schools who have Qualified Teacher Status to choose to register with the GTC but they will not be required to do so for the purposes of continued employment.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances (a) non-practising teachers and (b) retired teachers will be allowed to register with the GTC; and how he proposes to collect their fees. [19849]

Mr. Byers: Retired or non-practising teachers will be free to choose to register with the GTC, provided they have Qualified Teacher Status, but will not be required to do so. We shall look to the GTC, when established, to decide how their registration fees will be collected.

National Education Initiatives (Consultation)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on consultation with teachers at school level on the introduction of national education initiatives. [19992]

Mr. Byers: The Government recognises the key role teachers have to play in raising standards in schools. All major consultation documents have been sent to schools as well as to the teacher associations. They responded in kind: 1,800 teachers or groups of teachers responded to the White Paper "Excellence in schools".

Head Teachers (Professional Qualifications)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to involve existing head teachers in the new professional headship qualification; and if his Department will fund in full the training costs for existing head teachers. [19850]

Ms Estelle Morris: The National Professional Qualification for Headship (NPQH) is designed for aspiring head teachers rather than those already in post. We have asked the Teacher Training Agency to develop a separate training programme for existing head teachers, based on the same standards as the NPQH, for introduction from September 1998. Support for heads following the training programme will be available through the Standards fund at the normal 50 per cent. grant rate.

Nursery Places

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in providing nursery for four-year-olds. [19993]

Ms Estelle Morris: Seventy-nine Local Education Authorities have in place an interim Early Years Development Plan which demonstrates how, through partnership between the maintained, private and voluntary sectors, a free good quality early education place is available for all four year-olds whose parents want one. By April 1998 all will have Early Years Development Plans in place, showing how places for four-year-olds in their areas will be secured through partnership by September 1998.

DEFENCE

Defence Contracts

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about negotiations with the companies involved in the payment of commissions to Gordon Foxley relating to defence contracts. [20507]

Mr. Spellar: On 31 July 1997, Official Report, columns 466-67, I announced that a settlement had been reached with the second of the three companies involved in the Foxley case, Junghans GmbH of Germany, under which the company paid an agreed sum in redress to the Ministry of Defence. The company became eligible from that time to be considered for Ministry of Defence orders, but normal commercial relations were not to be resumed for some months while the operation of the agreement was monitored. I am pleased to report that the company has continued to co-operate fully with the MOD since that date, including provision of full access to their relevant accounting records, and has satisfied us in respect of its management arrangements and approach to future contracts. We have therefore decided to resume normal commercial relations with the company.

MOD officials have had positive discussions with Simmel, the other company involved in the Foxley case, against whom proceedings are still in train.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ministerial announcements have not been made, in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18894]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 3 December 1997]: All major policy announcements are made to Parliament first when it is sitting. Since 1 May, my Department has made over 50 announcements by Press Release, including some relating to public speeches and Parliamentary announcements. Press briefings are often held to give further explanation to an announcement. In some cases, the importance of the subject matter may not warrant the issue of a Parliamentary announcement, a press notice as well as a press briefing or mention in a speech.

Royal Yacht

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision he has reached on the future of Her Majesty's yacht Britannia. [20508]

Mr. George Robertson: I have decided that Britannia should be preserved for the wider public benefit, subject to the conclusion of satisfactory arrangements to safeguard her future appearance and use. Following an initial sift earlier this year on a wide range of proposals, seven very imaginative ideas have been considered in detail. I am grateful to all the organisations for their enthusiasm and hard work. Two proposals have been assessed as offering the best prospects for successful preservation, namely those for Edinburgh (Forth Ports plc) and Manchester (Peel Holdings plc). These two proposals stood out from all the rest with firm, costed plans for the appropriate preservation and care of Britannia, and finance already in place. Detailed discussions will begin on these with a view to a final decision in the Spring. Her Majesty the Queen has been kept closely advised.

RAF Quedgeley

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals his Department has for the future ownership of sites at RAF Quedgeley; and what is the current status of the development brief on options for the sites. [19688]

Mr. Spellar: RAF Quedgeley consists of several sites. The Main Site, is currently being advertised for sale inviting expressions of interest for the freehold on a Joint Venture basis. Gloucester City Council have identified the Main Site as being potentially suitable for redevelopment and are preparing a Planning Brief for the site and surrounding area. The brief will identify the opportunities and constraints for redevelopment.

The outlying sites, known as No. 2, 4 and 6 Sites, were marketed earlier this year. Site Nos 2 and 6 have been sold. We expect to exchange Contracts for Sale shortly in respect of Site No. 4.

British Army Weapons (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) number and (b) type of British Army weapons and of what description have been lost, stolen or otherwise unaccounted for in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years; how many of these weapons are believed to have fallen into the hands of (a) Republican and (b) Loyalist paramilitaries; and how many have been recovered subsequently. [19496]

Dr. Reid: The figures currently available relating to the numbers and types of British Army weapons lost, stolen or otherwise unaccounted for in each of the past 10 years is set out in the table below. These include the number of weapons believed to have fallen in the hands of (a) Republican and (b) Loyalist paramilitaries and the number of weapons recovered subsequently.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Athletics (Lottery Funds)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will consider using Lottery funds available for athletics to revive the British Athletics Federation or create a successor body. [19773]

Mr. Banks: UK Athletics 1998, an interim successor body to the British Athletics Federation, was announced on 28 November. The United Kingdom Sports Council is proposing to make a significant investment through its Exchequer funding to support the body during its envisaged 12 months' life. The Government welcomes the formation of this new body and very much hopes that the consultation process which the new body is to manage will be the first step to establishing the most effective structures for athletics in this country. I am pleased that the United Kingdom Sports Council has been able to assist with this process.

Professional Athletics Coaching

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to help the British Athletics Federation to extend professional athletics coaching throughout the country. [19772]

Mr. Banks: A grant of £1.46 million has been awarded to British athletics by the National Lottery Sports Fund for their World Class Performance Plan, an agreed development programme for 195 of our top athletes. This includes provision for the employment of a Performance Director and four Technical Directors, as well as support for 18 National Event Coaches. This will ensure that our top athletes have access to the professional coaching they need to achieve greater success on the world stage. A separate stand-alone company has been established to receive the Lottery Grant and manage the programmes set out in the World Class Performance Plan.

The British Athletics Federation is currently in administration following a High Court decision on 13 October to appoint Insolvency Practitioners to advise on its future administration. As part of the process for setting up a new governing body, the Trustees of its interim successor, UK Athletics 1998, will be examining how new structures for coach education can be established so that in future athletes at all levels receive appropriate coaching.

TREASURY

Duty Free

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the number of jobs in the UK directly related to the duty free sector and (b) the value of UK spirit sales in the duty free sector in (i) the UK and (ii) the rest of the EU in the last year for which figures are available. [19747]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Information requested is not available.

Income Tax

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 620–21, and 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 167, if he will model the effect on the number of people of working age who face combined marginal rates of withdrawal of tax, national insurance contributions and means-tested benefits of (a) under 50 per cent., (b) 50 to 59 per cent., (c) 60 to 69 per cent., (d) 70 to 79 per cent., (e) 80 to 89 per cent. and (f) 90 per cent. or above of introducing a 10 pence starting rate of income tax on (i) the first £1,000, (ii) the first £1,500 or (iii) the first £2,000 of taxable income if no other changes were made to the tax and benefit system. [19501]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 167.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress being made towards completion fo the Comprehensive Spending Review. [19938]

Mr. Darling: The Comprehensive Spending Review is proceeding in accordance with the timetable I indicated in my announcement on 11 June. I expect the Review to conclude next summer.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the timing of the production of Government expenditure plans from 1999–2000 onwards, in relation to the timing of the announcement of the results of the Comprehensive Spending Review. [19937]

Mr. Darling: The conclusions of the Comprehensive Spending Review will inform the new set of public expenditure plans for 1999–2000 onwards. The Review is on course to report next summer.

Economic Growth

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the medium-term trend rate of growth of the UK economy. [19956]

Mr. Darling: The recent Pre-Budget Report (Cm 3804) sets out some of the key elements of the Government's approach to raising the trend rate of growth of the economy. Appendix A of the report includes a separate section on trend growth (paragraphs A08–A16).

Growth and Inflation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the risks to the economic outlook for growth and inflation, as set out in the "Pre-Budget Report". [19934]

Mrs. Liddell: As an indication of the degree of uncertainty surrounding the economic outlook, table A3 of the Pre-Budget Report includes average errors in autumn forecasts over the past ten years.

Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the per cent. of GDP which will be accounted for by non-North Sea taxes and national insurance contributions in the financial year 2001–02; and if he will list the ratio for each year since 1975. [19931]

Dawn Primarolo: Figures for non-North Sea taxes and social security contributions as a percentage of non-North Sea GDP from 1970–71 to 1998–99 were given in table B9 of the Pre-Budget Report. Projection for later years are as follows:

1999–2000: 37.7

2000–2001: 38.1

2001–2002: 38.5

Departmental Receipts

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the use by departments of monies realised by disposal of surplus departmental assets; if departmental spending plans will be adjusted by the Treasury to offset such receipts; and if he will make a statement. [19952]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the measures set out in my answer of 24 November to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) when I announced the publication of the National Asset Register on 24 November, Official Report, columns. 359–60.

Incontinence Products (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department first published its intention to apply the standard rate of VAT to incontinence products. [19716]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The wholesale supply of incontinence products has been standard-rated since 1973. Supplies have been zero-rated since 1984 when made direct to handicapped persons, but this relief has been manipulated as part of an avoidance scheme designed to gain a tax advantage. The Value Added Tax (Drugs, Medicines and Aids for the Handicapped) Order 1997, laid before Parliament on 18 November 1997, has restored the position.

Supplies of incontinence products remain VAT-free to the user, either under the NHS or as part of healthcare in the private sector.

VAT (Health Service)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he undertook and representations he received concerning the proposals in the Value Added Tax (Drugs, Medicine and Aids for the Handicapped) Order 1997 (S.I., 1997, No. 2744). [18977]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 December 1997]: The Order addresses a number of tax avoidance arrangements. Full consultations were therefore not undertaken. However, this Government announced its intention to legislate on 13 August 1997. Customs conducted very limited consultation, including with the health Departments. The Order was amended following their comments.

Statistics

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will restate Table B4 of Cm 3804 to show for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 updated figures based on the accounting definitions and measurement conventions of the previous plans as published in Cm 3601. [19265]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The following table shows table B4 of Cm 3804, the Pre-Budget Report, based on the accounting definitions and measurement conventions used in Cm 3601, Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1997–98.

General Government expenditure

£ billion

	Outturn 1996–97	Estimate 1997–98	Forecast 1998–99
Control Total	260.6	266.5	274.2
Welfare to Work spending	—	0.2	1.2
LA spending under the capital receipts initiative	—	0.2	0.7
Cyclical social security	14.0	12.7	13.5
Central government debt interest	22.0	24.6	25.0
Accounting adjustments	10.8	9.8	10.3
GGE(X)	307.4	314.0	324.8

General Government expenditure

£ billion

	Outturn 1996–97	Estimate 1997–98	Forecast 1998–99
Privatisation proceeds	–4.4	–2.0	0.0
Other adjustments	5.2	6.1	6.6
GGE	308.1	318.1	331.4

There are three differences as compared with the table published in the Pre-Budget Report:

(i) The full receipt from the student loanbook sale (including the capitalised value of future subsidies) is scored as reducing general government expenditure (GGE) in 1997–98 and 1998–99;

(ii) Local authority debt interest payments ultimately financed by the housing element of the central government housing subsidy are included in the Control Total;

(iii) Certain licence fee receipts are excluded from the Control Total.

These differences do not affect the PSBR.

The Control Total figure for 1998–99 reflects the decision not to proceed with the commutation of £4.5 billion of local authorities housing debt to central government that was assumed in the 1997–98 FSBR. The commutation was cancelled because it would have had a net cost to the government and the PSBR, mainly because of administrative costs, and because it had no merits in terms of housing policy. However, it appeared to reduce public spending because of an anomaly in the old definition of the Control Total which scored both the subsidy paid to local authorities' housing revenue accounts by central government and the interest payments by local authorities that the subsidy financed. As the Pre-Budget Report announced, this double counting has now been removed from the Control total.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an expanded version of table B4 of Cm 3804 to show (a) a disaggregation of the Control Total in each year by Department as in table 1.2 of Cm 3601, but adjusting for machinery of government and classification changes, and separately identifying releases from the Reserve for 1997–98 and 1998–99, (b) the use of windfall tax proceeds for uses other than Welfare to Work spending and (c) lottery-financed spending separately from other adjustments identified in the reconciliation of GGE(X) and GGE. [19266]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The following table shows the figures for table B4, with the departmental elements of the Control Total and lottery-financed spending identified separately. Differences from previous plans, which are allocations from and benefits to the Reserve, are identified separately for 1997–98 and 1998–99. Further details on these changes are set out in the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms). Figures for spending financed by the windfall tax were set out in table 2.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report July 1997, HC85.

[1] After adjusting plans published in the Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses, Cm 3601, for the effects of classification and transfer changes, including a switch of £530 million from the Department for Education and Employment to the DETR Local Government programme for Nursery Vouchers and a switch of £350 million from the DETR Local Government programme to the Department of Health for Community Care, both in 1998–99. There is a real terms income in overall provision for education in 1998–99.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table, revising table S2.6 of the Pre-Budget publication, The Economy and the Public Finances; Supplementary Material, to show (a) changes between the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98 and FSBR July 1997, (b) changes between FSBR July 1997 and the Pre-Budget Report November 1997 and (c) changes between FSBR 1997–98 and the Pre-Budget Report: November 1997. Mr. Darling [holding answer 8 December 1997]: Table A shows the changes between the 1997–98 FSBR (published in November 1996) and the July 1997 FSBR. Table B gives changes between the July 1997 FSBR and the November 1997 Pre-Budget Report. Changes between the 1997–98 FSBR and the November 1997 Pre-Budget Report are given in table C.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the table 6.4 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97 for the Private Finance Initiative, to show (a) outturns for each year from 1990–91 to 1995–96, (b) a comparison of the table 6.4 projections with outturns for 1996–97 and (c) comparisons of table 6.4 projections with current projections for 1997–98 and 1998–99. [19267]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 8 December 1997]: Table 1 shows latest figures for publicly sponsored capital expenditure. The differences between the latest figures and the projections for 1996–97 to 1998–99 shown in both the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97 (published in November 1995) and the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98 (published in November 1996) are given in table 2.

[2] Outturn figures for 1996–97 are not yet final and will be subject to revision.
[3] The figure for local authority capital spending in 1997–98 corrects that used in preparing figures for the Pre-Budget Report. Cm 3804, which was £0.3 billion too high. The figure for net capital spending in Table B1 of the Pre-Budget Report is therefore inconsistent with the figure shown here for public sector capital expenditure net of depreciation.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of tax loss resulting from value-shifting within the travel industry and the basis on which the tax loss has been estimated. [19664]

Dawn Primarolo: The evidence to date suggests that the higher rate of insurance premium tax has prevented any tax loss from value shifting in all those business sectors where it has been applied.

Music Industry

Mr. Collins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the representatives of the United Kingdom music industry he has met in his official capacity since 1 May. [18330]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I meet a wide range of people from all industries in the course of my duties as Chancellor, but since I became Chancellor I have not met a delegation specifically from the music industry.

"Financial Statement and Budget Report"

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish updated versions of tables 5A.4 and 5A.5 from the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98". [19125]

Mr. Darling: The attached tables are an update of the tables included in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. The figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are based on the plans announced in November 1996 and revised to take account of any announced changes in spending plans including the Summer Winter Supplementary Estimates.

These figures include:

the £1.2 billion allocated to the NHS and the £1 billion allocated to schools for 1998–99 in the July Budget.

the additional £300 million for patient services in the NHS for this year announced in October.

the extra £190 million provision this year and next for pensioners' fuel bills announced in the Pre Budget Report.

the effect of the abolition of nursery vouchers and the transfer of money to local authorities to fund their early year development plans.

There are no figures for new plans for 1999–2000 and beyond as new plans will not be set until the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

In addition we have allocated substantial funds outside the Control Total; over £5 billion for the Welfare to Work programme and for investment in housing. the expected spending in 1997–98 and 1998–99 is shown in the following table. We have also announced a change in allocations from the National Lottery; £1 billion will be allocated over the next four years for the Government's priorities of health and education including spending on out of school activities and on National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts.

[1] Education

The £1 billion provided for schools in 1998–99 in the Budget has been added to support for local authorities and appear in the figures for DETR—Local Government, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Education SSA line shows central government's provision for a nominal "standard level of service" in education. The amount of money is a broad indicator of local authority spending on education; the final decisions are made by individual local authorities. The Education SSA line includes the 1998–99 money transferred to DETR—LG following the abolition of nursery vouchers.

The spending plans for the Department of Education and Employment are reduced on 1997–98 and 1998–99 by the expected proceeds from sales of student loans (£1.6 billion in each year). The apparent reduction in spending between 1997–98 and 1998–99 principally consists of transfers to other departments including DETR—Local Government and DSS. There is a real terms increase in overall provision for education in 1998–99.

[2] Further EYF Take-up

This is the Treasury estimate of likely further take-up by departments before the end of 1997–98 of unspent provision carried forward from last year under the end-year flexibility rules. Some £450 million of EYF has already been taken up in the Winter Supplementary Estimates and is included in the departmental totals.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update Table 6.5 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97 to show comparisons of the outturns with Table 6.5 estimates for 1996–97, and comparisons of current estimates for 1997–98 and 1998–99 with such estimates for these years as appeared in Table 6.5 (FSBR 1996–97). [19268]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The Government is wholly committed to PFI, and has wasted no time putting into place the changes needed to revitalise the initiative. Following consultation with PFI practitioners, Malcolm Bates' review identified a number of areas that warranted attention, and the Government has acted quickly to issue guidance and help from the centre, to encourage departments to set realistic priorities, to work on establishing standard templates to reduce the need for repetition of effort, and to put in place legislation to facilitate the flow-through of contracts in the health and local authority sectors. We are already seeing positive results, with contracts signed for two major hospitals, and education establishments at Clarendon College and Colfox School in Dorset.

This table is compiled every six months. The latest version, set out below, represents the latest figures that have been collected centrally. These are estimates, and not targets to be met at any price. The Government's priority is to conclude good value for money projects. We are also promoting a wide range of other public-private partnerships, many of which would not be captured by this table:

Company Vehicles

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide tax relief on the use of company minibuses where they are used to reduce the use of private cars by employees; and if he will make a statement. [19243]

Dawn Primarolo: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Unemployment Figures

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will change the method of collating unemployment figures to that which was used in 1979. [19965]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 10 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on the method of collating unemployment figures.

ONS uses the International Labour Organisation (ILO) measure of unemployment, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey (LFS), and counts as unemployed people who are: (a) without a paid job; (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. The LFS has used the ILO measure since 1984. Prior to this a slightly different definition was used. This included people who were without a paid job who were looking for work in the reference week, or prevented from seeking work by temporary sickness or holiday, or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained or were waiting for the results of a job application. Full-time students who were seeking work but who were not available to start work in the next two weeks because they had to complete their education were excluded. The LFS moved over to the ILO measure because it is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis and the ONS does not intend to revert to the earlier definition.

Since October 1983, the ONS has also published the monthly claimant count, which is based on the administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits) at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. Essentially, all people who attend an Employment Service office to sign on the designated day are counted.

No official estimates are available for current claimant count under any previous coverage as no information is available on how many people would be registered unemployed now, on the basis of old procedures which no longer exist. The effects of changes in the coverage of the monthly claimant count vary over time. Attempting to calculate their effects today would involve speculative estimates about economic, demographic and other factors.

Methadone (Deaths)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths have been attributed to methadone in each region of the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [19015]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Brian Iddon, dated 10 December 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent parliamentary question on deaths attributed to methadone.

The number of deaths in the United Kingdom for which methadone was mentioned on the death certificate are given in the table below, for 1993 to 1996.

The deaths included correspond to those with an underlying cause of death of drug dependence, nondependent abuse of drugs, accidental poisoning, suicidal poisoning or poisoning undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted.

The figures include deaths attributed to methadone in combination with other drugs. In some cases, therefore, the deaths may not be directly or solely due to methadone.

Deaths involving methadone in each region in the United Kingdom, 1993–1996

	1993	1994	1995	1996
North	3	3	19	15
Yorkshire and Humberside	16	28	26	33

Scotland	25	55	58	101
Northern Ireland	0	0	0	0
Non-resident	1	2	3	7
Total	241	311	352	452

Note: Since 1993, the ONS has coded all diseases, injuries, drugs, operations and external causes mentioned on death certificates for England and Wales. This information is held electronically and we were able to extract data from 1993 to 1996. Comparable figures for years prior to 1993 could only be produced at disproportionate cost. A revised system for collecting information on drug-related deaths in Scotland was introduced in 1994. It is likely that the increase in numbers since 1993 is in part due to better information being provided by this new system.

Self-assessment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what criteria individuals were selected for self-assessment for income tax purposes; and how many people were so selected. [19335]

Dawn Primarolo: In broad terms, tax returns are issued to the self employed (including business partners), trustees, directors, employees liable to pay higher rate tax and some other employees with more complex affairs. Around nine million 1996–97 tax returns have been issued.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the United Kingdom joining EMU on funds invested in private pension provision in the United Kingdom. [18988]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, made it clear in his statement of 27 October that, whether the UK is in or out of EMU, the Government's assessment is that the financial services industry, including the pensions industry, has the potential to thrive as long as it is properly prepared.

Ministerial Interests

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the Paymaster General's press statement of 29 November (1) if the Orion Trust owns properties (a) in France, (b) in Italy and (c) elsewhere abroad which are used by the Paymaster General; [19007]

(2) if he will list the trustees of the Orion Trust; when it was established; and what assets it possessed in the United Kingdom at that time; [19005]

(3) if the Paymaster General receives regular payments from the Orion Trust; [19714]

(4) if the Paymaster General receives any benefits in kind from the Orion Trust. [19750]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answers 4, 8 and 9 December 1997]: The Paymaster General has issued a detailed statement, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue has agreed the tax returns in which the Paymaster General reported the sale to the Orion Trust of shares that arose from the rights issue by Trans Tec. [19719]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The position under successive Governments has been that the law on taxpayer confidentiality prevents the Inland Revenue from disclosing any information relating to the tax affairs of any particular taxpayer.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he took to ensure that no conflict of interest arose as a result of the Paymaster General's role in sponsoring the working group on the financing of high technology companies and his beneficial interest in Trans Tec plc. [19112]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The report of the working group on high-tech companies is being prepared for me and the President of the Board of Trade as part of our wide-ranging look at ways of improving the UK's record of investment in R and D.

Offshore Trusts

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax treatment of capital gains on shares held for a United Kingdom beneficiary in an offshore trust in Guernsey. [19006]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The tax treatment is set out in Section 86 and Schedule 5 of the Taxation of chargeable Gains Act 1992.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Paymaster General (a) receives papers and (b) participates in meetings relating to taxation of offshore trusts and the closing of tax loopholes. [19004]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 December 1997]: I consult widely with colleagues on a variety of policy issues but any decisions are made by me.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the Paymaster General has been involved in policy discussions relating to the taxation of offshore trusts. [19002]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 December 1997]: Wide ranging reviews of taxation issues are currently under way. The results of these reviews will be announced to Parliament in the usual way.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the current Inland Revenue review of tax avoidance measures will cover the use of discretionary trusts set up by foreign nationals for the benefit of United Kingdom residents. [19111]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The present tax treatment of offshore trusts is being considered in the wide ranging review of areas of tax which I announced in my Budget Statement.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the advantages of extending legal aid eligibility to recipients of (a) incapacity benefit at the long-term rate and (b) severe disablement allowance. [19857]

Mr. Hoon: The recently announced proposals for the reform of the legal aid scheme are aimed at controlling expenditure. It is only when spending is under better control that we can consider extending the number of benefits which automatically qualify an applicant for legal aid.

Recipients of the benefits mentioned are not excluded from the legal aid scheme. However, they do not automatically qualify. Since the award of these benefits is not means tested a financial assessment must be undertaken before legal aid can be granted.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Presidency (Environment)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in relation to environmental issues in respect of the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Union. [19945]

Mr. Fatchett: FCO and DETR Ministers and officials are in contact with a wide range of interests to discuss environmental aspects of the UK Presidency. These include governments of other EU Member States, members of the European Parliament and representatives of business and Non-Governmental Organisations. It will be an important theme of the UK Presidency to make progress on environmental issues which have a direct impact on people's lives in Europe.

India (P and O)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the proposed port development by P and O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India. [19913]

Mr. Fatchett: This and other Government Departments have received a number of letters on this subject.

Indonesia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his Answer of 23 July 1997, Official Report, column 604, if his Department has (a) completed the study into the alleged use of United Kingdom supplied water-cannons in Indonesia in summer 1996 and (b) reached any conclusions. [19741]

Mr. Fatchett: One or more British water-cannon may well have been used in incidents at Bandung in June 1996, but the exact circumstances are not clear. The findings of our extensive enquiries into this and other incidents are inconclusive. But the Indonesians are well aware of our concerns.

Caribbean Dependent Territories

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policies for the Caribbean Dependent Territories. [18442]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We remain committed to the prosperity, well-being, good government and defence of the Caribbean Dependent Territories for as long as the Territories wish to maintain the link with the United Kingdom. This will be one of the underlying principles of the review of policy towards the Dependent Territories which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 27 August.

Child Labour

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the alleged sale of children from Bangladesh to the United Arab Emirates. [20001]

Mr. Fatchett: I asked our Embassy in Abu Dhabi to look carefully into recent media reports of young children from Bangladesh and other countries being sold into employment as camel jockeys in the UAE. They have been unable to substantiate these allegations of trafficking. I have asked them to continue to monitor the situation closely.

In 1993, the UAE Government prohibited the employment of children under 15 as jockeys (as well as of jockeys weighing less than 45 kilograms). The UAE Camel Racing Association is responsible for enforcing these regulations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Information

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Attorney-General what was the aggregate amount spent by his Department and its agencies during 1996–97 on (a) advertising, (b) public relations, (c) promotions, (d) public information campaigns, (e) press and information services and (f) market research and opinion polls. [19164]

The Attorney-General: During 1996–97 my departments and agencies (namely the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Government Property Lawyers Agency, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office) spent the following amounts under the heads described:

(a) £3,037
(b) £4,818
(c) £189,169
(d) Nil
(e) £21,218
(f) £458

The figures at (a) do not include advertising costs associated with recruitment to fill particular posts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Portcullis House

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee when construction of Portcullis House will begin on the site above the new Westminster underground station; and if he will make a statement. [20117]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Since my predecessor as Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, the hon. Member for Ogmore (Sir R. Powell), last reported to the House on 20 March 1997, Official Report column 686, good progress has been made by our designers and contractors. However, we have had to wait 11 months longer than London Underground Ltd. promised for its Jubilee Line Extension works at Westminster Station to be completed to an acceptable standard, so that construction on our site above the new station could start. On 13 October 1997 London Underground Limited made part of the site available so that the House's contractor could start preliminary work, and it is planned that our contractor will occupy further parts of the site, sufficient for the main construction to begin, on 5 January 1998.

When complete, Portcullis House will dramatically reduce the pressure on parliamentary accommodation and in particular it will help to relieve the severe overcrowding in the Palace of Westminster. It will provide offices for over two hundred Members and their staff; with six select committee rooms, two of which can be used flexibly in the manner of the Jubilee Room and one of which is equipped for simultaneous interpretation. There will also be eight conference rooms, a library, a vote office, exhibition space, appropriate refreshment facilities, a post office and a necessities shop.

The project remains on budget: £250 million including an allowance for forecast construction price inflation up to the year 2000. The figure includes the purchase of the site, all fees and expenses, furnishing and fitting out costs, and VAT. The total also includes the additional committee accommodation, security aspects, data and communications facilities which the House of Commons Commission agreed should be added to the brief.

The House commissioned the architects, Michael Hopkins and Partners to produce a building, designed for a life of 200 years or more, using materials of high quality including natural stone, bronze and English oak, as befits a site of international importance. The structural engineers, Ove Arup and Partners, have had to resolve complex design issues to span the building over the District and Circle lines and the Jubilee Line extension, and to accommodate special security requirements. Our construction managers, Laing Management Limited, also face a most demanding engineering task in assembling this unique structure and commissioning the building. Manufacture of components is now proceeding satisfactorily to meet requirements of the programme, and it is planned that the House will be able to occupy the building from the beginning of 2001.

WALES

Immunisation

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to ensure that children whose parents refuse to have them immunised are registered with local GP practices; [18621]

(2) if he will make a statement on the number of GPs in Wales refusing to register children whose parents choose not to have them immunised. [18622]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Every patient has a right to be registered with a GP. Health Authorities have a statutory responsibility to ensure that patients resident in their administrative area have adequate access to general medical services. Health Authorities have the power to allocate patients to GPs in exceptional circumstances where no GP is willing to take them on.

Information on the number of GPs refusing to register children whose parents choose not to have them immunised is not available. This is because GPS are not obliged to give their reasons for refusing to register patients or to notify their Health Authority of the overall number involved. However, information relating to number of patients removed from GPs' lists is collected. Reasons for removal vary and include an act or threat of violence against a GP, a breakdown in the GP/patient relationship and patients themselves requesting a transfer to another GP. In 1995–96, 2,913 patients were removed from GP lists in Wales (out of a total patient registration of nearly 3 million). A breakdown of this figure is attached. The General Medical Council has signalled clearly that it is unprofessional for any GP to discriminate against patients.

Patients removed from GP lists—1995–96

	Number
Patients transferred at their own request	35
Patients transferred at the request of a GP	2,830
Patients removed from a GP's list because of an act or threat of violence	48
Total	2,913

Montserration Evacuees

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements will be put in place to assist local authorities in Wales that provide accommodation for evacuees from Montserrat. [20456]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions announced on 29 October 1997, Official Report, column 817, that a special Grant Scheme would operate in England. I can confirm that a similar scheme will operate in Wales.

A special grant will be provided under the Local Government Finance Act 1988, and we intend to submit a report for the House's approval early next year. Officials in the Welsh Office will write today to Chief Executives and Chief Housing Officers of Welsh local authoritie setting out details of the scheme and arrangements for making claims. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library. Subject to the approval of the House, £1,500 will be made available for each unit of accommodation provided for qualifying households placed with local authorities by the Home Office between 27 August 1997 and 31 January 1998. The grants scheme has been drawn up after consultation with the Welsh Local Government and Tai Cymru.

Finance

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for allocating the Welsh Block provision in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [20457]

Mr. Ron Davies: In 1998–99, the Welsh Office budget will amount to over £7.1 billion. This provision is based on plans set by the previous administration. The Government took the view that it would not be sensible to make hasty decisions about changing existing public expenditure plans. We do not want to put money into areas where the objectives are unclear and the outputs uncertain. Instead, we are conducting a Comprehensive Spending Review of public expenditure across all Government Departments. In Wales, the Review is well underway and I expect it to be completed in the spring of 1998. This will help to ensure that we are better equipped to make informed judgments of where to target public expenditure to meet our priorities and achieve the best results. It will provide a sound basis for the Assembly to set its own priorities. In the meantime, we have recognised that there are some sectors which require immediate help and that is why we have made additional provision for health and education.

In a written answer to a question tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Gower (Mr. Caton) Official Report, 2 December 1997, columns 117–20 I have already announced the provisional settlement for local government. I have now allocated the remainder of the Welsh Block resources and the major elements are set out in the following table. It is my intention to discuss the details of the allocation at a sitting of the Welsh Grand Committee on 16 December.

In the consultation document which I issued on 27 October, I made it clear there would be difficult decisions to make. The plans which I inherited have left little scope for manoeuvre. As a consequence, while I have been able to redistribute some cash this inevitably means those programmes which gain do so at the expense of others.

For the NHS, I have allocated £2,455 million which is an increase of over £113 million or 4.9 per cent. in cash terms over 1997–98. This will provide real growth on health authority revenue allocations which will be announced soon.

I have increased the plans I inherited for the Education Sector. In addition to the £65 million extra announced for schools in the July budget, the reallocations I have made to my Block enables me to provide £175 million for the Further Education Funding Council which will provide for an increase of 2,100 students on the original plan for 1998–99. £232 million is provided for the Higher Education Funding Council which will give an extra 1,000 students over the original planning figure.

Although the Training and Enterprise budget shows a reduction from the current plans, this should be seen in the context of the range of measures which have been introduced to help unemployed people. Under these "New Deal" arrangements I expect Wales to benefit by around £190 million during the lifetime of this Parliament.

For Industry programmes, I have made provision to meet the forecast demand for Regional Selective Assistance.

I have looked closely at the budgets of all the quangos in Wales. I have taken particular interest in those which will form the Economic Powerhouse, and collectively, I have increased the amount of grant-in-aid available to these bodies to take account of the fall in the level of receipts that they will be able to generate. This will allow for a total gross programme of the combined bodies of £185 million.

Although there is a reduction in the overall provision for Roads and Transport, I am able to allow a start on some integrated transport schemes.

In the housing sector, I have allocated sufficient funding to housing associations so as to allow around 2,300 new homes to be started next year which is an increase of 500 over the plans I inherited.

I have maintained spending on the Arts bodies.

For all the other bodies which receive funding from the Welsh Office I have retained the same provision as planned, although I have increased the budget for the Countryside Council for Wales to help it progress the new agri-environmental programme.

I have also provided a sum of £17 million to enable suitable accommodation to be obtained to house the National Assembly of Wales.

Further to my announcement of the proposals for local government revenue spending for 1998–99 on 2 December, my officials have today written to all Welsh councils setting out my proposals for capping and council tax damping. The letter also gives councils details of their provisional standard spending assessment or SSAs—the amount included in my expenditure plans (total standard spending) for their individual spending.

My capping proposals will enable Welsh councils overall to increase 1997–98 budgets by around £125 million or over 4.6 per cent., if they see fit to do so. Each authority will have a 3 per cent. basic increase in its budget. In addition they will each receive a share of the £26.5 million I am making available for community care, education for 4-year-olds and the National Grid for Learning. Around half of Welsh authorities will also benefit from the "passporting" of year-on-year SSA increases which are greater than the cash increase they receive under the 3 per cent. basic increase.

Within each authority's SSA I propose to identify the sums relating to the extra £50 million I am providing for schools; the $41.5 million (which includes the £37.1 million in returned nursery voucher money) which I am making available for 4 year olds education; and community care.

In my Answer of 2 December I said that the increased discretion my capping proposals give local authorities mean that the average band D council tax could rise by £60. I also emphasised the need for local authorities to take full account of the impact on council taxpayers in using their discretion. My hope is that the average band D increase will not exceed £50-or one pound per week.

I accept, however, that there will be variations in tax increase between authorities, and for this reason I am proposing a community-based council tax reduction scheme for 1998–99 which will ensure that no council taxpayer faces an increase at band D of more than £70. For the majority of people, who live in properties in bands A to C the increase will be less—slightly over £1 a week for those living in bands B and C; under £1 a week for those in band A properties.

I am making £31 million available within aggregate external finance to fund the tax reduction scheme. This includes £6 million extra I am providing specifically for damping.

General Teaching Council

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons the General Teaching Council for Wa es will not be set up simultaneously with the General Teaching Council for England. [19848]

Mr. Hain: Clause 1 of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill will allow for the establishment of a General Teaching Council for England and Wales and Clause 6 allows for the establishment of the General Teaching Council for Wales as and when the Secretary of State decides. The Welsh Council could be set up at the same time as the English one or at a later date. In deciding when it should be established, the Secretary of State will take account of the emerging constitutional changes affecting the governance of Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Green Belt (Hertfordshire)

7. Mr. Wells: To ask the Prime Minister if he will review the measures to protect the green belt contained in the proposed Hertfordshire county structure plan revision. [18457]

The Prime Minister: We are committed both to protecting the countryside and to regenerating our towns and cities. Policy on the Green Belt remains unchanged. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will consider the proposed modifications to the Hertfordshire County Council's Structure Plan, which are open to public objection until 16 January 1998.

North-West Leicestershire

9. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when he next intends to visit North-West Leicestershire. [18460]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the hon. Member's constituency, but will continue to visit all regions of the country.

Meirionnydd Nant Conwy

12. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to visit the constituency of Meirionnydd Nant Conwy. [18463]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the hon. Member's constituency at the present time.

Sanctions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral statement of the Secretary of State for International Development of 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 328, what steps he has taken to ensure that sanctions affect elites more than poor people in (a) Iraq and (b) Libya. [18648]

The Prime Minister: The impact of sanctions regimes on poor people is under review by the Department for International Development. In the context of Iraq DFID officials have visited northern Iraq, and are studying the 180 day report of the Secretary General, issued on 1 December, on the implementation of UN Security Council Resolutions 986 and 1111 in order to improve the effectiveness of the humanitarian assistance provided under those arrangements in helping meet the needs of Iraqi people. The vast majority of Libya's exports and imports are unaffected by sanctions.

Heads of State (Gifts)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how much has been spent from public funds in respect of gifts given by (a) the Queen and (b) other members of the Royal Family to heads of state in the last year for which figures are available; and how many gifts such funding supported. [19789]

The Prime Minister: During 1997 The Queen has given 4 gifts to Heads of State at a total cost of £11,734.99. Other members of the Royal Family have to date given 13 gifts to Heads of State at a total cost of £4,233.23.

Security Services (Commissioner)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what arrangements have been made to appoint a Commissioner under section 4 of the Security Service Act 1989 when Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's appointment expires on 14 December; [20453]

(2) what arrangements have been made to appoint a Commissioner under section 8 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994 when Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's appointment expires on 14 December. [20454]

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Stuart-Smith has accepted re-appointment for a further two years until 13 December 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service Management

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the Government's response to the Home Affairs Committee report into the management of the Prison Service (Second Report of Session 1996–97 HC57). [20455]

Mr. Straw: I am pleased to report that I will tomorrow publish the Government's response to the Home Affairs Select Committee's inquiry report into the management of the Prison Service. Copies will be placed in the Library.

I am grateful for the Committee's report, and have studied its conclusions and recommendations carefully. I agree with the Committee's conclusion that the Prison Service has done well to manage a rapidly rising prison population and, against this background, has made considerable progress in providing acceptable accommodation for prisoners. The Government accept in principle the desirability of reducing the present high levels of overcrowding, although the Audit of Prison Service Resources, published on 25 July, shows that this will be difficult to achieve in the current circumstances. In the meantime, it will be a priority for the Prison Service to seek to provide adequate regime activities for those prison which are overcrowded. In order to ensure that the projected numbers can be accommodated safely, I have provided the Prison Service with an additional £43 million this year and next to increase capacity and to pay for the costs of overcrowding and purposeful activity. Longer term resourcing issues will be considered as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

The Committee's conclusions that the needs for accountability and responsibility require Ministerial involvement are correct, and support the steps I have already taken to implement the Government's manifesto commitment to take proper Ministerial responsibility for the Prison Service. I have made clear that there are no present plans to end the Prison Service's agency status. I have considered and endorsed the findings of the Director General's organisational review of the Service, published on 10 November, which included measures to re-assert and reinforce Ministerial responsibility for the Prison Service.

The Committee also endorses the role of the private sector, and recommends that its involvement in the Prison Service should be allowed to develop further. The Government have expressed reservations about the principle of contracting out the management of prisons. It is generally accepted that responsibility for the incarceration of offenders must remain with the state. As I explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedford (Mr. Hall) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, columns 247–49, the issue is whether that responsibility should, as a matter of principle, be discharged through direct management in the public sector or whether it can properly and effectively be discharged under a regulatory framework. The Government will give careful consideration to the conclusions put forward by the Home Affairs Select Committee before settling their overall approach to this issue.

Animal Experiments

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his Answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 284, if additional funds have been secured for research into alternatives to animal use in scientific procedures. [20615]

Mr. George Howarth: I am pleased to announce that the budget which will be made available to the Animal Procedures Committee on 1998–99 to sponsor research to reduce, refine or replace animal experiments will be £259,000. This is an increase of £77,000 compared to the 1997–98 figures.

Prison Service (Health Care)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) doctors and (b) other staff currently working in the Prison Service have undergone recognised training courses in dealing with mentally disordered offenders. [19292]

Ms Quin: Fourteen doctors (8 per cent.) are members of the Royal College of Psychiatrists. Since 1 April 1997, 63 doctors (32 per cent.) attended two Mental Health training days organised by the Prison Service. These courses have received recognition from the Postgraduate Education Offices of the Regional Health Authorities. In addition, 20 doctors are currently studying for a Diploma in Prison Medicine which has a significant training element in dealing with mentally disordered offenders.

A further 332 other members of staff are Registered Mental Nurses, representing 21 per cent. of the total Health Care Officer and Nursing grades.

Prison Suicides

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of (a) female prisoners held, (b) female deaths in prison and (c) female suicides in prison in each of the last 10 years. [19835]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The following table shows the numbers of female prisoners held, female deaths (other than self-inflicted) in prison and female self-inflicted deaths in prison in each of the last 10 years.

Year	Female[1] prisoners held	Female deaths	Female self-inflicted deaths	Total female deaths
1989	1,767	0	2	2
1990	1,597	1	1	2
1991	1,561	0	0	0
1992	1,577	0	2	2
1993	1,561	2	1	3
1994	1,811	0	1	1
1995	1,979	1	2	3
1996	2,262	2	2	4
1997[2]	2,926	1	3	4

[1] Average female prisoner population.
[2] Figures as at 8 December 1997.
Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each financial year since 1992–93 and for the present year to date (a) the total number of suicides in establishments which are his responsibility and (b) the numbers of those who were aged under 21 years at the time of death. [18841]

Ms Quin: The total number of self-inflicted deaths in Prison Service establishments for each financial year since 1992–93 and for the present year to date, together with the numbers of those who were aged under 21 years at the time of death, are as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	[1]1997–98
Total number of self-inflicted deaths	43	47	65	59	65	50
Numbers of prisoners who were aged under 21 years	6	4	8	7	16	5

[1] Figures for 1997–98 as at 1 December 1997. Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has undertaken into (a) prison suicides and (b) female prison suicides in the last five years. [19838]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: During 1992, the Prison Service reviewed existing research and best practice in suicide prevention. This review formed the basis for the revised suicide awareness strategy and is described in "The Way Forward".

The revised strategy was piloted in 1993 prior to implementation in 1994. The results of this research were published in the Guidance Pack "Caring for the Suicidal in Custody".

A research and development group on suicide and self-injury at Prison Service headquarters acts as a forum for formulating and co-ordinating research into suicide and self-injury in forensic settings.

Routine research, reviewing patterns and trends of completed suicides is undertaken, and a range of research has been conducted, including: the effectiveness of prisoner Listener schemes; the effect of staff attitudes in managing suicidal behaviour; audits of completed suicides; suicides amongst life sentence prisoners; developing risk screening procedures amongst young offenders; evaluation of the 1994 revised strategy; the impact of staff training; reception and induction procedures within local prisons and communication of risk information between criminal justice agencies. Current commissioned research includes a project being undertaken at the University of Kent at Canterbury, examining current practices of recording and monitoring self-injury and suicidal behaviours, with the objective of identifying more effective methods of management.

The majority of research conducted on suicide and self-injury amongst female prisoners has been undertaken locally and includes research into the links between coping styles and suicidal behaviour; an evaluation of cognitive behavioural interventions in reducing risk of suicide; an examination of the distinctions between staff and women prisoners' perceptions of self-injury and a review of completed suicides by female prisoners since 1989.

The 1997 publication "Suicide and Self-Injury in Prisons" (by the British Psychological Society) includes an overview of recent and current research in the area.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms he has in place to provide suicide counselling and monitoring for female prisoners. [19836]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The Prison Service is actively involved in identifying and caring for all prisoners, both female and male, who are at risk of suicide and/or self-harm. Their strategy on caring for the suicidal in custody involves being able to identify and support prisoners at risk of suicidal behaviour. Every prison has a local Suicide Awareness Team which has oversight of the strategy in their establishment.

The strategy involves the Samaritans, who befriend prisoners in crisis through visits to prison and by phone. Over the last five years, the Samaritans have been actively involved in setting up Listener/Befriender schemes in prisons where selected prisoners are trained to provide peer group support for fellow prisoners in crisis. These schemes have been effective in reducing instances of suicide and self-harm

Female Prisoners

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of detaining convicted and remand female prisoners in the same prison. [19830]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: It is Prison Service policy to detain convicted and unconvicted female prisoners in the same prison to enable them, on their return from court, to await transfer to a training prison, to serve a short sentence, to be held close to their homes and, for those facing further charges, to remain near the courts.

This does not necessarily mean that unconvicted prisoners should mix with convicted prisoners, unless they are willing to do so. At most local prisons, however, overcrowding prevents complete separation and some mixing is unavoidable, both for activities and in living areas. Where unconvicted prisoners have to live on the same landing as convicted prisoners, they cannot be required to share cells with convicted prisoners.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the psychological effect of incarceration on female prisoners. [19837]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The Prison Service has commissioned no research which has been specifically concerned to measure the psychological impact of imprisonment on women prisoners.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost to date of the three electronic monitoring pilot projects which commenced in July 1995; and what was the total number of orders made at the latest date available. [19460]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Because of considerations of commercial confidentiality, it would not be appropriate to publish details of the payments made to contractors which are the major part of the cost of the pilots.

However, we estimate that the average cost of a curfew order enforced by electronic monitoring would be around £1,900. If the scheme were available throughout England and Wales. On 1 December 1997, a total of 771 orders had been made since the pilots commenced in July 1995.

Probation Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned on the effectiveness of the Probation Service. [19461]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Since 1 May, the Home Office has published two research studies which are relevant to the effectiveness of the probation service: Home Office Research Studies 169 (which examined how the service deals with offenders' literacy problems) and 171 (which examined the effectiveness of supervision programmes directed towards changing offenders' behaviour).

The following pieces of research are in progress or being prepared for publication: a study of the impact, in terms of rate of reconviction, of different kinds of programme aimed specifically at young offenders convicted of motoring-related offences; a study of new approaches in the Inner London and Surrey probation areas to improving offenders' employability; an evaluation of the community sentence demonstration projects in Teesside and Shropshire; and a study of the effectiveness of supervision programmes involving physically demanding activities. A review by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation of supervision programmes against the critical success factors identified through research is also to be published early next year.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage change in (a) probation staff, (b) probation administrative staff and (c) probation staff working in prisons since June 1994; and if he will make a statement. [18646]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 December 1997]: Between June 1994 and June 1997, there was a 10 per cent. reduction in probation staff as a whole, a 16 per cent. reduction in administrative clerical and secretarial staff and a per cent. reduction in probation staff working in Prison Service establishments.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were made against (a) the Metropolitan Police and (b) the police in England and Wales; what is the ratio of the number of complaints to (i) the population of the jurisdiction, (ii) the number of police officers and (iii) the number investigated; how many of these complaints were investigated; how many investigations led to the instigation of disciplinary proceedings against officers; what is the ratio of proceedings instigated to complaints made; how many disciplinary proceedings led to disciplinary action; and what is the ratio between disciplinary action to complaints made for the last year for which figures are available. [19494]

Mr. Michael: The readily available information is given in the following table. This includes details of the number of complaints recorded and completed. Information is not available on the number of complaints where disciplinary proceedings led to disciplinary action. Instead, information has been provided for the number of officers for whom disciplinary proceedings led to disciplinary action together with ratios of officers proceeded against and disciplined to completed complaints.

Police complaints and discipline 1996–97

	Metropolitan Police	England and Wales
Total complaints recorded[1]	9,122	33,859
Total complaints completed[2]	9,919	36,731
(i) Ratio complaints recorded to the population	0.0012	0.0007
(ii) Ratio complaints recorded to police officers	0.3372	0.2708
(iii) Number of completed complaints investigated	2,667	10,820
Investigated complaints resulting in disciplinary charges	39	148
Officers charged with disciplinary offence as a result of a complaint	36	141
Officers receiving disciplinary action as a result of a complaint	20	102
Ratio of officers proceeded against to complaints completed	0.0036	0.0038
Ratio of officers disciplined to complaints completed	0.0020	0.0028

[1] Complaints recorded in a year are not necessarily completed in that year.

[2] Complaints completed in a year could have been recorded in previous years.

Manslaughter

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of cases passed to the CPS as being capable of sustaining a charge of manslaughter have been prosecuted in each of the last three years; [19247]

(2) what percentage of road deaths which the Police have considered might sustain a charge of (a) manslaughter, (b) causing death by (i) careless and (ii) reckless driving and (c) causing death by careless driving when under the influence of drink or drugs have been prosecuted in each of the last three years; [19322]

(3) what percentage of cases passed to the CPS as being capable of sustaining a charge of causing death by (i) reckless driving and (ii) careless driving when under the influence of drink or drugs have been prosecuted in each of the last three years. [19329]

Mr. Michael: The data collected centrally on court proceedings by the Home Office do not identify the charge under which a defendant is prosecuted.

Also, the data held centrally by the Crown Prosecution Service do not generally identify the category of offence. However, the numbers of defendants proceeded against in magistrates' courts and tried in the Crown Court for these offences in each of the last three years are as follows:

	1994	1995	1996
Defendants proceeded against in the Magistrates' court
Manslaughter[1]	50	69	81
Causing death by:
reckless driving[2]	235	247	260
careless driving when under the influence of drink or drugs	30	31	39
Defendants tried in the Crown Court[3]
Manslaughter[1]	267	269	285
Causing death by:
reckless driving[2]	230	239	241
careless driving when under the influence of drink or drugs	48	52	57

[1] Includes offences under sections 5, 9 and 10 of the Common Law and Offences against the Person Act 1861 and section 2 of the Homicide Act 1957.

[2] Includes the offence of causing death by careless driving.

[3] The data cover defendants either acquitted or found guilty of the offence. Hence they cover those who were prosecuted under a more serious offence but convicted of one of the above offences and do not cover those prosecuted for these offences but found guilty of a lesser offence.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average sentence for a conviction for manslaughter, in each of the last three years. [19244]

Mr. Michael: The average custodial sentence length, based on all sentence lengths excluding life, for a person convicted of manslaughter under sections 5, 9 and 10 of the Common Law and Offences against the Person Act 1861, and section 2 of the Homicide Act 1957 in each of the last three years is as follows:

	Average sentence length (months)
1994	58.5
1995	58.3
1996	61.2

EU Conventions

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 November 1997, Official Report, columns 690-91, concerning draft conventions in respect of driver disqualification, if he will take steps to consult relevant organisations concerned with the consequences and operation of each convention. [19477]

Ms Quin: As I indicated in that answer, the Home Office regularly consults relevant Departments and agencies over both draft Conventions. In addition, both texts have been deposited with the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities. I understand that the Select Committee has already received evidence on the draft Mutual Legal Assistance Convention from at least two organisations.

Electro-shock Devices

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 20 June 1997, Official Report, column 307-08, if he will list the licences which have been granted to companies under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968 to handle, distribute, store or manufacture electric shock devices since that date. [19454]

Mr. Michael: No. The position remains as set out in my reply to my hon. Friend of 20 June 1997, Official Report, columns 307-08. Since 1992, only one company has been granted authority to possess prohibited electro-shock devices, and that authority does not allow the company to sell or otherwise dispose of the devices in any way. When the time comes for the company to dispose of the weapons, they will have to apply for their authority to be varied so as to allow them to do so. That authority will be worded to ensure that the devices are disposed of safely with no risk of their falling into the wrong hands.

Meanwhile, it remains Government policy that no authority to possess, purchase or acquire, manufacture, sell or transfer electro-shock weapons will be granted unless there are wholly exceptional and compelling reasons for so doing.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which police forces witnessed the Air Taser electro-shock device being demonstrated; [19455]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the completed evaluation carried out by the Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch into the Taser electro-shock device. [19456]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch has not evaluated the Taser electro-shock device and has no plans to do so. I am not aware of any demonstration of the device in this country.

Altcourse Prison

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the employment of social workers by Group 4 at HMP Altcourse indicating (a) the number to be employed and (b) the duties involved; [16556]

(2) what probation provision there will be at HMP Altcourse; what discussions have taken place with his Department concerning the level of that provision; and if he will make a statement. [16557]

Ms Quin [holding answers 20 November 1997]: The contract for Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse requires the contractor, Group 4, with the Chief Probation Officer for Merseyside, to carry out negotiations under the terms of the Framework Document published by the Prison Service under cover of Instruction to Governors 30/93 and entitled National Framework for the Throughcare of Offenders in Custody for the Completion of Supervision in the Community. In the light of these negotiations, the contractor may decide whether or not to employ seconded probation officers in order to undertake his contractual obligations to provide welfare assistance, discharge reports and plans for individual prisoners that are fully compatible with the Prison Service's Sentence Planning Manual. Group 4 have decided not to do so. Instead, the contractor will employ its own staff.

As in many prisons, responsibility for this work will be shared. At Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse, it will be undertaken by staff, including prisoner custody officers, based on houseblocks, a specialist counselling team who will work closely with a clinical psychologist and a throughcare team. The latter will include four social workers required to hold one of the recognised qualifications for appointment as a probation officer, that is the Certificate of Qualification in Social Work or the Diploma in Social Work. Their duties include risk and needs assessments, plans for supporting individual prisoners, prisoner programmes, in-care and resettlement, reports for conditional release and external liaison with community supervision agencies.

Prison Service staff responsible for the administration of the contract have discussed these arrangements with Group 4 while reviewing preparations to open Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse on 1 December. Their effectiveness will be monitored as part of the general oversight of the contract undertaken by prison staff on site when the prison is operational. These arrangements do not reflect a change in Government attitude towards the issue of throughcare. Subsequent design, construct, manage and finance contracts reflect different principles which have been agreed in discussions between the Prison Service and the Association of Chief Probation Officers.

Prison Population

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what shortfalls in prison accommodation have been identified from the prison population projections over the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [16558]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 November 1997]: The Prison Service was allocated an additional £43 million in July this year to increase prison capacities to avoid a shortage of accommodation during this financial year and next. However, the short-term population projection prepared by the Research and Statistics Directorate of the Home Office in October 1997 indicates that a shortage of accommodation may emerge in early 1999.

The projection was based on the surmise that recent trends in sentencing would continue. Measures have already been put in place which will reduce the prison population, including plea before venue, which is expected to save between 1,100 and 2,600 places. The recently announced home detention curfews are also expected to free up between 3,000 to 4,000 prison places a year.

The next prison population projection is scheduled for publication in January 1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's estimates of the percentage of businesses that are (a) currently aware of the year 2000 problem relating to computer systems and (b) taking action at shop level; and what estimate she has made of the subsequent loss of gross domestic product based on these figures. [14553]

Mrs. Roche: The Department has not made a formal assessment of levels of awareness or actions under way. However, in October DTI supported Sage Software in announcing the results of their survey. One of their key findings is that awareness of the problem is high (at 95 per cent.) but that the number of those that have completed an audit is lower (at 55 per cent.), while the number for those planning to allocate budget in 1997–98 to resolve the problem is only 43 per cent.

Nor has the Department been able to make any formal assessment of potential loss of GDP. The impact on GDP will depend on the action taken from now on and I am urging businesses to act without delay.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's assessment of the level of preparedness of UK business in relation to year 2000 computer compliance. [13228]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The Department has not made a formal assessment. However, in October DTI supported Sage Software in announcing the results of their survey which, as I said at the time, are clearly a cause for concern. One of the key findings is that awareness of the problem is high (at 95 per cent.) but that the number of these that have completed an audit is lower (at 55 per cent.), while the number for those planning to allocate budget in 1997–98 to resolve the problem is only 43 per cent.

This justifies DTI's new initiative—"Action 2000" which will help provide businesses with what they need to tackle the problem.

Offset Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance her Department gave to the organisers of the Offset exhibition at the north Wales Centre, Aberconwy; and what was the cost to public funds. [15291]

Mr. Battle: The involvement of my department was limited to officials discussing this exhibition with its organisers in advance. No cost was borne by my department.

European Coal and Steel Community

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the redirection of moneys and continuation of projects covered by the European Coal and Steel Community after expiry of that Treaty. [18834]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The Commission has put to the Council a proposal that income from the reserves of the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC) should, after the expiry of the Treaty, be used to fund research and development projects in sectors related to the coal and steel industries. The Council has welcomed this in principal and is now considering the detail of the proposal. Research projects currently funded by the ECSC will continue to be funded in accordance with the terms of the individual offers of support made by the ECSC.

Correspondence

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to reply to the letter of 20 November from the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham. [19986]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 9 December 1997]: I replied to the hon. Member on 9 December.

Enemy Property Report

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the repot on British policy towards enemy property during and after World War II will be published. [19596]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 8 December 1997]: As I announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member from Leyton and Wanstead, on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 641, the Government has set in train a research project to examine papers relevant to the Trading with the Enemy legislation under which the property of enemy countries was confiscated during the Second World War. The project, which has been co-ordinated by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in close partnership with the DTI, is now nearly complete. A report of the findings will be published early in the New Year.

Port Development (India)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received regarding the proposed port development by P and O at Vadharan in Dahanu Taluka, India. [19917]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received one letter from the World Wide Fund for Nature.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Brake: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the guidance contained in PPG Note 22 is used to determine applications for renewable energy development which are dealt with by her Department under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989. [19565]

Mr. Battle: Yes.

Export Initiative

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives her Department will undertake in response to the report by the joint DTI/FCO Export Forum, Towards an Export Initiative; and what part the Business Links will have in this initiative. [19582]

Mrs. Roche: The Government has welcomed the thrust of the Export Forum's report and will be looking to take action in a number of areas identified by the report. Our response to some Forum recommendations will need to await the completion of the DTI and FCO Comprehensive Spending Reviews. Consistent with the Government's vision statement on Business Links, we will be taking forward the Forum's recommendations to raise quality and standards across the Business Link network, to encourage the spread of best practice and to improve communications between the Overseas Trade Services and Business Links.

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of applications for export licences are currently being processed by her Department's export licensing unit within 20 days; and what was the equivalent percentage on (a) 1 December 1996 and (b) 1 May 1997. [19360]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 5 December 1997]: The Export Control Organisation (ECO) of DTI measures its performance against two aims:

- to provide a substantive response to an application within 20 working days of receipt for applications that need to be circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements ("circulated" cases);
- to provide such a response within 10 working days of receipt for applications that are dealt with by DTI itself ("non circulated" cases).

In each case full documentation in support of the application must be provided by the applicant at the outset, for these targets to apply.

ECO management data on the processing of licence application is compiled on the basis of four-week periods. The figures to the nearest percentage point for the periods ending nearest to the dates specified are as follow:

Per cent.

Four-weeks periods	13 December 1996	2 May 1997	14 November 1997
Circulated applications completed in 20 days	72	69	47
Non circulated applications completed in 10 days	93	97	66

Intellectual Property Treaties

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans she has to ratify the treaties adopted at the WIPO conference in Geneva in December 1996 intended to enable British music companies to make their recordings available to consumers world-wide via digital networks; [19959]

(2) what plans she has to raise the issue of copyright protection of recordings on digital networks within the European Union; [19960]

(3) what action she plans to take to encourage other member states of the European Union to ratify the WIPO treaties; [19961]

(4) what plans she has to discuss the European Copyright Directive at meetings of the Council of Ministers; [19962]

(5) what plans she has to ratify the treaties adopted at the WIPO Conference in Geneva in December 1996. [19963]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government fully appreciates the fundamental significance of the new treaties to the UK music industry, which was one of the principal reasons why officials from my Department were at the forefront in securing the successful conclusion of the treaties last December. It follows therefore that we wish to ensure that the UK is in a position to ratify the treaties at the earliest possible time. We also intend to take every opportunity during the forthcoming UK Presidency of the EU Council of Ministers to impress the urgency of the task upon our European partners. In doing so, we will stress the particular relevance of the treaties to the protection of sound recordings in digital networks.

A number of changes to UK law are however needed to enable us to ratify the treaties. Several of these are in areas which the European Commission's planned Directive on copyright and related rights is expected to cover. We will need, therefore, to know the likely form of future EC law in these areas with reasonable certainty before we can reach conclusions on legislation to implement the treaties in the UK, in order to avoid inconsistencies between the two. We do not expect to be in such a position for some months at least, since the draft Directive has yet to be submitted to the Council of Ministers. Although we would hope to be able to proceed with treaty implementing legislation as soon as the situation regarding EC law becomes clear, it will not be possible for legal and other reasons for the UK to ratify the treaties until the Community as a whole and all of its Member States are in a position to do so.

Once the draft Directive is submitted, which we anticipate will be early in 1998, discussions on it will start at Council Working Group level, and we hope to make as much progress as possible during our Presidency. However, before the Council can reach a common position on the draft Directive, the European Parliament will have to give its opinion and we believe that this is unlikely to occur during the UK Presidency.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, with dates, for each of his ministers, from 2 May to date, (a) which organisations he has met, (b) which organisations and companies he has visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; and which individuals have had meetings with ministers and officials. [16346]

Dr. John Cunningham: The information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Minister in his Department is responsible for liaising with the Department for International Development on matters relating to the future of the Common Agricultural Policy. [18945]

Dr. John Cunningham: My Noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary (Lord Donoughue) has specific responsibility for policy matters relating to the Common Agricultural Policy.

Land

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many transfers of IACS eligibility arising from the alteration of status with an equivalent area of ineligible land have been allowed by his Department during the last year. [19010]

Mr. Rooker: During the period 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997 ninety two such transfers were approved in England. This involved 745.23 hectares of land made ineligible to receive payments under the Arable Area Payments Scheme and 721.59 hectares of previously ineligible land made eligible.

Water Safety

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water will include a requirement not to spread waste from rendering plants on agricultural land. [19930]

Mr. Morley: The spreading of waste on land for the benefit of agriculture is subject to the requirements of the waste management licensing system under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Environment Agency is responsible for enforcement of the system.

The text of the revised version of the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water has not yet been finalised. However, it is likely to state that any processed animal waste, in solid form, from rendering plants must not be spread on agricultural land and that the Environment Agency should first be consulted before the spreading liquid waste.

The aim is to publish the revised Code in 1998.

HEALTH

Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the work of the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee. [20452]

Ms Jowell: The Gene Therapy Advisory Committee has performed extremely successfully since its establishment in 1993. As is usual with all advisory bodies, which have operated for a number of years, I have asked a small team to undertake a review of GTAC's role and functions. I expect the review team to present its recommendations early in the new year.

The members are Mrs. Marcia Fry (Department of Health) Chair, Professor Kay Davies—Professor of Genetics, Oxford University, Dr. Brian Davis—Medicines Control Agency, Professor Jim McEwen—Multicentre Research Ethics Committee Chairman, Scotland, Dr. Peter Rigby—National Institute for Medical Research, Mr. Indarjit Singh—Member of British Medical Association Ethics Committee and Dr. Richard Tiner—Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry.

Medical and Dental Students

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support will be provided to medical students covering an additional, intercalated year in order to achieve a science degree. [19855]

Mr. Milburn: Where medical and dental students take an intercalated degree, it will be counted as part of their overall course. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 23 September, the Department will pay the students' contribution towards tuition fees and provide means-tested National Health Service bursaries for those students who are eligible from year five of their course onwards.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support will be made available by his Department to students who take (a) medicine and (b) dentistry as a second degree. [19856]

Mr. Milburn: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 23 September, the Department will pay the students' contribution towards tuition fees and provide means-tested National Health Service bursaries for those students who are eligible from year five of their medicine or dentistry course onwards. No public support is available for second degree in any discipline.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much (a) lone parents, (b) the elderly, (c) the disabled and (d) couples with children, who are claiming council tax benefit and living in properties in bands F, G, and H will have to find on average to meet the shortfall resulting from the restriction of council tax benefit to the band E level; and what will be the average shortfall for all such claimants. [19572]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set our in the table.

Type of recipient	Average weekly shortfall (£)
Elderly	3.90
Disabled	4.00
Lone parent	3.60
Couple with children	4.00
All of the above recipients	3.90

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten pence and quoted at 1998–99 levels.
2. Final figures exclude those recipients who do not fall into any of the categories given in the table, and are not therefore the same as the losses for all recipients.

Lone Parents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the numbers of lone parents who are (a) working and (b) not working in each region and nation of Britain. [18084]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

	Number of lone parents
Region	Working	Not working
North	35,000	55,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	60,000	70,000
North West	80,000	150,000
East Midlands	40,000	65,000
West Midlands	55,000	100,000
East Anglia	25,000	30,000
Greater London	85,000	190,000
South East (excluding London)	90,000	125,000
South West	55,000	75,000
Wales	35,000	55,000
Scotland	60,000	110,000
Total	620,000	1,025,000

Notes:
1. All figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000.
2. Working is defined as all those who are (i) employees (ii) self-employed (iii) employees temporarily not at work or (iv) those in work related government training. Not working is defined as those who are (i) unemployed or (ii) inactive. These are based on the International Labour Organisation categorisations.
3. The figures should be treated as broad estimates since they are drawn from Family Resource Survey data which is subject to sampling error and to possible variations in response rates between regions and between working and non-working lone parents. Figures for the regions with smaller lone parent populations should be treated with particular caution.

Source:
1995–96 Family Resources Survey which covers Great Britain.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average age of lone parents on income support. [18875]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As at February 1997, the average age of lone parents on Income Support was 32 years.

Notes:
1. Sample size 5 per cent.
2. Lone parents are defined as those claimants receiving the lone parent premium.

Source:
Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, February 1997.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information services are used in the New Deal for Lone Parent pilot areas; and who provides them; [16462]

(2) what resources she will make available for local partnerships as a result of the New Deal for Lone Parents pilots. [16442]

Mr. Keith Bradley: New Deal for Lone Parents will fulfil the Government's commitment to provide practical help and advice for lone parents on Income Support whose youngest child is at school and who want to work. The programme is already available in eight areas and will be rolled out nationally from October next year, at a cost of £150 million over the course of this Parliament, raised from the Windfall Levy.

Results from the first eight areas are encouraging. Many lone parents with pre-school children are asking if they can participate in the New Deal. An additional £25 million has therefore been made available from October next year to offer the service to lone parents with a child under five who want to work. In addition, the New Deal for Lone Parents will be available to all lone parents who make a new claim for Income Support from April 1998.

New Deal Advisers are able to provide a range of information to participating lone parents. A key feature of the New Deal service is the provision of advice on how in-work benefits can help lone parents to be better off in-work. Advisers obtain estimates of likely entitlements to in-work benefits such as Family Credit from the Integrated Benefit Information System (IBIS) developed by the Benefits Agency.

Information on job vacancies is available via the Employment Service Labour Market System (LMS). Advisers based in Employment Service Jobcentres can access this information direct, whilst those based in Benefits Agency offices can receive information on LMS vacancies from the Vacancy Manager at their local Jobcentre. This information helps Advisers to match job vacancies to the needs of lone parents.

The lone parents who move into work as a result of the New Deal may need help to find suitable childcare. Advisers in all of the first eight areas of the New Deal for Lone Parents have access to a database of local childcare facilities which has been prepared by a consultancy following a competitive tender. In some areas, Advisers are making use of other childcare information services where these offer a better service. Advisers in Cardiff are using the Chwarae Teg database of childcare facilities in Wales, whilst those in Cambridgeshire have direct access, via the internet, to the Opportunity Links system.

Although there are no formal local partnerships in place in the eight first phase areas, New Deal Advisers have been encouraged to form close links with local employers, Training and Enterprise Councils, Local Authorities and voluntary organisations. As part of the process of planning for national implementation of the New Deal for Lone Parents, the Government is consulting with employers, Local Authorities, the TEC National Council and voluntary sector organisations. Any partnerships resulting from these negotiations will be financed from the funds already allocated to deliver the New Deal over the course of this Parliament.

Family Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the growth in take up of the child care disregard in family credit in the most recent year for which figures are available. [18082]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. The take up estimates produced for the income-related benefits do not provide estimates of component elements such as the childcare disregard.

The number of Family Credit claimants with an allowed claim for help with childcare charges over the last 12 months has increased from 25,000 (May 1996) to 30,000 (May 1997), an increase of 20 per cent.

Women's National Commission

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her plans for the Women's National Commission. [19145]

Ms Ruddock: As part of our strategy to achieve our priority of improving dialogue with women, we are looking at communications with women's organisations. The Government are reviewing the role and status of the Women's National Commission (WNC). The terms of reference of the review are:

> to examine the objectives, membership and the funding of the WNC in the light of the Government's need to ensure that there is an effective, efficient independent channel of communication between women's organisations and Government for the 21st Century; to assess costs and benefits; and to develop, if appropriate, options for change.

The WNC has also decided to review its own structure and organisation. We have therefore agreed with them that, rather than have two consultation exercises, the WNC should obtain the views of its members and these will form part of the evidence for our review.

During the past six months, I have met with many women's organisations in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. As part of my wider dialogue with them I have sought their views on the WNC, of which some, but not all, were members.

Local Employment Trading Schemes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals there are to exempt local employment trading schemes from benefit calculations. [18931]

Mr. Denham: The Government believes that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. Our Welfare to Work objectives are to provide work incentives, to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to strike a new balance between responsibilities and rights. A programme of monitoring and evaluation is under way to enable us to ensure that Jobseeker's Allowance contributes to achieving our objectives.

In addition to this major evaluation exercise, we shall also keep the individual benefit rules, including the treatment of LETS, under active consideration as we develop our plans.

Pensioners' Age Addition

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect of (a) an increase in the pension age addition for the over-80s from 25 pence to £5, (b) the introduction of a new pension age addition of £3 for those aged 75 to 79 and (c) both (a) and (b) together on (i) gross pension expenditure, (ii) income tax revenues and (iii) expenditure on means-tested benefits; and what would be the overall effect on the Exchequer in each case. [18370]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Age additions in 1997–98

£ million

	(a) Age addition for over 80s of £5	(b) Age addition for 75–79s of £3	Both (a) and (b)
Gross costs	600	310	910
Income-related benefit offset	–250	–90	–330
Income tax offset	–40	–20	–60
Net Exchequer cost	310	210	520

Source:
Gross costs provided by Government Actuary's Department. Net costs taking account of income related benefit offsets have been calculated by the Department of Social Security Analytical Services Division. The income tax offset has been provided by Inland Revenue.
Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Pension Funds

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the total funds invested in order to meet private pension and annuity liabilities in the United Kingdom. [19008]

Mr. Denham: The Government is committed to supporting and strengthening the framework of occupational pensions, and to create a new framework of secure, flexible and value for money second pensions for those who do not have the opportunity of contributing to a second pension, either because they lack the resources or because they do not have access to a decent second pension.

In 1995, the total amount of money invested in private pension funds in the United Kingdom was estimated to be £750 billion. This includes financial assets in all funded occupational pension schemes and personal pensions, including retirement annuity contracts.

Child Benefit

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to extend child benefit to those who become 19 years old in their last year of full-time education at school or college. [16929]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no plans to extend child benefit to those who become 19 years old in their last year of full-time education at school or college.

Industrial Disability Claims

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people had good cause to make a late claim and were made an award for industrial disease in 1996; [16472]

(2) how many people had good cause to make a late claim and were made an award for industrial injury in 1997. [16473]

Mr. Denham: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the names of the officials appointed to appraise policy on gender equality grounds in each government department. [17271]

Ms Ruddock: One of the key areas for the Ministers for Women is to ensure that all Government Departments consider the views and needs of women when developing policy. The issue of policy appraisal on gender equality grounds is currently under review.

We do not normally name officials appointed for specific tasks.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what involvement the Minister for Women had in the decision by the Secretary of State for Defence to allow women to fight on the front line. [17270]

Ms Ruddock: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence, responded to the need to ensure equality of treatment for women in the armed forces. I fully support his decision. One of my key priority areas is to ensure that all Government Departments consider the views and needs of women when developing policy.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment has been made of the number of (a) owner occupiers, (b) private tenants and (c) social housing tenants in each local authority area, who will be affected by the restriction in council tax benefit to the band E level. [19344]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Estimated number of council tax benefit recipients affected by the restrictions to band E

Tenure group	Number of recipients
Owner occupiers	25,000
Social housing tenants	5,000
Private tenants	15,000
Not identified[1]	15,000
Total	65,000

Notes:
[1] Not identified. However, it is likely that the majority of these cases will be owner occupiers.
1. Numbers of recipients have been rounded to the nearest 5,000 cases. Figures do not sum due to rounding.
Source:
Housing Benefit Management Information Statistics.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings in each of the first three years, from the restrictions of council tax benefit to the band E level from April 1998. [19343]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Estimated savings in each of the first three years from restrictions of council tax benefit to band E

£ million

Year	Estimated savings
1998–1999	15
1999–2000	15
2000–2001	15

1. Savings have been rounded to the nearest £5 million.
2. Figures are modelled using the May 1995 Housing Benefit (Management Information System) uprated to each of the above years in line with March 1997 Departmental Report forecasts of caseloads and expenditure.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment has been made of the (a) additional council tax arrears and (b) costs to local authorities and magistrates courts of additional enforcement action, which will result from the restriction of council tax benefit to the band E level. [19346]

Mr. Keith Bradley: This measure will affect only those people living in the most expensive properties, and the numbers are small: less than 2 per cent. of Council Tax Benefit recipients will be affected, the majority of whom will lose less than £3.00 per week. It will be for individual Local Authorities to determine what action to take in respect of individuals who do not meet their liability.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates have been made of (a) the average and (b) the maximum annual shortfall council tax benefit claimants will have to meet in respect of those living in properties in bands F, G and H as a result of the restriction of council tax benefit to the band E level. [19345]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Estimated average and maximum annual shortfalls to be met by council tax benefit recipients in bands F, G and H

Band	Average annual shortfall (£)	Maximum annual shortfall (£)
F	150	247
G	290	494
H	243	864

1. The average annual shortfall is based on projections for 1998–99.
2. The available data cannot predict the maximum annual shortfall Council Tax Benefit recipients will have to meet. Therefore, the maximum annual figures are hypothetical based on the 1997 council tax in Liverpool.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which 20 local authority areas he estimates will yield the greatest savings from restricting council tax benefit to band E from April 1998. [19347]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A reliable estimate on an individual Local Authority basis is not available.

Note:

The effects of this policy are modelled using Housing Benefit Management Information Statistics. This is sample data encompassing 1 per cent. of Council Tax Benefit recipients. This data provides an accurate picture of the characteristics of the Council Tax Benefit recipient population as a whole.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to amend the nominal rate for interest received on savings, used in the calculation of council tax benefit. [19349]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wales (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 2 July 1997, Official Report, columns 205–06.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the inclusion of widows pension in the list of benefits treated as overlapping benefits for the purposes of paying invalid care allowance. [18859]

Mr. Denham: The Social Security system, including the relationships between the different benefits, is under consideration in the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Child Support Agency

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the recent performance of the Child Support Agency. [18730]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Although there are some signs that the Child Support Agency's performance may have improved since its early days, there is still a long way to go before public confidence in it reaches an acceptable level. We are therefore looking closely at all aspects of the Agency's work to ensure that it provides a consistent, fair and efficient service to all its clients. We aim to bring forward proposals in the first half of next year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to visit the CSA in Belfast. [14224]

Mr. Keith Bradley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, regularly visits the operational units of the Department. She has no immediate plans to visit the Child Support Agency in Belfast which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Incapacity Benefit

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of people on incapacity benefit were called back for medical re-assessment; what percentage of them were then disallowed benefit; what percentage appealed to tribunal; and what percentage won at the tribunal in the last year for which figures are available. [18825]

Mr. Denham: The information is not currently available. A study is in hand which will provide some measure of the issues raised.

VAT on Fuel

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the average value of the reduction in VAT on fuel to a pensioner on income support; and if she will make a statement. [14991]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Everyone will see the benefit of the reduction in the rate of VAT on fuel in their winter fuel bills. In addition, this winter and next pensioner households in receipt of income support will receive an additional payment of £50 to help with fuel costs, and other pensioner households will receive £20.

The current average value of the reduction in VAT on fuel to a pensioner in receipt of income support including the higher pensioner premium is 25 pence per week.

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the saving on industrial injuries benefit from a 10 per cent. reduction in industrial accidents. [18808]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Less than 10 per cent. of all industrial injuries disablement benefit accident assessments payable per year are in respect of new claims. Based on the most recently available figures for 1995–96, the estimated savings from a 10 per cent. reduction in new industrial accident claims would be up to £5 million in the first year, rising eventually to £25 million in the very long term.

Child Care

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money will be made available in Scotland for out-of-school care as part of the National Childcare Strategy; to whom it will be made available; and if existing out-of-school clubs will be able to apply for it. [19577]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

I announced on 26 November our plans for £28 million to be made available over the next few years for out of school care as part of the National Childcare Strategy for Scotland. We propose that £3 million of this will come from windfall tax receipts and £25 million from the New Opportunities Fund, the new National Lottery distributing body provided for in the National Lottery Bill which is now before Parliament. We are working up proposals for the use of the funding and method of disbursement.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what contingency arrangements he has formulated to ensure the Dome is completed and fitted out before the Millennium. [18652]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company's overall cash budget of £758 million includes prudent provision for cost contingency. Construction at Greenwich is currently on time and to budget. I am confident that it will remain so and that the Dome will be ready to open to the public in time for the Millennium.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what estimate he has made of the operating costs of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. [18731]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company's overall cash budget for the Experience at Greenwich and the associated National Programme is £758 million. Income to cover these costs comes from a £399 million (net) grant from the Millennium Commission and forecast £359 million from sponsorship, commercial activities, visitor revenues and disposal proceeds. The Company currently estimates that the operating costs of the Experience at Greenwich will be in the region of £100 million which includes the costs of the staff who will be recruited for the operational period and servicing of the site.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Population Issues

12. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received on the population issues raised by the Commonwealth Heads of Government final declaration. [18432]

Mr. Foulkes: The outcome of the deliberations of the CHOGM meeting of All Party Group on Population, Development and Reproductive Health were reflected in the (final) Declaration. Department for International Development's Health and Population division also made a summary report of the proceedings of the meeting which was widely distributed.

Bangladesh

13. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her priorities for assistance in education and training to Bangladesh. [18433]

Clare Short: Our priorities for education and training activities in Bangladesh are achieving primary education for all; enhancing the quality of primary education; and achieving equal access for girls and women benefit from education.

Current education and training projects in Bangladesh commit resources of nearly £40 million.

World Bank

14. Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the United Kingdom's contribution in 1996–97 to the World bank. [18434]

Mr. Foulkes: In 1996–97 the United Kingdom contributed a total of £174 million to the World Bank Group, of which £167 million was for the International Development Association (IDA)—the soft lending arm of the Bank which lends to the poorest countries.

16. Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the World bank's world development report 1997: "The State in a Changing World". [18436]

Clare Short: I very much welcome this report. It contains some key messages about governance and poverty elimination. It supports the view outlined in our White Paper that a proper balance between efficient state institutions and well regulated markets creates the best conditions for sustainable development and economic growth that benefits the poor.

Aid Budget

15. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to set a timetable for reaching the UN target of aid as a percentage of gross domestic product. [18435]

Mr. Foulkes: While we are firmly committed to reversing the decline in the development assistance budget of the last 18 years and to moving towards the 0.7 per cent. UN target, usually expressed a percentage of GNP, rather than GDP, we will not set a timetable for doing so.

22. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received regarding the UN target for overseas aid as a percentage of gross domestic product. [18443]

Clare Short: Since 1 May, we have received numerous representations about this target, which is normally expressed as a percentage of GNP, from a wide range of Parliamentarians, NGOs and members of the public, most of whom have welcomed our firm commitment to reverse the decline in spending of the last 18 years and to move towards the 0.7 per cent. target.

26. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when United Kingdom official aid will exceed 0.35 per cent. of national income. [18448]

Clare Short: We are committed to reversing the decline in the development assistance budget and to the UN target of 0.7 per cent. of GNP. But we have not set a timetable for achieving the target. We have undertaken to work within existing financial ceilings this year and next, while conducting a comprehensive expenditure review to ensure that all our resources are used as effectively as possible in support of the poverty eradication targets. Having done so, we can justify increasing the development assistance budget from 1999–2000.

EU Aid Contributions

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her Department's priorities for co-ordinating European contributions to international aid programmes during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union; and if she will make a statement. [18437]

Clare Short: During the UK Presidency, we will continue to seek to improve the poverty focus and effectiveness of the European Community's aid programmes. Our top priorities will be to agree the EU negotiating mandate on the future of Lomé and secure the EC's commitment to the DAC's 21st century strategy and international development targets.

Know-how Fund

18. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, if she will make a statement on the future of the know-how fund. [18438]

Clare Short: As the White Paper makes clear my Department will continue to support the countries in transition in Central and Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union through the Know How Fund. We shall seek particularly to ensure that the benefits of transition are sustainable and spread through all levels of society.

Climate Change

19. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, if she will make a statement on the contribution which her Department has made to the global climate change discussions. [18439]

Clare Short: My Department works closely with the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions on UK policy on global climate change, as it relates to developing countries. DFID provides the UK contributions to the Global Environment Facility which is the financial mechanism for the Climate Change Convention. Through our bilateral development assistance we support programmes to increase energy efficiency.

Land Mines

20. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, if she will make a statement on progress on the elimination of land-mines. [18440]

Clare Short: One hundred and twenty countries have already signed the Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Land-mines and on their Destruction. I was proud to sign on behalf of Britain on 3 December and to set out our plans for increased support to increase local capacity for demining. Britain will continue to play an active role in ensuring the momentum achieved at Ottawa is maintained.

Street Children

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, what plans she has to support non-governmental organisations working with street children in South America. [18441]

Clare Short: We are co-funding five projects with NGOs in South America amounting to approximately £288,000 in 1997–98. A detailed table is attached.

Support for local NGOs working with street children has also been provided through some of the British Partnership Schemes administered by our Embassies across South America. In addition, we are contributing £25,700 this financial year to Consortium for Street Children UK for the production of two Resource Packs on Non-Formal Education and Empowerment of Street Girls and the Prevention of Migration. These packs will be used by NGOs in South America and elsewhere.

Street children projects funded through the Joint Funding Scheme

Agency	Country	Project name	1997–98
Childhope	Brazil	Judicial and Institutional Protection of Child and Adolescent	30,713
Childhope	Brazil	Projeto Ibeji for the Streetchildren	50,636
International Children's Trust	Ecuador	Street Children of Guayaquil	88,200
Jubilee Action	Brazil	Street Girls Education, Training Centre and Residence Home	88,287
Teesside Council for Voluntary Service	Peru	Care, Education, etc for Street Children	30,451
Total			288,287

Figures in respect of block grant agencies of the JFS for 1997–98 are not yet available.

Bananas

23. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what additional steps her Department proposes to take to support small banana farmers in the Caribbean. [18444]

Clare Short: My Department is concerned about the potential impact on Caribbean banana producers of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) ruling on the European banana regime. We accept that the Community's arrangements will need to be brought into conformity with WTO rules but Caribbean banana producers can be assured that we have their interests high on our agenda and will work with them to help support the necessary adjustments.

Aid and Development Co-operation (Japan)

24. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on co-operation with Japan in international aid and development. [18445]

Clare Short: The UK and Japan worked closely together with developing the OECD DAC strategy for halving the proposition of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. We are both firmly committed to the agreed international development targets and to working closely together. We are co-operating on specific joint projects in key social sectors such as health, education and water in Africa and Asia, and on reconstruction projects in Bosnia.

Sustainable Development

25. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what targets her Department has set for sustainable development. [18447]

Clare Short: The Government have accepted the targets agreed by the international community at UNGASS and in the OECD which is that every country should have in place policies which contribute to the reduction of poverty, improvement in social development and environmental sustainability by 2015. These are set out in the White Paper. They are ambitious but achievable. We will measure the effectiveness of our efforts, alongside others, against these targets.

Debt

27. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress she expects to be made by the year 2000 towards cancelling the unpayable debts of the poorest countries. [18449]

Clare Short: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer leads on debt policy. We want to see every country with an unsustainable debt burden at least to have started the process of securing a sustainable exit from their debt problems by the year 2000. And by then, decisions to grant debt relief to have been made for three quarters of the heavily indebted poor countries that need it.

These are achievable objectives, as set out in the "Mauritius Mandate" launched at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting in September. We will continue to press other creditors to support these targets.

UNESCO

28. Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State if she will make a statement on the cost of UNESCO membership in the last year for which figures are available. [18450]

Clare Short: The cost of UNESCO membership since rejoining the Organisation on 1 July 1997, until the end of the UNESCO financial year, 31 December 1997, is £5,001,775.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her Answer of 2 December, Official Report, colum 131–32, on publicity and advertising, if she will provide a breakdown of (a) publicity expenditure by category for the last year for which information is available and (b) spending on recruitment advertising in 1997–98; for what reasons spending on recruitment advertising has risen since 1993–94; and if she will make a statement. [20058]

Clare Short: The total estimated expenditure on publicity for 1997–98 is £1.3 million, broken down as follows:

Publications	220,000
British Overseas Development Newspaper	182,000
Exhibitions and Events	161,000
Video News Release	6,000
Development Education Grants	724,000

The Development Education Grants are to non-government organisations producing work which increases the public's awareness of development issues.

The current total expenditure on recruitment advertising in 1997–98 is £863,682.77.

The increase in the cost of advertising is principally due to a higher number of posts now being advertised as a result of the enhanced role and remit of the department. The cost of advertising has also increased by about 5 per cent. per annum. It is our practice to hold open competitions and to advertise for all posts where possible, unless there are compelling circumstances to justify a nominated candidate.

The number of recruitment advertisements placed in the last three years was:

1995: 167

1996: 190

1997: 247 (to date).

We have also spent £2,746 in 1997–98 as the Department of International Development's contribution to the advertising of fast stream administrative posts by the Recruitment and Assessment Services.

Optical Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development of she will assess the benefits of self-correcting spectacles in countries with limited optical services; and if she will make a statement. [20255]

Clare Short: My Department supported the first trials of these spectacles in Ghana. We concluded that spectacles with adaptable focal length could improve the eyesight and productivity of million of poor people. We has recently supported further development of technology. We continue discussions with the inventor on means to make the spectacles available to people in poor countries.

Water Filtration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the applicability in development work of nanofiltration techniques developed by Strathclyde Water Services in co-operation with Thames Water. [20250]

Clare Short: Department for International Development (DFID) supports research into a range of water filtration techniques suitable for application in development work, and in this context has considered nanofiltration. The process is sensitive to the quality of the raw water and the technology places significant demands on operators, DRID therefore favours more robust and simple processes such as slow sand filtration to meet the needs of poor communications. Our research programmes will review the potential of the process for DFID as UK water industry research and practical experience evolves.

Child Labour

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she takes to ensure that contracts funded by her Department are not given to companies which use child labour; and what monitoring is undertaken of this issue. [20050]

Clare Short: My Department is reviewing the procedures it follows in order to ensure there is no exploitation of child labour in the contracts we finance.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the names of all those people she has appointed to public bodies since 1 May, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [19984]

Clare Short: Professor D. Luscombe was reappointed to the Commonwealth Scholarships Commission for a period of three years from 1 August 1997. The appointment is unremunerated.

Indonesia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance has been given to Indonesia since 1 May for police training; and what plans she has for future assistance. [20057]

Clare Short: My Department has provided no new assistance, nor do I have any plans to do so. We did, however, meet the residual training costs of one Indonesian Police Officer whose training had started under the previous Government and has now ended.

Sanctions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her oral statement of 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 328, what progress she is making in refining the sanctions instrument so that it affects elites more than poor people. [18647]

Clare Short: My Department is reviewing the impact of sanctions regimes on poor people. Work is progressing on these highly complex issues. We are also continuing our efforts to ensure that humanitarian assistance is tightly controlled and monitored, so that it reaches only the people for whom it is intended.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Firearms

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to introduce legislation to ban the use of handguns in Northern Ireland. [12462]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Office has concluded a fundamental review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, which included an assessment of the existing controls on handguns. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to publish her proposals for legislative reform as a consultation paper early in the new year and the Government's intentions with regard to handguns will be announced at the same time.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the conclusions of the review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981; and if she will make a statement. [13070]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has concluded her review of the Firearms (NI) Order 1981, and will publish her legislative proposals as a consultation early in the new year.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15250]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 11 November 1997]: For the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, the available information is as follows:[1, 2]

[2] Information for 1980–81 and 1987–88 are not available.

[3] Costs for the year 1992–93 to September 1997 include figures for the Paid Order Unit, Lisahally and the Belfast Benefit Centre which could not be separated for this question. These offices carry out "back-office work" for the GB Benefits Agency.

[4] On 1 April 1996 a number of agencies came into existence leading to an increase in expenditure.

The information given above has been revised from that provided in answers to previous parliamentary questions on this subject.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (iv) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [1] Information on NDPBs could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

[2] The Department of Economic Development could not provide figures due to the budgets not being disaggregated to the level required.

The information given has been revised from that provided in answers to previous parliamentary questions on this subject.

SCOTLAND

Health Board and NHS Trust Employees

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it obligatory for employees of health boards and NHS trusts to register any interests which they may have in private nursing homes. [18614]

Mr. Galbraith: All Nursing Homes in Scotland must be registered with the local Health Board.

In terms of the recently published Nursing Homes Scotland Core Standards for registration and inspection of nursing homes, each individual connected with an application for registration of a Nursing Home must provide a declaration that there is no potential conflict of interest. This provision extends in all respects to those nominated by the Home owners to be in daily charge of the Home. Health Boards are instructed to follow up all references.

Nursing Research

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to appoint a professor of nursing research at the Scottish Office Department of Health; and if he will make a statement. [18817]

Mr. Galbraith: I have no plans to appoint a professor of nursing research at the Scottish Office Department of Health.

My Chief Scientist's office sponsor the Nursing Research Initiative in Scotland which is progressing nursing research in Scotland admirably. It is headed by Professor Jennifer Hunt.

I do not believe that the appointment of a professor of nursing at The Scottish Office would contribute further to nursing research in Scotland at this time.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the total expenditure by his Department on (a) research and (b) nursing research within the NHS in Scotland for each year since 1990 broken down by health board. [18663]

Mr. Galbraith: The Chief Scientist Office (CSO) of the Management Executive of the NHS in Scotland has responsibility for managing funds which support research activity to further the development of health care in Scotland. Details of CSO expenditure for each year since 1990 are given in the attached table 1a.

Since 1994–95, the CSO has funded the Nursing Research Initiative for Scotland (NRIS) in Glasgow and, before that, the Nursing Research Unit (NRU) in Edinburgh specifically for nursing research. In addition, other CSO-funded research includes nursing research. It is possible only to distinguish nursing research funding in recent years, as shown in Table 1b. (It should be noted that nursing grants awarded in-year can be spent over a number of years).

It is not possible to break down the expenditure in Tables 1a and b by health board. NRIS is a national body (as was NRU before it), and other research funding frequently crosses health board boundaries and is collaborative.

Information regarding expenditure by health boards and NHS Trusts to support research infrastructural costs is not readily available prior to 1995–96. From that year, NHS Trusts in Scotland were asked to declare their expenditure to support research. As a result, the declared amount of £27,743 thousand for each of the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 was allocated to Trusts. Details of allocation by health board area are given in the attached Table 2. Costs specific to nursing cannot readily be broken down by health board area but totalled £0.7 million in the Declaration.

Criminal Justice System

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his priorities for the Scottish criminal justice system. [18797]

Mr. McLeish: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 4 November 1997, Official Report, columns 95–96.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18897]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 December 1997]: Since 1 May, the number of ministerial announcements which were not made in the first instance to the House are as follows:

Speeches to outside bodies: 20

press releases: 95

press briefings: 8

other means: 2.

These figures include the period covered by the summer recess. A large number of these announcements were minor, routine or advisory.

My Department will continue to follow the normal conventions, as set out in the Ministerial Code, in making ministerial announcements.

Highlands and Islands University

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress towards the creation of the University of the Highlands and Islands; and what recent representations he has received in respect of the proposed establishment. [19210]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 4 December 1997]: The Government remain fully committed to encouraging the development of the proposed University of the Highlands and Islands (UHI). Planned provision for the UHI Project in 1997–98 remains at £5 million. I have not received any recent representations in respect of the proposed establishment since visiting the UHI Project Executive Office in September.

Mental Illness Specific Grant

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the mental illness specific grant. [19713]

Mr. Galbraith: In September 1997 The Scottish Office published a report on an independent evaluation of the mental illness specific grant entitled "Dedicated Resources: Dedicated Responses." It confirmed the positive impact the grant has made on the quality of life and independence of people with mental health problems. At the time of publication we confirmed our view that the grant should continue to provide ring-fenced resources for the development of community-based mental health services for the foreseeable future.

Dental Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental graduates have entered community dental service training schemes in Scotland in each of the last three years. [18704]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 December 1997]:

The information requested is as follows:

Numbers of dental graduates undertaking vocational training in the community dental service in Scotland 1994–95 to 1997–98:

1994–95: 3

1995–96: 5

1996–97: 1

1997–98: 0.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vocational training posts for dental graduates were available in Scotland in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [18706]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 December 1997]:

The information requested is as follows:

Vocational training posts in the general dental service in Scotland 1994–95 to 1997–98:

1994–95: 88

1995–96: 78

1996–97: 83

1997–98: 87.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the range of social and economic statistical information currently provided in respect of the United Kingdom will be provided in respect of Scotland in time for the establishment of the Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [19153]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 8 December 1997]: In almost all cases, social statistical information published by the Government about the UK is also available about Scotland. Members of the Government Statistical Service working in the Scottish Office are working with colleagues in other Departments to ensure this can continue after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament. My officials are also working with staff in local authorities, the Scottish Health Service and other organisations to develop and improve the range and quality of social statistics available about Scotland.

An extensive range of Scottish economic and labour market statistics is already available for Scotland. Scottish Office economists and statisticians are currently consulting with the Office for National Statistics and with academics, consultants and overseas statistical offices to identify and consider how to meet the likely additional needs of a Scottish Parliament for economic and labour market statistics, both in terms of new information and in providing more detailed, timely and robust estimates of current figures.

These developments are designed to anticipate and meet the information needs of a Scottish Parliament. It will, of course, be for the Parliament itself to determine its own priorities.

Medical and Dental Students

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will fund the cost of the special support beyond year four for Scottish medical and dental students studying in England, Wales or Northern Ireland; and if he will make an estimate of the cost. [19587]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 December 1997]: It is the Government's intention that all eligible UK medical and dental students should benefit from the special provisions announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 23 September. The arrangements and costs will be the subject of further discussion between the Departments concerned.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the cost to (a) his Department, (b) the National Health Service in Scotland and (c) local authorities in Scotland of the steps required to deal with the millennium date problem for computers; and if he will make a statement. [18707]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 December 1997]: My Department and the National Health Service in Scotland are continuing to assess in detail the likely costs of dealing with the millennium date problem. Appropriate programmes of action are underway. My Department is submitting regular progress reports to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA). It is expected that the cost of Year 2000 preventive and remedial action will be met within existing planned financial provisions. Action by local authorities is a matter for themselves as independent corporate bodies. However, my Department has taken action to ensure that local authorities are aware of action needed to address the problem, including the commissioning and distribution in May 1997 of a consultancy report containing a suggested action plan.

Female Prisoners

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of (a) female prisoners held, (b) female deaths in prison and (c) female suicides in prison in Scotland for each of the last 10 years. [19831]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The information requested is as follows:

Year April to March	Average daily number of female prisoners (including young offenders)	Number of deaths	Number of suicides or apparent suicides
1988–89	171	—	—
1989–90	137	—	—
1990–91	141	—	—
1991–92	145	—	—
1992–93	163	—	—
1993–94	172	—	—
1994–95	181	—	—
1995–96	174	3	3
1996–97	189	3	3
1997–98	[1]182	1	[2]1

[1] At 5 December 1997.
[2] A fatal accident inquiry into this death is still to be held.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy on detaining female remand and convicted prisoners in the same prison. [19834]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Prison Service's policy is to keep female remand and convicted prisoners in the same prison in separate accommodation, so far as reasonably practicable.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has commissioned into the psychological effect of incarceration on female prisoners. [19833]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: A twelve month study, commencing December 1996, was commissioned to examine, among other things, the impact of incarceration on female offenders. The study was conducted by Dr. Nancy Loucks, an independent experienced criminological researcher, and will be published early in 1998.

Trans-sexual Prisoners

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current arrangements for the (a) police, (b) courts and (c) Prison Service in respect of trans-sexuals; what plans he has to review these arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [19825]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: (a) There are no existing guidelines for police forces in Scotland in respect of transsexuals although the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland is considering the need for specific guidance; (b) The Scottish Courts Service has no special arrangements in respect of transsexuals. All court users are dealt with on an equal basis. There are no plans to review these arrangements; (c) To date, the Scottish Prison Service (SPS) has not received any transsexual into its custody. SPS would confine the transsexual in whichever prison was most appropriate for the individual, taking account of the requirement to maintain good order and to care for all prisoners with humanity. Each case would be considered on an individual basis. There are no plans to review current arrangements.

Community Service Orders

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many actions were raised under section 240(1) and (3) of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to amendment or revocation of a community service order in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many cases legal aid was available; [19726]

(2) how many actions were raised under paragraph 5(1) and (3) of schedule 7 to the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to amendment or revocation of a supervised attendance order in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many cases legal aid was available; [19728]

(3) how many actions were raised under (i) section 42 of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 for the removal of a disqualification, (ii) section 232 of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to failure to comply with the requirements of a probation order and (iii) section 233 of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to the conviction of a probationer by a court in Great Britain of an offence committed during his probation period in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many of these cases in each category legal aid was available; [19735]

(4) how many actions were raised under paragraph 4 of schedule 7 to the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to failure to comply with the requirements of supervised attendance order in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many of these cases legal aid was available; [19727]

(5) how many actions were raised under section 239(4) to (6) of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 in relation to failure to comply with the requirements of a community service order in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many of these cases legal aid was available. [19725]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The information available on actions relates to breach of community service orders under Section 239(4) to (6) of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 of which there were 568 in 1994; no information is available centrally for actions under the other provisions.

As for legal aid, in 1996–97 Assistance by Way of Representation (ABWOR) was granted for 606 cases under Section 42 of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988; 1,260 cases under Section 232 of the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995; 597 cases under Sections 239(4) to (6) of the 1995 Act; and 84 cases under paragraph 4 of schedule 7 to the 1995 Act.

ABWOR is available for actions under Section 233 of the 1995 Act but no information on numbers is available. For the remaining provisions, criminal legal aid is available for actions but only if it was previously granted in relation to the original procedure which resulted in the orders.

Proceeds of Crime

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many actions were raised under (a) section 5(4) in relation to an appeal against a court decision under section 5(3) and (b) section 6(4) in relation to an appeal against a court decision under section 6(3) of the Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 in the last year for which figures are available; and in how many cases legal aid was available. [19729]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Although no central record is kept of applications brought under sections 5(3) or 6(3), or of appeals under sections 5(4) or 6(4) of the Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995, I understand from the Lord Advocate that he is not aware of any applications or appeals having been made under section 5 of the Act, and that in relation to section 6, he is aware of only three applications and one appeal.

Information is not available on which of these cases received legal aid. However, where a third party was involved legal aid covering representation would not have been available to them. That anomaly is however being resolved through regulations which have recently been laid before the House.

Fishing

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the fishery closures in the Moray Firth; what assessment he has made of the cause and source of the Captain's Field oil spillage; and by what means local fishermen will be able to pursue damages for loss of fishing opportunity. [19568]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The imposition of the exclusion zone on 21 October under Part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 followed the discovery of hydrocarbon contamination and associated taint in samples of shellfish (Nephrops) together with elevated levels of hydrocarbons in sea-bed sediment. Further testing subsequently confirmed that round fish taken from the area were uncontaminated and free from taint and the restrictions on these species were lifted on 14 November. Restrictions will remain in place for flatfish and shellfish until results of analysis show that these species are unaffected or no longer affected.

Originally it was considered that the contamination may have been caused by the oil spill from the Captain Field in August. However it is now clear that this was not the case. The scope for fishermen to pursue compensation claims will be dependent on an exact source of the contamination being established. Meanwhile it is very much in the interst of the fishing industry that contaminated catches do not find their way on to the market.

The Department of Trade and Industry has undertaken an investigation into the circumstances of the Captain oil spill and a report has been submitted to the Procurator Fiscal. As the Procurator Fiscal's own investigation is currently underway no further information can be given at this stage.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the proposed Scottish Executive will be able to hold bilateral talks with (a) the Spanish Government, (b) the European Parliament, (c) the European Commission and (d) the Irish Government on fishing issues. [19567]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Relations with Europe are the responsibility of the United Kingdom Parliament and Government. However, the Government intend that Ministers and officials of the Scottish Executive should be involved in negotiations with our EU partners. This will extend to bilateral talks on fishing issues, where the role of Scottish Ministers and officials will be to support and advance the single UK negotiating line which they have played a part in developing.

Prisons (Suicide Counselling)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the Scottish Prisons budget was allocated to suicide counselling in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [19829]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Counselling is not a separate cost centre within the Scottish Prison Service's suicide prevention and healthcare strategies and the figures sought are therefore not available.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanisms he has in place to provide suicide counselling and monitoring for female prisoners in Scotland. [19832]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: On admission to Cornton Vale Prison, every prisoner is assessed by a nurse. Every prisoner is also seen within 24 hours by the Medical Officer for a full assessment including current and past mental health history and treatment. Each Prisoner is the subject of a weekly care meeting attended by a multi-disciplinary team of prison staff and professionals. If a problem is identified, the needs of the individual are established and progress monitored. Prisoners may be referred at any stage for counselling and have ready access to staff, psychologists, psychiatrists, nursing and medical support. Support is also available from a range of voluntary organisations and the prison's "Listener" scheme.

Cornton Vale Prison

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the funds allocated to Cornton Vale Prison for (a) each of the last five years and (b) the next two years. [19827]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Total net expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters and other central costs) on Cornton Vale Prison is as shown. Budgets for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 have not yet been determined.

April to March	£ million
1993–94	5.9
1994–95	6.0
1995–96	5.7
1996–97	6.5
1997–98 (budget)	6.8

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to (a) the Foreign Office, (b) the Treasury and (c) the European Commission on the importance of duty free sales in the EU for the Scotch whisky industry; and if he will make a statement. [19826]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 9 December 1997]: I am aware of the implications for the Scotch whisky industry of the proposed abolition of intra-EU duty free sales by the Scotch Whisky Association and others, and I am in regular contact with my colleagues on this and other matters relating to the Scotch whisky industry.

Prisons (Expenditure)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list per capita spending for (a) male prisoners, (b) female prisoners and (c) each prison in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available. [19828]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The budgeted average annual cost per prisoner in Scotland in the current financial year (April 1997 to March 1998) is (a) £20,790 for male prisoners, and (b) £36,728 for female prisoners at Cornton Vale, and (c) as listed for each establishment in Scotland.

Prison	Cost per prisoner £
Aberdeen	27,354
Barlinnie	15,032
Castle Huntly	19,742
Cornton Vale	36,728
Dumfries	32,628
Dungavel	21,033
Edinburgh	19,715
Friarton	23,935
Glenochil	21,927
Greenock	17,500
Inverness	24,974
Longriggend	27,090
Low Moss	13,195
Noranside	19,865
Penninghame	19,225
Perth	24,140
Peterhead	35,609
Peterhead Unit	84,402
Polmont	20,190
Shotts	23,943
Shotts Unit	99,394
Shotts National Induction Centre	24,186

The above costs have been calculated as total budgeted expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters and other central costs) divided by the forecast daily average prisoner population for the year, at the time at which budgets were set.

National Sleep Laboratory

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he issues to health boards to assist them in determining the level of funding which they provide to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS Trust in respect of the Scottish National Sleep Laboratory. [19553]

Mr. Galbraith: The level of funding for Sleep Laboratory Services at the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary is primarily a matter for Health Boards.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints were made against the police in Scotland; what is the ratio of the number of complaints to (a) the population of the jurisdiction, (b) the number of police officers and (c) the number investigated; how many complaints were investigated; how many investigations led to the instigation of disciplinary proceedings against officers; what is the ratio of proceedings instigated to complaints made; how many disciplinary proceedings led to disciplinary action; and what is the ratio between disciplinary action to complaints made for the last year for which figures are available. [19495]

Mr. McLeish: Information on complaints against the police is not available in the form requested. In 1996–97, however, there were 1,333 complaint cases (which may involve more than one complaint) against the police in Scotland. The ratio of complaints cases to (a) the estimated population of Scotland is 1:3,847; (b) the number of serving police officers at 31 March 1997 is 1:11; and (c) the number investigated is 1:1 (because all complaint allegations against the police are investigated). Information held on disciplinary proceedings and disciplinary action against police officers does not, however, differentiate between those complaints cases raised during any specific year.

Laser Pens

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider legislation to ban the sale of laser pointers. [13191]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 30 October 1997]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Marsden) on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 644–45.

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the development of the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm. [15654]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 12 November 1997]: I have received 184 letters supporting and 2,873 opposing the proposed funicular railway development on Cairn Gorm.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Bathing Waters

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many United Kingdom bathing waters pass the (a) mandatory standard and (b) the guideline standard of the European Union Bathing Waters Directive. [19241]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 4 December 1997, Official Report, columns 289–91, to my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie).

Water Supply

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take to encourage water companies to ensure that the supply of water for domestic use satisfies the projected housebuilding programmes in Hampshire. [19472]

Angela Eagle: Water companies are subject to a statutory duty to develop and maintain efficient and economical systems of water supply within their areas. In respect of residential development, water companies have a duty to provide supplies of water sufficient for domestic purposes. This duty extends to all new premises. Current planning guidance advises local authorities to consult infrastructure providers such as water companies when drawing up their development plans, to ensure that the demands of new development do not exceed the capacities of existing or planned water supply systems.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in establishing an interdepartmental working group on fuel poverty; which individuals and Government departments will be represented on the working group; which non-governmental organisations will be invited to participate in the work of the group; and if he will make a statement. [19701]

Angela Eagle: At my request, officials from my Department have set up an informal group to examine the issue of fuel poverty. In particular, the group will look at the impact of current policies and programmes and consider whether existing expenditure could be made more effective. Other Departments represented are Social Security, Health, Trade and Industry and Treasury, together with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices. The group has met once so far. Non-governmental organisations may be invited in future to contribute to the work of the group as it progresses.

Leasehold Legislation

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about changes to leasehold legislation; and what plans he has in this area. [19514]

Mr. Raynsford: I have had a number of representations from organisations and individuals. We have a commitment to bring forward a package of reforms to assist leaseholders, and are currently considering the scope and practicability of possible measures. An announcement and public consultation are scheduled for the spring.

Water Pollution (Nitrates)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made towards implementing European Council Directive 91/676/EEC concerning the protection of waters against pollution caused by nitrates from agricultural sources; and if he will make a statement on the establishment of draft action programmes. [19667]

Angela Eagle: The Government have implemented all of the Directive's requirements, except the establishment of action programmes. We expect to issue draft action programme regulations for consultation before the end of 1997, with the aim of laying them before Parliament early in 1998.

The Government are currently finalising the detailed assessment of the monitoring data required by the first review of designations, which forms the next phase of the Directive's implementation. Any changes proposed as a result will be issued for public consultation.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish an analysis of work carried out since revisions to the home energy efficiency scheme showing the numbers of different measures installed, the average cost of individual measures and the average value of a home energy efficiency scheme grant; and if he will make a statement. [19699]

Angela Eagle: The latest data available cover the period from 1 July 1997, when the revisions to the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme took effect, until 30 September 1997. Forty thousand and seven grants were paid for work under the revised scheme. Some work carried out during this period will not be included because the claims for payment will have been processed in the following quarter. An additional 52,308 grants were paid during this period in respect of work carried out under the preceding scheme, which contained a more limited range of energy efficiency measures.

The breakdown of these 40,007 grants, by the main measure installed, was:

Draught Proofing	Loft Insulation	Cavity Wall Insulation	Heating Control Upgrade
29,690	7,331	3,986	nil

Additionally, 34,773 grants were paid for low energy light bulbs, 30,104 for personal advice on energy efficiency and 9,954 for hot water tank insulation in conjunction with one of these main measures.

The mean value of all grants paid during the same period was £159. By the main measure installed, the mean grant values were as follows:

Draught proofing	Loft insulation	Cavity wall insulation	Heating control upgrades
£130	£236	£281	nil

I am very pleased to announce that this information, updated quarterly, will become publicly available from early 1998. Our managing agent, Eaga Ltd., will place detailed reports about the scheme on the Internet. The address will be www.eaga.co.uk.

I propose, in the near future, to review this scheme, which is intended to help people on low incomes keep their homes warmer and use less fuel, to find out if it is helping the right people in the most effective way.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial resources will be available to fund the cost of energy efficiency work carried out under the Environmental Task Force Programme; and if he will make a statement. [19697]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Task Force is one of four options available to the young unemployed under the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds, and will be funded from the windfall levy on the excess profits of the privatised utilities.

The level of funding available for projects carried out by the Environment Task Force, including energy efficiency work, will vary according to the administration and material costs of the placements, and will be subject to a competitive tender process, managed by the Employment Service.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the carbon savings that will occur each year as a result of the reduction in the level of VAT levied on activities undertaken under the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme; and what estimates he has made of the carbon savings that would have occurred each year, had the same reduction in the level of VAT been levied on all purchases and installations of such energy-saving items as are deemed eligible under the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, but currently undertaken outwith that scheme. [18544]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

Customs' recent report on the scope of a reduced rate of VAT for energy-saving materials concluded that a reduced rate of VAT targeted through HEES and similar grant-funded schemes would help more of the less well-off keep warm. The report also suggests that the environmental benefits of such a limited reduced rate would be small, because the benefit to such households may be taken in warmer houses rather than reduced fuel consumption.

The Government have said that they will explore with our European partners the scope for a reduced VAT rate on a broader range of Energy Saving Materials because this would have a larger environmental effect.

Applying a reduced rate of VAT of 5 per cent. to all supplies to domestic consumers of the sort of energy saving measures that are available under the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (including for DIY installation) might result in an initial annual saving of 3,000 tonnes of carbon, accumulating to 40,000 tonnes annually by 2010.

Sainsbury's (Richmond-upon-Thames)

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the planning application for the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames was (a) first considered by the Inspector and (b) approved by the Inspector; and if he will give the dates on which Ministers were notified of the Inspector's preliminary and final decisions; [19924]

(2) if he will list the dates on which the Inspector considering the planning application for the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames contacted his Department; giving the reasons for the contacts and advice given. [19925]

Mr. Caborn: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those public relations companies who were involved in presentations to (a) Ministers, (b) officials and (c) Inspectors in connection with the planning application for the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames. [19922]

Mr. Caborn: No representations were made either to Ministers or to officials, as the decision on the appeal was made by a planning inspector. I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member about the representations made to the inspector.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) architects and (b) planning consultants involved in presentations to (i) Ministers, (ii) officials and (iii) Inspectors in connection with the planning application for the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames. [19923]

Mr. Caborn: No presentations were made either to Ministers or to officials. I have asked the Planning Inspectorate's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member about the representations made to the Inspector who was appointed to decide the appeal.

Letter from Chris Shepley to Miss Julie Kirkbride, dated 11 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the planning appeal decisions concerning the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames.

I enclose a copy of the Inspector's decision letter at the back of which you will find a list of all those who gave evidence during the inquiry. In addition, the Inspector also received written representations objecting to the proposal from Nathaniel Litchfield and Partners, on behalf of Chelverton Properties, and Roger Tym and Partners, on behalf of Somerfield Stores.

As you will see from the decision letter, the Inspector started hearing the case in November 1996 but it overran the allotted time. The inquiry therefore had to be adjourned until March 1997. The Inspector issued his decision on 4 July 1997. Occasionally an Inspector may issue what is known as an Advanced Notice of Decision (AND) but these are usually limited to relatively simple cases. No AND was issued in this case and the decision letter of 4 July represents the Inspector's one and only decision on the appeal.

Inspectors issue thousands of decisions every year and Ministers are not routinely informed about the outcome of them all. Ministers were not notified about the outcome of this case.

To the best of my knowledge, the Inspector contacted us 3 times about the appeal: in December 1996 to confirm the dates for the re-opening of the inquiry; in April this year he asked us to circulate to the appellant and the local planning authority some late objections to the proposal; and in June, he asked us to write to the parties apologising for the delay in issuing his decision because he was still involved in a local plan inquiry.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representation he has received from hon. Members in connection with the proposed Sainsbury's development at Richmond-upon-Thames. [19921]

Mr. Caborn: Ministers received no representations prior to the issue of the Inspector's decision letter.

South Yorkshire Super Tram

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department has spent to date on its legal action against South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Executive over the funding of the South Yorkshire Super Tram. [19811]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has spent £9,792.57 to date in defending the legal action brought against it by South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority and others.

Vehicle Safety

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents of vehicles failing the vehicle inspectors' roadside test there have been in the last six months. [19690]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 10 December 1997]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate, Mr. Ron Oliver, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. David Drew, dated 11 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of incidents of vehicles failing roadside tests in the last six months.

The Inspectorate's Vehicle Examiners carry out roadworthiness spot checks at the roadside, at ports, and at other locations where vehicles are parked or at operators' premises. Vehicles are examined to determine their compliance with safety and environmental standards through checks on their mechanical condition and their exhaust emissions.

Vehicles failing to meet the required standard are issued with a prohibition notice which, depending on the seriousness of the defect, can prevent the vehicle from continuing on its journey until the defect has been rectified. In any event a vehicle issued with a prohibition notice must be inspected by Inspectorate staff for clearance of the prohibition once the fault has been rectified.

Details of vehicles failing to meet required roadworthiness and exhaust emission standards during roadside spot and fleet checks during the period 1 April to 30 September 1997 are as follows:

Vehicle	Roadworthiness Checks		Emission Checks
	Examined	Prohibited	Examined	Prohibited
Heavy Goods Vehicles (including trailers)	86,915	13,267	6,650	220
Passenger Service Vehicles	15,566	1,906	4,202	121
Light Goods Vehicles	9,571	2,345	7,340	3,800
Cars	787	374	45,251	807
Taxis and private hire cars	1,685	420	1,979	382
Non-testable vehicles[1]	1,015	407	n/a	n/a
Total	115,539	18,719	65,422	5,330

n/a = not available.

[1] Includes mobile cranes, diggers and non-HGV trailers.

In addition to the above checks, the Inspectorate's Traffic Examiners also carry out roadside examinations of vehicles to check for potential traffic offences including overloading, unauthorised use of vehicles, driver licensing, and tachograph misuse.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the total non-domestic grant allocated to each local authority in the current financial year. [20129]

Mr. Raynsford: I have placed this information in the Library.

Highways Agency

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire to receive a reply to his letter of 11 September to the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency. [20273]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency replied to the right hon. Member's letter on 3 December.

Planning Decision (Cockermouth)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 30 July 1997, Official Report, column 405, when he expects to announce a decision in relation to supermarket planning matters in Cockermouth. [20262]

Mr. Raynsford: I expect to announce a decision shortly.

Businesses (Rents and Rates)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers exist to reduce (a) business rents and (b) business rates; and if he will make a statement. [19861]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no powers to intervene in the setting of business rents.

I take it that in referring to powers to reduce business rates, the hon. Member refers to powers to vary the rates payable by individual ratepayers or groups of ratepayers rather than to the national systems for determining the National Non-Domestic Rate and for giving transitional relief. Local authorities have powers to reduce the bills of certain ratepayers; relief may be granted to charities, non-profit making bodies and ratepayers suffering hardship provided that the relevant criteria are met. Charities have their rates bills reduced by statute provided that certain conditions are met; as do those liable for rates in respect of empty property. From 1 April 1998 relief will also become available to certain village shops.

Central Line

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instigate a report into the current signalling problems on the Central Line. [20153]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Managing investment projects is a matter for London Underground Ltd. I am aware of the problems and know that London Underground is making every effort to minimise the disruption to its customers during the current programme of Central Line modernisation works and to bring the project to a successful conclusion.

Pollution Control Directive

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the implementation of Directive 96/61/EC on integrated pollution prevention and control; and if he will make a statement. [20735]

Mr. Meacher: The Government issued a consultation paper on 15 July seeking views on implementation of the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) Directive. To date 209 responses have been received from a range of industry and regulatory bodies, and from environmental groups and the public. I am today placing a list of those responses in the Libraries of both Houses, and making arrangements for individual responses to be available to those who wish to see them.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Library Service

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what consideration he has given to the Audit Commission's recent report on the Public Library Service, "Due for Renewal". [20736]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government welcome the publication of "Due for Renewal". We recognise the importance of the public library sector, and are committed to its future. However, we also recognise that there are a number of challenges that public libraries are having to face as they approach the Millennium. "Due for Renewal" usefully identifies some of the main issues, and provides valuable advice about service planning and the scope for achieving further efficiency savings. This work complements the Government's requirement for library authorities in England to produce Annual Library Plans from 1998. I hope that library authorities will respond positively to the report's recommendations in considering their own services.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has in respect of the level of next year's television licence fee; what account this level takes of the five year formula announced by the previous government; and if he will make a statement about future licence fee levels. [20737]

Mr. Chris Smith: In December 1996, following a report by independent consultants, Braxton Associates, on the BBC's expenditure needs, the previous Government announced a television licence fee formula for the five years from April 1997. Under this formula, licence fee increases for the period as a whole were set just below inflation as measured by the Retail Prices Index (RPI). However, the increases from 1 April 1998 were set at RPI plus 3 per cent., reflecting primarily the additional costs faced by the BBC in launching its new digital services.

The Government have carefully considered the five year formula and have concluded that it remains appropriate. It allows the BBC to plan its business properly for the period as a whole and is based on an independent assessment of its financial needs. The real-terms increase this year is paying for new digital services for licence fee payers. The 1999–2000 increase under the formula will also be marginally above inflation, at RPI plus 0.5 per cent. However, the formula specifies changes in the licence fee in 2000–01 and 2001–02 at RPI minus 1 per cent. and RPI minus 2.5 per cent. respectively. Application of the RPI figure of 3.6 per cent. for the year to September 1997, plus 3 per cent., to the current unrounded licence fees produces new rounded totals of £97.50 for a colour licence and £32.50 for a black and white licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force will be laid before the House in due course.

The Government's existing Agreement with the BBC guarantees the licence fee until the end of the five-year period (i.e. until the end of March 2002). The Government intend to conduct well before then a wide-ranging review of the future level of the licence fee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankans have sought political asylum in the United Kingdom during the current year. [19558]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the period from 1 January to 31 October 1997, a total of 1,405 applications for asylum, excluding dependants, were lodged in the United Kingdom by Sri Lankan nationals.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning allegations of corruption in the Metropolitan Police; and if he will make a statement. [19696]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the Commissioner to discuss issues concerning the policing of London. We are extremely concerned that there should be adequate means for dealing with corrupt officers. We look forward to the report from the Home Affairs Committee and intend to consult with interested bodies before deciding on a way forward.

Sex Shops

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions of unlicensed sex shops under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 have occurred in the last five years; and what proportion was successful. [19562]

Mr. Michael: In 1989, there was one prosecution under schedule 3 of the Act. This resulted in a conviction.

Information collected since then has not identified individual offences committed under this specific Act.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the effectiveness of the significant degree rule for the regulation of shops selling sex articles. [19561]

Mr. Michael: We keep the operation of section 2 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982, including the "significant degree" rule, under general review. The City of Westminster Act 1996 contains measures to improve the enforcement of the 1982 Act provisions and we will be considering whether experience of its operation suggests the need for more general changes.

Rustling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the extent of cattle and sheep rustling in (a) Lancashire and (b) England. [19695]

Mr. Michael: No estimates are available centrally. Such offences would be recorded under the "Other theft or unauthorised taking" offence classification and not separately identifiable. Prior to the introduction of the Theft Act 1968, offences of "Larceny of horses and cattle" were published annually in the "Criminal Statistics" command paper, copies of which are available in the Library.

Youth Justice Task Force

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the advice he received from the Youth Justice Task Force. [20296]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 102.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported cases of the use of illegal drugs in prisons there have been to date in 1997. [19779]

Ms Quin: From 1 January 1997 to 31 May 1997 (the latest month for which final figures are available), 9,353 prisoners tested positive in mandatory drug tests for the illegal use of drugs.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government classified Sierra Leone as a country in upheaval. [18286]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 28 November 1997]: In view of the situation in Sierra Leone, following the overthrow of the democratically elected government by rebel soldiers, we decided to declare that the country had undergone such a fundamental change in circumstances that we would not normally order the return of a person to that country for the time being. The declaration was made on 1 July 1997.

The situation in Sierra Leone remains uncertain and it is being monitored closely in co-operation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Although the positive developments following the Conakry Accord are encouraging and we are looking forward to further improvements, no-one will be returned to Sierra Leone unless we are satisfied that it is safe to do so.

The effect of making such a declaration is that a Sierra Leone national who was stranded in the United Kingdom and applied for asylum within three months of the declaration being made also became eligible to make a claim for social security benefits while his application was being considered by the Home Office, providing that claim for benefits was lodged within the three-month timescale.

All applicants who claim asylum at the port or airport of arrival are eligible to claim social security benefits in a similar way.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women who were classified as category A prisoners were being held in prisons on 1 November. [19780]

Ms Quin: On 1 November 1997, 870 men and four women were classified as Category A prisoners.

Hand Guns (Compensation)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints his Department has received about delays in paying compensation to gun owners who handed in firearms. [19808]

Mr. Michael: Around 500 complaints have been received about the timescale for compensation payments, and the need to respond to these complaints, proving a substantial distraction from the main work of the Firearms Compensation Section. The section is endeavouring to process claims as quickly as possible but complaints and other specific inquiries are factors slowing the rate of payments.

I appreciate that the time taken to settle compensation claims is irritating to those who are opposed to the legislation and that all individuals who have handed in their weapons would like to be paid without delay. However, it was made clear at the outset that the number and difficulty of the claims received would make delays inevitable. All efforts are being made to complete the task as quickly as possible, and this would be achieved much sooner if there were fewer inquiries about the progress of individual claims.

DEFENCE

Eurofighter

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the (a) first and (b) last deliveries of Eurofighter are expected; and what is the current yearly schedule. [20072]

Mr. George Robertson: The first Eurofighter is scheduled to be delivered to the Royal Air Force in June 2002 and the last in 2014 with the rate of delivery building up to 20 a year by 2005.

TREASURY

Pensions

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made by pensions firms in providing redress to the victims of mis-selling in the period up to the end of November. [20718]

Mrs. Liddell: In a statement to the House on 18 November 1997, Official Report, columns 155–163, I set out the progress that had been made by firms in redressing victims of mis-selling up until the end of October. I have now received an update from the 41 firms whose progress I have been monitoring, and these are set out in the table. For those firms that fail to make sufficient progress, regulatory discipline is a real prospect. For most of these 41 firms, the regulators' deadline of 31 December, by which 90 per cent. of the most urgent cases must be resolved, is fast approaching. It is now up to each firm to make every effort to make rapid progress so that disciplinary action against them is not called for.

In general most firms have improved their performance over the month. Once again however, the figures show a wide divergence in performance, with some firms making good, if belated progress, and others that still have a disgracefully large task which remains to be tackled.

Of course many firms other than the 41 listed have cases to review. These, too, must be completed within deadlines set by the regulators. Of these firms, the vast majority are independent financial advisers (IFAs), ranging from large firms, employing hundreds, if not thousands, of people, to small sole traders. Few firms are innocent, and no firm will be let off the hook: the customer who has been disadvantaged by the mis-selling of a small IFA has as much right to speedy redress as the customer of the largest pension provider. All firms must complete their reviews without delay, and to the standards set out by the regulators.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing to increase public service pensions from April 1998. [20719]

Mr. Darling: Legislation governing public service pensions requires public service pensions to be increased annually by the same percentage as State earnings related pensions (additional pensions). My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 186 that additional pensions will be increased by 3.6 per cent., in line with the annual increase in the Retail Prices Index up to September 1997. Public service pensions will therefore be increased by 3.6 per cent., from 6 April 1998, except those which have been in payment for less than a year, which will receive a pro rata increase.

Parliamentary Questions

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the cost of answering a written parliamentary question and an oral parliamentary question. [20721]

Mrs. Liddell: As at April 1997, the average cost of answering a written parliamentary question and an oral parliamentary question was £112 and £260 respectively.

Euro

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copies of the European Commission information pack, "Infeuro," will be distributed to the United Kingdom; and to which groups. [20259]

Mrs. Liddell: "Infeuro" is a newsletter published by the European Commission, which is responsible for its distribution.

VAT (NHS Trusts)

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets have been set by his Department for the recovery of VAT from NHS trusts in each year since 1990. [19998]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total VAT recovered from NHS trusts in each year since 1990. [19999]

Dawn Primarolo: None. NHS trusts regularly receive repayments from Customs and Excise.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures are in place for consulting the National Health Service on the implementation of new procedures for the payment and recovery of VAT from NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement. [19997]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs and Excise has regular meetings with the VAT Committee of the Healthcare Financial Management Association to discuss issues of mutual concern and future development.

South-east Asia

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what terms he has attached to money lent or committed to South Korea as part of the IMF rescue package or otherwise. [19914]

Mrs. Liddell: IMF financing under Korea's Stand-By Arrangement (SBA) is conditioned on a strong programme of adjustment. This involves a tight macroeconomic framework; a comprehensive strategy to restructure the financial sector; further trade and capital account liberalisation; and improvements in corporate structure and governance. The Presidents of the World Bank and Asian Development Bank have also indicated that they are both ready to provide financial support to Korea, conditioned on strong programmes of reform. It is expected that these programmes will focus on financial sector restructuring and institutional reform.

Full implementation of these programmes will help restore market confidence and provide Korea with a solid foundation for more sustained growth. Programmes will be reviewed regularly and future disbursements of funds will be linked to successful completion of the reviews.

In addition, the UK—together with a number of other countries—has agreed to consider the provision of further financial support for Korea. This will be made available only if unanticipated circumstances create the need to supplement resources provided by the international financial institutions, while Korea remains in compliance with IMF arrangements.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the recent United Kingdom contribution to the rescue packages from (a) the IMF, (b) other institutions and (c) directly to (i) South Korea and (ii) other Asian countries. [19912]

Mrs. Liddell: Four Asian countries have recently agreed IMF programmes under the IMF's Emergency Financing Mechanism. They are the Philippines (July), Thailand (August), Indonesia (October) and Korea (November). The latter three countries have in addition agreed, or are negotiating, programmes with the World Bank and Asian Development Bank (AsDB). The financing to be provided by international financial institutions (IFIs) is likely to amount to the following:

$ billion

	International Financial Institution Finance			Total IFI financing
	IMF	World Bank	AsDB
Philippines	1	—	—	1
Thailand	4	1.5	1.2	6.7
Indonesia	10	4.5	3.5	18
South Korea	21	10	4	35

The UK is a major shareholder in the international financial institutions—the UK quota share at both the IMF and World Bank is approximately five per cent., and at the AsDB is two per cent.—and has strongly supported all these programmes of adjustment and the high levels of IFI financing involved. Programmes will be reviewed regularly and future disbursements of funds will be linked to successful completion of the reviews.

In the case of Korea, the UK, together with a number of other countries has in addition agreed to consider the provision of further financial support for Korea. This will be made available only if unanticipated circumstances create the need to supplement resources provided by the international financial institutions, while Korea remains in compliance with IMF arrangements. The UK is willing to consider a contribution of up to USD1.25 billion.

In the case of Thailand, the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) issued a statement on behalf of the monetary authorities of the G10—including the Bank of England—and several other countries, explaining that they stand ready, if need be, to provide a short-term bridging loan to the Thai authorities. So far the need for such a loan has not arisen.

Subsidies to Industry

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the overall cost of subsidies to industry in the form of (a) tax allowances, (b) direct grants, (c) tied research and infrastructure programmes, (d) business rate exemptions and (e) export credit guarantee payments for the last year for which figures are available. [19817]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations have been made to Treasury Ministers on the subject of insurance premium tax for the travel industry since the last General Election. [19666]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations on this issue, including six Parliamentary Questions excluding this and the other recent questions raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) and about 200 letters from Members of this House.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the inability to value-shift on non-EU holidays sold by tour operators or travel agents. [19662]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations on this issue. Value-shifting by travel agents and tour operators does take place on non-EU holidays but since such holidays are not subject to VAT there has never been any question of a VAT motive or a VAT effect in this area. On grounds of simplicity, efficiency and effectiveness it was nevertheless considered right that insurance sold with all holidays should be made subject to the higher rate of insurance premium tax.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's current position and timetable on their review of the differential between the rate of insurance premium tax currently levied for policies sold by tour operators and travel agents and for similar travel insurance policies sold through building societies, BUPA and other retailers. [19660]

Dawn Primarolo: I have asked officials in Customs and Excise to monitor the effect of the introduction of the higher rate of insurance premium tax. It is too early yet to draw any conclusions from this monitoring process.

Aviation Fuel Tax

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on European Union negotiations on taxation on aviation fuel. [19758]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no Commission proposals before the Council at present to end the current exemption of aviation fuel used in international commercial traffic. The Commission has been asked by the ECOFIN Council, on 9 June 1997, to study the environmental and economic effects in Europe of ending the current exemption of aviation fuel. The study is not likely to be completed before May 1998.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what taxes are levied on aviation fuel in the United Kingdom. [19743]

Dawn Primarolo: Aviation turbine fuels for aircraft use are not subject to excise duty. Aviation gasoline is charged at the rate of £0.2255 per litre (£1.025) per gallon). Supplies of both types of fuel for commercial flights within the United Kingdom and for all private flights are liable at the standard rate of Value Added Tax.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised if aircraft fuel was taxed at the same rate as commercial fuel for road transport assuming no alteration in demand. [19744]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimate requested by the hon. Member on taxing aviation fuel at the same rate as diesel would raise approximately £4 billion, assuming no alteration in demand.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15240]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The available data for the official overseas trips taken by myself and my Ministerial team (along with officials in support) since 2 May are as follows:

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Philippines (Bridges)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the development project for a network of bridges in the Philippines and for its applicability in other countries. [20252]

Clare Short: We are providing support from the Aid and Trade Provision for the construction of 218 road bridges in less developed and disaster-prone areas. When appraised in 1995, the programme was considered to be of high developmental value. A second proposal is now under appraisal. This involves support for construction or replacement of bridges located on national highways and our support will depend on whether such bridges bring significant benefits to poor people.

Higher Education Teachers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the reservations expressed by Her Majesty's Government on the recommendation on the status of higher education personnel, passed by UNESCO General Conference in November. [19745]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 5 December 1997, Official Report column 392.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the names of all those people whom he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed, and whether they receive remuneration. [19971]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has made or approved the following appointments since 1 May 1997:

British Council:

Dr. David Drewry,

Director General (wef 1/11998)

Remuneration: £92,480.

Commonwealth Institute:

David French,

Director General

Remuneration: £60,000.

Westminster Foundation for Democracy:

Menzies Cambell CBE, QC, MP,

Governor

Remuneration: Nil

Gary Streeter MP,

Governor

Remuneration: Nil

Mary Calder,

Governor

Remuneration: Nil

Governor

Remuneration: Nil.

The names, positions and remuneration of all the public appointments handled by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary are published on an annual basis in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Report in March. This information will also be available on the world wide Internet once the current update has been completed.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the type and number of weapons destroyed by the United Nations inspection team in Iraq since the ending of the Gulf war; and what types of nerve gas and related items the inspectors believe to be still held by the Iraqi regime. [19687]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The UN Special Commission (UNSCOM) are able to account for 817 and 819 missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres known to have been acquired by Iraq. Forty-eight of these have been destroyed by UNSCOM. In addition, UNSCOM have been responsible for the destruction of 30 warheads, 690 tonnes of chemical weapons, 38,537 filled and empty munitions and more than 3,000 tonnes of precursor chemicals, as well as the main biological weapons production plant at Al Hakm, and large quantities of growth media. Further details can be found in the latest report by the Executive Chairman of UNSCOM, placed in the Library on 10 November 1997. UNSCOM have not published estimates of quantities of weapons of mass destruction (WMD) which may still be held by Iraq. Iraq has worked on a large number of agents including VX, Sarin, Botulinum toxin, Aflatoxin, and Anthrax. UNSCOM remain seriously concerned that they have not been able fully to account for Iraq's known imports and production of material for chemical and biological weapons, and that Iraq retains the expertise and capability to re-commence its WMD programmes at very short notice.

Home Office Export Initiative

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the Association of Chief Police Officers and (b) trade associations representing the policing and security sector concerning the continuation of the work undertaken under the Home Office Export Initiative. [20018]

Mr. Fatchett: Officials from this Department and the DTI are in discussion with the trade associations representing the policing and security sector. My noble Friend the Minister for Trade has also received representations from the Association of Police and Public Security Suppliers. I am not aware of any discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the additional cost to his Department of undertaking work previously administered by the Home Office Export Initiative; and from which budget it will be found. [20017]

Mr. Fatchett: There will be no additional cost to this Department.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what arrangements the work of the Export Initiative previously administered by the Home Office will be carried out by the overseas trade services section of his Department. [20019]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, under the banner of Overseas Trade Services, will continue to give advice and assistance to all UK companies seeking to trade overseas, including those companies from the security industry. This includes access to help provided under the Export Promoter Initiative and Trade Fair and Overseas Seminar Support Scheme.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Presidency of the EU commissioned the report on the circumstances surrounding the agreement leading to the final text of Article 4 of the Protocol to the Amsterdam Treaty integrating the Schengen Acquis into the framework of the European Union; when he received it; when he received a letter from the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands on this matter; and if he will publish it. [19951]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The Presidency of the EU did not commission any such report. The Permanent Representative of the Netherlands wrote to the UK Permanent Representative on the matter on 16 July. It would not be appropriate to publish this piece of diplomatic correspondence sent by another government to HMG.

Child Labour

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking in support of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, with particular reference to through-bonded child labour. [20008]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We strongly support the work of United Nations organisations such as the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO) to promote full implementation of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. In 1998 negotiations will begin on a new ILO Convention on child labour. We will help to ensure that the new convention makes a vital contribution to eliminating the most abhorrent forms of child labour, including bonded labour.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government intend to ratify the treaty banning anti-personnel mines; and what steps he is taking to encourage other countries to ratify the treaty. [20152]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, columns 398–99, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 300.

EU General Affairs Council

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council held on 8 December in Brussels. [20461]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 8 December, the seven A points in document 13048/97 were approved, and the European Parliament Resolutions of 17–21 November in document 11493/97 were noted. The text of both documents will be placed in the Libraries of the House as soon as they become available.

Policy planning unit

1. The Council requested Coreper and the Political Committee to continue discussion on the design of the Policy Planning Unit.

OSCE: Copenhagen Ministerial

2. Denmark reported on prospects for the OSCE Ministerial meeting later this month, in particular the security charter and prospects for OSCE financial reform.

WTO: Financial services

3. The Council discussed prospects for reaching agreement on the financial services negotiations by the 12 December deadline.

Transatlantic relations

4. There were brief reports on the EU-US and EU-Canada Summits which took place in Washington and Ottawa on 5 and 4 December respectively.

Illegal immigration from Iraq

5. The Council discussed measures to counter the recent rise in illegal immigration from northern Iraq, which is presenting problems for a number of EU partners. The Political Committee will assess the situation in northern Iraq. Work on practical steps to stem the flow of illegal immigrants will be taken forward by the K4 Committee on 18 December.

Luxembourg European Council

6. The Presidency set out the agenda for the European Council on 12–13 December. There was a brief discussion.

Enlargement/agenda 2000

7. This formed the main part of the Council's discussions. Member States broadly endorsed the Presidency's report to the Luxembourg Council. However, differences remained concerning the screening process and the creation of a new 15 plus 11 process. The UK supported by Italy, France and the Netherlands spoke against both proposals. The Swedes and Danes supported screening. Germany continued to favour the 15 plus 11 process. The Presidency concluded that it would submit the report to the European Council on its own authority.

EU/Mexico: Signature of agreements

8. In the margins, the EU and Mexico signed two agreements which establish a framework for closer relations into the next century. The Foreign Secretary signed the Partnership and Co-operation Agreement—which covers areas of both Uk and EU competence—on behalf of the UK. The Mexican Foreign and Trade Ministers attended.

ASEM II

9. The GAC adopted the following conclusions: the Council discussed preparations for ASEM II to be held in London in April 1998 and invited the appropriate instances to take forward work in advance of the next ASEM Senior Officials Meeting in London in February.

Any other business: EU/Japan summit

10. As incoming Presidency, the UK informed Member States of plans for the EU/Japan Summit on 12 January 1998.

Tibet

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the Chinese authorities to allow a parliamentary delegation to visit Tibet during his proposed visit to China in January 1998. [20145]

Mr. Fatchett: We are deeply concerned about the human rights situation in China, and welcome the possibility of a parliamentary visit to Tibet. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary looks forward to discussing a wide range of issues, including Tibet, during his planned visit to China.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Primary Schools (Class Sizes)

16. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of current average class sizes in primary schools. [18763]

Mr. Byers: In January 1997 the average class size for primary schools was 27.5

Education and Training Targets

17. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in achieving the national education and training targets. [18764]

Mr. Blunkett: There has been mixed progress towards achieving the current National Targets. It looks possible that we could get close nationally to achieving several of the Targets, but achievement of Foundation Target 2 and Lifetime Target 1 is more problematic.

Earlier this week we published a consultation document which sets out how we might take forward National Targets over the next few years.

Student Tuition Fees

18. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he plans to take in respect of those students who fail to meet their payments on tuition fees; and what provision he has made for this. [18765]

Dr. Howells: It will be for universities and colleges to decide what action to take if students fail to make the private contributions to undergraduate tuition fees, just as they have to for part-time, postgraduate and overseas students. The higher education funding plans for 1998–99 assumed that institutions in England would collect £130 million from private contributions to fees. This figure allowed for costs of some 5 per cent. for collection and any default.

30. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the proportion of students who will have their tuition fees waived. [18780]

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the proportion of students who will have their tuition fees waived. [19187]

Dr. Howells: We have estimated that, under the new arrangements, about 30 per cent. of students, where parental income is taken into account, will make no contribution to the cost of their tuition.

Higher Education

19. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of changes in numbers of applicants for higher education places in 1998–99 against the previous year. [18766]

Dr. Howells: Applicant numbers are at present slightly down compared with last year; but we expect further applications to be submitted before and indeed beyond the closing date.

27. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of potential students qualifying for admission to higher education he estimates will be unable to attend under the terms of his proposed basis for student support owing to financial pressures. [18776]

Dr. Howells: The new funding arrangements are fair and progressive and will target support. I see no reason why they should prevent any student from attending higher education.

Young Unemployed

21. Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people aged between 18 and 24 years, unemployed for over six months, will benefit from the new deal in its first year. [18768]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the total numbers of young people who will require help from the New Deal. In its first year, we will offer help to everyone who becomes eligible for the New Deal, and sufficient places will be available to meet this commitment.

22. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the response of employers in the tourism, leisure and hospitality industries has been to the new deal for young unemployed people. [18770]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Yarmouth (Mr. Wright).

29. Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if there will be the opportunity for young people entering the gateway phase of the new deal to gain some work experience without losing benefits entitlement. [18779]

Mr. Andrew Smith: People claiming the Jobseeker's Allowance are able to benefit from work experience as part of an employment or training programme without losing benefit entitlement. This includes young people on the Gateway phase of the New Deal.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how Rotherham and the Dearne will benefit from the Environmental Task Force and voluntary sector options of the New Deal for young unemployed people. [18772]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In Rotherham, plans are well advanced to offer placements on the Environmental Task Force and voluntary sector option. It is projected that around 480 young unemployed could take up this provision in the period to March 1999. In Dearne, which is not a Pathfinder area, invitations to tender are being issued with a view to offering contracts to run from April 1998. The precise number of places has yet to be decided.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people between 18 and 24 years old will benefit from the New Deal in the (a) constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East and (b) Teesside Region in the first year of operation. [19254]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Kevin White to Mr. Ashok Kumar, dated 11 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to respond to your question about the number of people aged between 18 and 24 who will benefit from the New Deal in the constituency of Middlesbrough and East Cleveland and also in Teeside region in the first year of operation.

The planning assumptions, based on the New Deal District plan, indicate that 1,400 clients who have been unemployed for six months or more will be eligible for the New Deal in the Middlesbrough South and East Cleveland constituency. In Teeside, as a whole the number of clients eligible to benefit in the first year is estimated to be 5928.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the object of the New Deal policy in respect of increasing (a) employment and (b) employability; [19173]

(2) by what criteria the success of the New Deal will be measured. [19225]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The aim of the New Deal is to increase the long-term employability of young and long-term unemployed people by offering the opportunity to participate in a job, training or useful work experience. The Government believe that this has an important part to play in developing a more skilled workforce and efficient labour market which will assist sustainable job-generating, economic growth.

The success of the New Deal in achieving its aims will be evaluated through the analysis of data gained from a range of qualitative and quantitative surveys with New Deal participants, employers and organisations involved in the delivery of the New Deal. We are currently finalising the exact criteria that will form our evaluation strategy.

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the role of the Territorial Army in the delivery of the New Deal. [19475]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

As I said in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 14 November 1997, Official Report, column 688, my Department is keen to play a full part in the New Deal initiative. The contribution that the Territorial Army and other Reserve organisations might make is under consideration in MOD's assessment of its involvement in the initiative.

Education-Work Link

23. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the range and quality of opportunities for young people to link their education to work. [18771]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has this week launched Investing in Young People, a major new strategy aimed at improving the range and quality of education and training available to all young people aged 16 to 19. The measures which make up this strategy are aimed at giving everyone the chance to gain recognised qualifications which will give them the best possible start in the workplace. They include measures to tackle underachievement among this age group, and bring back into education those who have dropped out.

"Excellence in schools"

24. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many responses he has received to the consultation document, "Excellence in schools". [18773]

Mr. Byers: We have received around 8,500 responses to the White Paper. Some 3,500 were responses to the full document and the remainder were responses to the summary version.

School Leavers

25. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of school leavers leave school with no qualifications. [18774]

Dr. Howells: The figure for those who leave education at 16 is not centrally collected. In 1997, 7.7 per cent. of young people completing their compulsory education had no qualifications. The White Paper, "Excellence in schools," outlines measures to reduce this figure.

Further Education Colleges

26. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the demand-led formula on the financing of further education colleges; and what proposals he has to address the current financial problems of further education colleges. [18775]

Dr. Howells: The demand-led element was withdrawn by the previous Government. The additional funding for further education next year, announced by my right hon. Friend on 12 November, provides for the resumption of growth on a financially sound basis. The funding provides for an additional 20,000 full-time equivalent students, with the efficiency squeeze on the sector restricted to the costs arising from inflation.

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial resources are being made available to further education colleges in England in advance of the New Deal. [20743]

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial resources are being made available to further education colleges in England in advance of the New Deal. [20878]

Mr. Blunkett: I am announcing today that we intend to provide £6.05 million of additional resources for Further Education colleges to be financed from Windfall Tax receipts. This will enable them to provide relevant courses from January to JSA claimants under the New Deal in advance of its implementation in April. The additional money will enable FE colleges to make better use of their capacity to tackle unemployment amongst young people.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the effect on further education college budgets of the proposed changes to EU Social Fund provision. [19139]

Dr. Howells: Colleges will have the opportunity in 1998 and 1999 to bid for some £140 million available from Objective 4 of the European Social Fund, to help prepare workers for industrial change.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the surplus or deficit of each further education college ordered by region. [19140]

Dr. Howells: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Further Education Funding Council to write to the hon. Member concerning this matter.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what proposals he has to address the current funding deficit in respect of further education colleges; [19228]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of ending the demand led formula in respect of funding further education colleges on the financial situation of such colleges; [19229]

(3) what plans he has to compensate further education colleges for the loss of the demand led element in Janaury; and if he will make a statement. [19135]

Dr. Howells: The demand-led element was withdrawn by the previous Government. The additional funding for further education next year, announced by my right hon. Friend on 12 November, provides for the resumption of growth on a financially sound basis. The funding provides for an additional 20,000 full-time equivalent students, with the efficiency squeeze on the sector restricted to the costs arising from inflation.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funds he will make available to assist colleges of further education in the Teesside region for the year 1998–99. [19255]

Dr. Howells: On 12 November, my right hon. Friend announced additional funding for the sector next year. The Further Education Funding Council will take decisions, in the light of guidance from my right hon. Friend, on the general principles to be applied to funding for the academic year 1998–99. Allocations of funding to sector colleges within given regions are the responsibility of the Council, which will make them early next year.

School Standards

28. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to raise standards in schools in disadvantaged areas. [18778]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave ealrier to my hon. Friends, the Members for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) and for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor).

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he intends to means test parents and spouses of (a) United Kingdom students and (b) EU students for this payment of tuition fees. [18781]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) on 10 December 1997 Official Report, column 550.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to compensate universities for the revenue consequences of a reduction in student numbers caused by the imposition of tuition fees; and if he will make a statement; [19193]

(2) what action he proposes to take in respect of the increased funding deficit for universities if his Department's advertising campaign fails to attract sufficient higher education students to meet the present targets. [19222]

Dr. Howells: We do not expect institutions generally to have difficulty filling their places.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the additional money which will be available to higher education directly from the imposition of tuition fees in each year from 1998–99 to 2002–03; [19138]

(2) if money raised from the imposition of tuition fees will be additional to projected university budgets. [19194]

Dr. Howells: The higher education funding plans for 1998–99 assumed that institutions in England would collect £130 million from private contributions to fees, and allowed for an additional £165 million for the sector, including a £36 million package for access.

Decisions about funding for 1999–2000 and beyond will have to await the outcome of the Government's Expenditure Review. The Government will take account of the income that universities and colleges collect from the student contribution to tuition fees, the needs of the higher education sector and wider public expenditure considerations.

We have made clear that the savings from the introduction of tuition fees will be used to improve quality, standards and opportunity for all in further and higher education.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the level at which students will be exempt from paying tuition fees will be based on (a) gross, (b) disposable or (c) residual income level. [19156]

Dr. Howells: Contributions to tuition fees in 1998–99 will be calculated in the same way as in previous years, that is on the basis of residual income (gross income after certain allowable deductions). These arrangements will be reviewed for the academic year 1999–2000.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if the level of tuition fees charged to students entering university in 1998 will remain constant for the remainder of their degree course; [19136]

(2) on what percentage of average course costs future charges to full-time undergraduates will be based; and what steps he will take to restrict universities in the increases they make to the charges upon which that percentage is based. [19137]

Dr. Howells: It is for universities themselves to determine the level of fees that they charge students. Our proposals assume that full-time undergraduates will contribute up to £1,000 towards tuition fees in 1998–99: this represents around 25 per cent. of the average course cost, which was the percentage the Dearing Inquiry recommended for private individual contributions. The Teaching and Higher Education Bill, currently before the other House, contains provisions requiring that the maximum financial support from Government for tuition fees, and hence by implication the maximum contribution from students, parents or spouses towards tuition fees, cannot increase by more than inflation without Parliamentary approval. Further provisions in the Bill gives the Secretary of State a reserve power to control top-up fees, if necessary.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the announcement of the introduction of tuition fees on applications for university places in 1998. [19191]

Dr. Howells: None. It is too early to estimate the number of education applicants for 1998–99. Applicant numbers are at present slightly down compared with last year; but, by this stage last year, fewer than half of the final number of applications had been submitted.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students studying sandwich courses will be expected to pay tuition fees in their year out in industry. [19186]

Dr. Howells: The maximum tuition fees contribution, subject to assessment against family income, will be £500 in a year when a student spends the entire year of a course on a sandwich placement. This contribution is towards the cost incurred by the institution of administrative and pastoral arrangements relating to the placement.

Where sandwich or other elements form less than a full year away, the £1,000 fee will be payable, subject to the family income assessment.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students presently studying HNDs and due to finish in summer 1998 who go on to a one year top up degree as part of a profession pathway to degree status, will be expected to pay tuition fees on that year. [19188]

Dr. Howells: A student who is already on or begins an HND course in academic year 1997–98, and who goes on to a degree course immediately after completing the HND course, will be treated as an existing student and be eligible for support throughout the degree course under the 1997–98 arrangements. That means they will pay no tuition fees for the duration of the course.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what action he plans to take in respect of those students who fail to meet their payments on tuition fees and what provision he has made for this; [19183]

(2) if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the collection of tuition fees; by whom they will be collected; and how much he estimates this will cost; [19184]

(3) what funds he will make available to assist universities in collecting tuition fees. [19190]

Dr. Howells: Universities and colleges already have administrative arrangements in place to collect tuition fees from part-time students, overseas students, self-funding students, and many postgraduates. They will be able to build on these arrangements in collecting private contributions to tuition fees from full-time undergraduate students under the new funding arrangements for higher education and in deciding what action to take if students fail to make the private contributions.

The higher education funding plans for 1998–99 assumed that institutions in England will collect £130 million from private contributions to fees. This figure allowed for some 5 per cent. for collection and any default.

Teenage Mothers (Schooling)

31. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support is available for teenage mothers who wish to continue their schooling. [18782]

Dr. Howells: If a teenage mother cannot attend school, the local education authority has a duty to provide suitable education if she is of compulsory school age, and may so provide if she is older.

Training

32. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom has a highly skilled work force. [18783]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Much is already being done to address the needs for a skilled work force through the Government's current programme of work. We announced recently our plans to develop a national skills agenda and the setting up of a Skills Task Force and a Skills Unit to identify where skills gaps exist and how they should be best addressed. The New Deal for young unemployed people includes training to a certified standard in each of its options.

Literacy Standards

33. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial resources he has allocated in respect of his strategy to raise standards in literacy. [18784]

Mr. Byers: More than £54 million is available in the new Standards Fund to support activities to raise the standards of literacy in primary schools. This includes £50 million to support the professional development of teachers through the National Literacy Strategy, £4 million for Summer Literacy Schools (with private sponsorship providing a further £1 million), and additional support for Family Literacy, details of which we expect to announce shortly.

Education Budget

34. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with local authorities regarding the use of the extra money for education announced in the budget for 1998–99. [18785]

Mr. Byers: The Department's officials have discussed with representatives of the Churches and Local Government organisations the principles and criteria for the allocation of the first two phases of capital funding under the New Deal for Schools.

Furthermore, the Secretary of State has written to LEAs, emphasising that a £1,017 million increase in recurrent funding announced by the Chancellor in his Budget has been made available for the people's priority of raising standards in our schools.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to evaluate the operation of the employment and goods and services section of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [20281]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has an ongoing, long-term research strategy to evaluate the operation of the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA). This takes in employers, service providers and individual disabled people. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights, announced the latest phase of this research in a speech to the Association of Disabled Professionals on 6 December. It will review in a systematic and collective way information on cases brought in the Courts and Industrial Tribunals and how they are resolved. The results will be available to the Task Force which I will chair which is to consider how best to secure comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people.

Self-employment

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the New Deal for young people will help people into self-employment. [18769]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are designing a comprehensive programme of help for young people who want to start their own business which will come on stream in June 1998. Advice will be available from day one of the Gateway. There will be specific help including advice, support and monitoring by providers with expertise in this area and the opportunity to carry out test-trading and to undertake relevant, high quality training.

Part-time Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the £36 million access package for higher education is designed to benefit part-time students; and under what arrangements this will be distributed. [19189]

Dr. Howells: The £36 million access package for higher education in 1998–99 includes some £2 million to enable universities and colleges in England to remit fees for part-time students in higher education who have lost their jobs. The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) will distribute the funds: further information will be issued in due course.

The package also doubles the amount available for higher education Access Funds for next academic year. Part-time students will be eligible for assistance from the Funds for the first time. We will be discussing guidelines for the use of the Funds with the HEFCE, who allocate the Funds to institutions, and others shortly. We will inform the House of the decisions reached in the usual way.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make (a) structural and (b) functional changes to training and enterprise councils. [19179]

Dr. Howells: We greatly value the important work TECs are doing at the local level to raise skill levels and foster enterprise. We recognise the benefit to local partnerships of a strong private sector contribution. There are therefore no plans to make fundamental changes to the structure and functions of TECs.

We do, however, see scope for TECs to improve their performance and a range of work is in hand to raise the performance of all TECs towards the level of the best. For example, the work being done jointly with the TEC National Council to encourage TECs to benchmark themselves against each other and other organisations, and to share good practice effectively.

Top-up Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his definition of top-up fees in the context of university charges; if he will list the areas which are within the remit of top-up fees; and if he will make a statement. [19141]

Dr. Howells: Top-up fees would be fees charged by publicly-funded universities to full-time undergraduate students for tuition or other provision necessary to complete their course which raised the total fees charged above the maximum level of financial support available from the Government to such students for fees.

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many ministerial announcements have not been made, in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18895]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 3 December 1997]: The information requested is not readily available. Major announcements are made, in the first instance, to the House. There are cases, for example when the House is not sitting, when announcements are made by other means, including press releases.

Undergraduates

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of undergraduates failed to complete their degree courses in each of the last three years; and if he will list the reasons given for failure to complete. [19172]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not yet available centrally. The latest available figures for drop-out among full-time and sandwich first-degree students are shown in the most recent DfEE Departmental Report (Cm 3610), a copy of which is in the Library.

Middle Schools

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research has been carried out by his Department into the performance of middle schools. [19515]

Mr. Byers: The Department has not itself undertaken particular research into the performance of middle schools. The OFSTED database covers middle schools and material from it is available on request.

Playing Fields

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to collate centrally the number of applications to sell off playing fields by schools by (a) location and (b) local education authority. [19818]

Mr. Byers: There is no requirement upon local education authorities to apply for permission before disposing of the assets which they own. Grant-maintained schools do need the prior consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State before they may dispose of their assets. Information on the number of applications received from these schools to dispose of playing fields is already collated centrally.

English (Key Stage 3)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many complaints he has received about the standard of marking in key stage 3 testing of English. [19809]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has received 87 letters about this issue.

Student Loans

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will amend the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1997 to ensure that students already on courses who do not meet the settled status requirement but were eligible for a student loan under previous regulations, will remain eligible for a loan for the duration of their current studies. [20742]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid the Education (Student Loans) (Amendment) Regulations 1997 before the House. The amendment Regulations introduce a transitional provision to protect students who do not have settled status but who have already demonstrated eligibility for a loan under previous Regulations. Such students will continue to be eligible for a student loan until they finish their present course (or a second course if they continue their studies without a break). The Department will be writing to all Higher Education Institutions before Christmas informing them of this amendment.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students whose maintenance grants are to be phased out in 1998–99 will be eligible for the increased student loans that those students in years 1999 and 2000 are eligible to receive. [19230]

Dr. Howells: New students entering higher education in the 1998–99 academic year will be eligible for increased loans in that year to offset the reduction in the level of maintenance grants. In 1999–2000, we propose to abolish maintenance grants. These students will be eligible for an income-related loan for their maintenance on the same basis as 1999–2000 entrants.

Further Education Funding

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much extra funding for further education will be raised from the increased contribution from employers to the cost of courses he announced on 12 November; and if these funds were part of the £83 million of funding announced that day. [18601]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend looks to the Further Education Funding Council to establish arrangements to secure in 1998–99 an additional £20 million from employers to the costs of employer-led provision, as part of the £83 million of new funding for further education.

Student Support Agency

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy in respect of the Dearing Report's Recommendation on the establishment of a unified student support agency; and what estimate he has made of the timetable for its implementation. [19174]

Dr. Howells: The Government are currently considering the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education's recommendation for a unified student support agency and expect to make an announcement shortly.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many public appointments he has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin. [16779]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made a total of 77 public appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies and advisory bodies since 1 May.

The number and percentage receiving remuneration are as follows:

(i) 14 (18.2 per cent.) receive an honorarium;

(ii) 8 (10.4 per cent.) receive a daily fee for meetings;

(iii) 50 (64.9 per cent.) receive expenses only;

(iv) 5 (6.5 per cent.) receive an annual salary.

With regard to the number and percentage of those appointments which are (i) of Afro-Caribbean origin and (ii) of Asian origin, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 669.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases his Department forecast would be brought under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 in its first year of operation. [20278]

Mr. Hoon: It is forecast that approximately 200 cases are expected per year, for the first three years, following commencement of the Act.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases were brought under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 during its first year of operation; and how many of those cases were won by the appellant. [20279]

Mr. Hoon: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 came into force on 2 December 1996. Statistics have been collected only since the beginning of February 1997. The number of cases issued between the beginning of February and the end of October 1997 was 36. Of these 13 cases were for damages only and 23 were for damages and/or an injunction or declaration. The information requested as to the number of cases won by the appellant is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact which his recent legal aid proposals will have on disabled people seeking to take legal action under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [20280]

Mr. Hoon: We will be consulting widely before any final decisions are made about changes to the scope of civil legal aid. During this process careful consideration will be given to whether there are proceedings for which public funding should continue to be available for money or damages claims. If the hon. Gentleman believes that disabled people seeking to take legal action under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 face particular problems, I would be grateful if he could let me know what they are so that consideration can be given to this during the consultation process.

Legal Aid

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the cost of legal aid before cost recovery and retention of contributions, (b) the amount of cost recovered, (c) the amount of contributions retained and (d) the net cost after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained for (i) contract, (ii) Inheritance Act, (iii) landlord and tenant and (iv) housing and disrepair proceedings in each of the last four years. [19278]

Mr. Hoon: Legal aid gross expenditure, costs recovered, and contributions retained in (i) contract (ii) Inheritance Act and (iii) landlord and tenant proceedings for cases closed during the last four financial years are as follows:

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Gross payments
Contract	40.2	44.1	56.0	60.3
Inheritance Act	2.9	3.1	4.2	4.4
Landlord and tenant	20.4	24.6	31.7	33.9

Landlord and tenant	0.19	0.22	0.26	0.33
Net of costs (after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained)
Contract	28.4	31.9	39.8	41.3
Inheritance Act	1.2	1.1	1.6	1.7
Landlord and tenant	14.4	15.9	19.5	18.5

It is not possible to provide information separately in respect of housing and disrepair matters.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the cost of legal aid before cost recovery and retention of contributions, (b) the amount of cost recovered, (c) the amount of contributions retained and (d) the net cost after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained for (i) civil litigation and (ii) professional and other negligence, excluding in each case personal injury and medical negligence in each of the last four years. [19277]

Mr. Hoon: A breakdown of legal aid expenditure and receipts in respect of civil litigation and professional and other negligence, excluding personal injury and medical negligence, for cases closed in the last four years was as follows:

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Civil litigation (including professional and other negligence)
Gross Payments	436.6	474.9	566.1	622.4
Costs Received	55.2	60.6	71.5	80.7
Damages Retained	45.8	44.7	47.3	59.0
Contributions Retained	10.4	10.9	12.5	15.4
Net Costs	325.8	359.1	435.6	467.9

Contributions Retained	0.4	0.4	0.4	1.0
Net Costs	13.9	22.1	17.6	19.2

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the cost of legal aid for non-matrimonial proceedings, excluding Children Act proceedings, before cost recovery and retention of contributions, (b) the amount of cost recovered, (c) the amount of contributions retained and (d) the net cost after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained in each of the last four years. [19279]

Mr. Hoon: A breakdown of the legal aid expenditure and receipts in respect of non-matrimonial cases, excluding Children Act proceedings, for cases closed in the last four years was as follows:

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Gross payments	317.0	375.8	454.8	509.7
Costs recovered	164.1	197.2	245.0	281.3
Contributions retained	3.1	4.0	4.6	5.3
Net costs (after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained)	149.8	174.6	205.2	223.1

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the proportion of damages recovered in all legally aided (a) personal injury and (b) medical negligence cases closed in each of the last three years. [19280]

Mr. Hoon: The proportion of damages recovered by the Legal Aid Board in legally aided personal injury and medical negligence cases closed in each of the last three years were as follows:

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Personal injury
Gross costs	£151.5 million	£189.3 million	£219.8 million
Damages recovered	£2.2 million	£3.0 million	£3.5 million
Percentage of damages recovered	1.5	1.6	1.6

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the cost of legal aid for personal injury litigation before cost recovery and retention of contributions, (b) the amount of cost recovered, (c) the amount of contributions retained and (d) the net cost after deduction of costs recovered and contributions retained for (i) all personal injury litigation, (ii) medical negligence cases and (iii) personal injury cases excluding medical negligence in 1996–97. [19281]

Mr. Hoon: A breakdown of legal aid expenditure and receipts in respect of personal injury litigation and medical negligence cases for cases closed in 1996–97, was as follows:

£ million

	Gross payments	Costs received	Damages retained	Contributions retained	Net costs
All personal injury litigation	274.1	206.7	4.1	2.0	61.8
Medical negligence	54.3	25..8	0.6	0.7	27.2

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Medical negligence
Gross costs	£38.6 million	£50.2 million	£54.3 million
Damages recovered	£0.6 million	£0.7 million	£0.6 million
Percentage of damages recovered	1.6	1.4	1.1

Legal Expenses

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of fixed costs on existing legal expenses insurance premiums; and if he will make a statement. [19339]

Mr. Hoon: None. My Department is, however, in close contact with the insurance industry. A fixed costs system would necessarily make the task of matching the risk being insured to the appropriate level of premium easier. The level of premiums must be a matter for each company offering policies.

Personal Injury Actions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he will take to ensure that lawyers will not seek to recover from their clients more than the fixed costs in privately funded personal injury actions valued at less than £15,000. [19321]

Mr. Hoon: The arrangements that clients make with their lawyers are essentially private contractual arrangements. I would wish to give effect to the proposal made by Lord Woolf, that the fixed recoverable costs should apply between the client and the solicitor unless there was a written business agreement to the contrary.

Woolf Reforms

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the Information technology needs of the court system required by the introduction of the Woolf reforms; and if he will make a statement on the (a) extent of the changes and (b) timetable. [19327]

Mr. Hoon: The procedures are currently being developed which will achieve the Civil Justice reforms and work is underway to identify the IT support required. The IT solution will be developed by our private sector partner and we plan for them to be in place for 1 April 1999.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment has been made of the training needs of judges following the introduction of the Woolf reforms; what is the budget for judicial training; and if he will make a statement. [19332]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB), which is a non-departmental governmental body. The JSB has assessed the training needs of judges in anticipation of the introduction of the Woolf reforms. During 1997 a series of seminars on the principles of the Woolf reforms were delivered to all full-time judges who hear civil matters. More detailed training will be given to all full-time judges who hear civil matters. More detailed training will be given to all full-time and part-time judges who hear civil matters once the new rules have been finalised. The financial allocations for the JSB for 1998–99 have not yet been finalised.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the training costs involved in using the new information technology systems required by the introduction of the Woolf reforms. [19326]

Mr. Hoon: No detailed estimates have yet been made. The scope of training cannot be established until the IT system to support the reforms has been specified and the systems design has commenced. This will not be until 1998, after final rule changes have been agreed. Once the specification has been agreed, the costs associated with the provision of training can be more accurately predicted.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19311]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently no special advisers employed in this Department. As announced on 9 December 1997, the Lord Chancellor has decided to appoint Mr. Garry Hart as a Special Adviser. Mr. Hart's appointment will not, however, take effect until 2 March 1998.

No-one from outside the Department is currently employed in a task force or review body. The total fees and benefits paid to review body members from outside the Department in the year to 1 May 1997 was approximately £37,500. Since 1 May 1997, such expenditure has totalled approximately £24,700. These figures include payments for travel and subsistence. It is not possible to distinguish the cost of ministers' and officials' time spent on task force and review-related work.

Conditional Fees

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's estimate of the savings the Government will make from the introduction of fixed costs on conditional fees; what research his Department has commissioned on the impact of such costs; and what other recent research his Department has evaluated into legal costs. [19320]

Mr. Hoon: It is not clear why it is thought that "fixed costs on conditional fees" should result in savings to the Government. Nor is it clear on what the hon. Member thinks such cost would impact. As to research into legal costs, my Department is currently funding the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies research into the amount of work needed to take a case through the Fast Track.

Civil Justice and Legal Aid

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department pursuant to his oral statement of 21 November, Official Report, column 534, what additional staff he estimates will be needed to ensure the effective running of the (a) fast track, (b) multi-track and (c) judicial case management procedures. [19451]

Mr. Hoon: The policy and procedures which will achieve the civil justice reforms are still the subject of public consultation. Until these are finalised and the degree of IT support is known, it will not be possible to assess what, if any, additional staff will be needed.

CABINET OFFICE

Advisers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19309]

Mr. Mandelson: I am not a Minister in charge of a Department.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the yield to the Exchequer in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01 arising from the decision not to index fully for inflation the thresholds for employers' national insurance contributions; and if she will make a statement. [19865]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 5 December 1997, Official Report, column 383.

No estimates are available for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 because no decision has been made about the level of the earnings brackets for employers' secondary Class 1 contributions in those years.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to reply to the letter of 21 November from the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam concerning the review of disability benefits. [20282]

Mr. Denham: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 9 December.

As published in the 1997–98 Departmental Report, the Department of Social Security is committed to answering all correspondence within 20 days.

Under-Secretary of State (Women's Issues)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the dates on which submissions were made to her concerning women by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock); [20146]

(2) if she will list the days on which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), has been absent from the Department since her appointment; [20147]

(3) for what reason the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) was not present to answer Oral Questions on 17 November. [20148]

Ms Ruddock: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 20 November 1997, Official Report, columns 292–94.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in England and Wales are receiving mobility allowance. [18966]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Mobility Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 10 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of people in England and Wales who are receiving mobility allowance.

The information is not available in the form requested. Mobility Allowance was replaced by Disability Living Allowance (DLA) in April 1992. DLA comprises of two components, care and mobility. The number of people in receipt of the mobility component of DLA are shown below.

England: 1,347,788

Wales: 143,896

Figures are subject to change.

Lone Parent Premium

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale are in receipt of lone parent premium. [18653]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 10 December 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many persons in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale are in receipt of the lone parent premium.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA District Offices which do not correspond to constituency boundaries or a specific geographical area. The BA's Greater Manchester Lancashire District includes the offices of Burnley, Rossendale, Blackburn and Accrington.

From April this year, the lone parent premium was replaced by a higher rate of family premium for lone parents.

The number of people in receipt of Income Support lone parent rate of family premium in the Greater Manchester Lancashire District was 9,758, at 31 August 1997. This figure is the latest available and may be subject to change. This figure does not include those lone parents who are over pensionable age or who are sick who would qualify for a higher rate premium, such as a pensioner or disability premium.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Economic and Social Research Council Grants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Economic and Social Research Council grants have been awarded to (a) men and (b) women in the last five years. [18762]

Mr. Battle: Data disaggregated by gender are readily available only for 1996–97, when the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) introduced an equal opportunities monitoring system. A number of ESRC Research Grants are awarded to groups, rather than individuals, which may be of mixed gender. The Statistics are based on returns of ESRC monitoring forms for Research Grant funding.

grants awarded: 181

Returned forms: 138 (76 per cent.)

All male: 80

All female: 309

Mixed: 26.

The following data show total awards made for the previous four years.

Year	Awards
1992–93	203
1993–94	217
1994–95	178
1995–96	225

The ESRC is committed to continuing monitoring of the gender of award recipients.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish her Department's memorandum on handling the problem of coal closures. [18045]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 November 1997]: No.

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for arms export licences to Turkey (a) are currently pending with her Department, (b) have been approved since 1 May, listing type and amount of equipment and the companies involved, and (c) have been refused since 1 May, listing the type and amount of equipment and the companies involved. [14826]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and the following results were obtained.

Between 2 May and 5 November inclusive, decisions were taken on 73 applications for standard or open individual licences to export to Turkey goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (the so-called "Military List"); 71 standard individual export licences were granted, and one application for such a licence refused; and one open individual export licence was issued. At 5 November, 105 applications were awaiting a decision.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to her answer of 21 July 1997, Official Report, column 450, what steps she is taking to ensure that equipment which should be classified under a specific Export of Goods (Control) Order category but may be exported as part of a larger export order that would be classified under a different Export of Goods (Control) Order category is recorded. [20033]

Mrs. Roche: As from 23 September this year all goods on new export licence applications have been assessed against the current legislation and the appropriate export control categories recorded, both on paper and on the computer databases. The Export Control Organisation is retrospectively carrying this out for all applications on which a decision has been taken since 2 May.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to her answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 134, if she will provide details of the four open general export licences referred to in her reply; which goods are allowed for export under these licences; which destinations are covered by these licences; and which United Kingdom exporters have registered to use these licences; [20038]

(2) pursuant to her answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 132, on open general export licences, what export categories the 21 OGELs cover and for which countries of destination; and if she will list the companies registered for the 14 OGELs which require registration. [20053]

Mrs. Roche: Further to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Mr. Letwin) on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 124–26, copies of all current Open General Export Licences are being placed in the libraries of the House today. The goods and country coverage are specified in each licence.

The inquiries that would be necessary as regards the release of the identity of the companies registered to use these licences could only be undertaken at disproportionate cost.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Comprehensive Spending Review within her Department will be complete; and when the results will be provided. [19584]

Mrs. Beckett: The Department's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) is still in progress. I expect the CSR to be completed next summer.

Late Payment

Maria Eagle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will publish a summary of the responses to the Green Paper, "Improving the Payment Culture: a Statutory Right to Claim Interest on Late Payment of Commercial Debt"; and if she will make a statement. [20585]

Mrs. Roche: I am publishing today a summary of the responses received to the Green Paper "Improving the Payment Culture: a Statutory Right to Claim Interest on Late Payment of Commercial Debt". The paper shows that there is strong support for the Government's proposals on the best way to legislate to give small businesses the right to charge interest on late payment of commercial debt. In time, the new right will be extended to all businesses and the public sector.

The Department distributed the Green Paper to businesses, business representative organisations, interested individuals and the public sector. More than 450 responses were received. I am very pleased that so many people have taken the time to contribute views. We have listened carefully to what they have had to say; in a technical area, the views of experts have been crucial in framing the proposed legislation.

The Green Paper listed Government proposals on which responses were requested. I am delighted that the proposals received the very firm endorsement of respondents.

It is clear that there is real support for a statutory right to claim interest. This bears out all that the Government had heard from small firms themselves. Late payment is a real problem for business. Firms are tired of having to carry the cost of their customers' late payment.

Copies of the summary will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is her current estimate of kilowatt hours electricity created by wind power in England and Wales; and if she will make a statement; [20301]

(2) what is her current estimate of kilowatt hours electricity created by hydro-electric power in England and Wales; and if she will make a statement. [20302]

Mr. Battle: Generation from wind in the United Kingdom as a whole during 1996 was 486 million kilowatt hours, 0.14 per cent. of the total UK generation of electricity. This represented a 24 per cent. increase on 1995 and over 14 times the generation in 1992. Wind farms in England and Wales generated about 75 per cent. of the UK total in 1996, nearly all of which was supported under the non-fossil obligation orders.

Generation from hydro-electric sources in the United Kingdom as a whole during 1996 was 3,361 million kilowatt hours, 1 per cent. of the total UK generation of electricity. A further 1,556 million kilowatt hours was produced by pumped storage plant, but 2,430 million kilowatt hours was used in pumping. The highest annual level of generation from hydro sources was in 1992 at 5,431 million kilowatt hours, representing 1.7 per cent. of total UK generation in that year. Dry weather has restricted the availability of hydro power in the years since 1992. Hydro plant in England and Wales generated about 6 per cent. of the UK total in 1996. For hydro plant in England and Wales supported under the non-fossil fuel obligations orders, generation was 1 per cent. of the UK total.

Onshore wind energy and small scale hydro are proposed to be supported under a further non-fossil fuel obligation order, NFFO-5, the policy proposals for which I announced to the House on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 507–08.

Enemy Property

Mr. Twigg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Government Departments are being consulted in preparation of the report on British policy towards enemy property during and after the Second World War. [19654]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department holds regular discussions with many other departments. On this issue, discussions have been mostly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, although the Cabinet Office, the Home Office, the Treasury and the Territorial Departments have also been consulted.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates have been made of the employment consequences for the gas industry of the moratorium on gas-fired power stations; [19989]

(2) what estimate she has made of the total investment which has been frozen by the moratorium on assents for gas-fired power stations. [19991]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 9 December 1997]: It is not possible to make such an estimate. Assessing the impact on those associated with gas fired generation must await the outcome of the Review.

Chambers of Commerce and TECs (Mergers)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications she has received for mergers between Chambers of Commerce and training and enterprise councils; and if she will list those she has (a) approved and (b) rejected. [18994]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

Between 1995 and April 1997 13 applications to merge from TECs and Chambers of Commerce were received by the former Government, all of which were approved. Since May 1997 one application, for the Norfolk and Waveney area, has been received and is currently under consideration. The approved applications were from:

Milton Keynes and North Buckinghamshire
Sussex
Oldham
Rotherham
Shropshire
Coventry and Warwickshire
Greater Peterborough
Northamptonshire
South Derbyshire
St. Helens
Wolverhampton
Hereford and Worcester
Wigan.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the clear-up rates for each police district for (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) 1996. [19860]

Mr. Ingram: The percentage clear-up rates for each police sub-division for the four years from 1993 to 1996 are shown in the table:

Central Community Relations Unit

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list all organisations in receipt of funding from the Central Community Relations Unit in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96. [19859]

Mr. Worthington: The Central Community Relations Unit provided funding totalling £4,642,941.54 in 1994–95 and £5,586,200.09 in 1995–96. Details of the organisations funded in those years, together with the amount of funding they received, are set out in the following tables. These do not include payments from the European Social Fund in respect of European Union Measures administered by the Central Community Relations Unit.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number of live lambs (a) exported from and (b) imported into Northern Ireland, indicating their (i) destination and (ii) origin and the number to and from each country for each of the last two years and the current year to the latest available date. [19325]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is set out in the following tables. The figures include all sheep as the records do not show lambs separately.

Exports from Northern Ireland

Year	Destination
	Great Britain	Netherlands	Belgium	Italy	Total
1995	109,341	3	364	0	109,708
1996	83,425	3	25	12	83,465
1997 (to w/e 22 November)	89,405	0	5	0	89,410

Imports to Northern Ireland

Year	Country of origin
	Republic of Ireland	Great Britain	Netherlands	Belgium	France	Total
1995	108,520	9,974	5	8	1	118,508
1996	101,654	13,628	7	0	7	115,296
1997 (to w/e 22 November)	99,267	34,809	0	66	8	134,150

There is derogation from the inspection and certification requirements of Council Directive 91/68/EEC in respect of trade between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. There are therefore no recorded figures for the number of sheep exported to the Republic. The figure shown for imports relates to sheep imported from the Republic for direct slaughter.

SCOTLAND

Breast Implants

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision there is in the National Health Service in Scotland for women who suffer from ruptured silicone breast implants, to have them removed. [19286]

Mr. Galbraith: Any decision to remove a silicone breast implant is a matter of clinical judgment in the context of the one-to-one relationship between doctor and patient, taking into account the individual circumstances of each patient. The National Health Service in Scotland would provide whatever treatment is judged necessary.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a copy of the Confirmed Assignation Statement in respect of the Skye Bridge in the Library; and if he will make a statement on the Skye Bridge Company and the collection of tolls. [19920]

Mr. Dewar: As the hon. Member is aware, we have been working with Skye Bridge Ltd. to implement the significant package of toll reductions that I announced on 4 July. I am pleased to advise that the toll reductions will come into force on 1 January 1998. The revised Toll Order will be laid today. We are simultaneously laying Regulations that set the amounts Skye Bridge Ltd. will be able to charge should they have to remove vehicles from the crossing in the event of non-payment of tolls.

The hon. Member has previously recognised that the situation at Skye Bridge is not of our making. I trust he also appreciates that we have met out commitment to provide a fairer tolling regime for the people of the Highlands within current constraints.

I shall write shortly to the hon. Member about the Assignation Statement and the other points raised in his recent letter of 27 November. A copy of my reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Training

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the suitability of (a) existing training bodies with charitable status, (b) the local enterprise councils and (c) further education colleges (i) singly and (ii) in partnership, to carry out the management function for New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [17332]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 24 November 1997]: My department wrote to interested organisations on the delivery of the New Deal on 23 October. I will place a copy of this letter in the Library.

Medical and Dental Students

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental students graduated from Scottish universities in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [18705]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer Monday 8 December 1997]: The number of dentistry students (full-time) who graduated from Scottish Higher Education Institutions in 1995 and 1996 is as follows:

Full-time dentistry graduates from Scottish Higher Education Institutions

	First Degree	Postgraduate
1995	105	7
1996	117	6

Data for 1997 graduates are not yet available.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the BMA concerning the issue of tuition fees for medical an dental students from parts of the United Kingdom other than Scotland attending degree courses at Scottish universities. [19586]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 8 December 1997]: In July, the Scottish Office invited the British Medical Association to comment on the Dearing and Garrick reports. On 18 September, the Scottish Office received a response from the British Medical Association in Scotland. it made no specific mention of the issue of tuition fees for medical and dental students from other parts of the UK studying in Scotland.

On 27 October I announced the Government's proposals for assistance to medical and dental students. These are identical in Scotland to those applying elsewhere in the UK. Since then, I have received no representations from the British Medical Association.

E-mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to the answer from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster of 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 441, if he will list the e-mail addresses of (a) Ministers, (b) senior officials and (c) chief executives of agencies for which he is responsible. [15874]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 13 November 1997]: E-mail contact addresses for appropriate Departmental officials (at head of division level) and agency chief executives are given in the "Who does What?" section of The Scottish Office's Internet website, the address for which is www.scoland.gov.uk. Ministerial e-mail addresses are not currently published. Procedures to allow the public to send e-mail messages to Scottish Office Ministers are currently under consideration.

Accounting Officers

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions written directions have been sought by permanent secretaries and other accounting officers in the past five years; in what circumstances; and on what dates. [19218]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 December 1997]: None.

WALES

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19318]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Department employs two special advisers, John Adams and Huw Roberts. Their salaries are negotiated individually and this information is confidential.

Information about all public appointments for which I have responsibility is published in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales". This publication is updated quarterly and is available in the Library of the House.

A470 Roadworks

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if his Department has completed the necessary orders to advance the A470 Blaenau Ffestiniog to Betws-y-Coed roadworks to completion; [19519]

(2) what factors underlie the delay in advancing the roadworks on the A470 between Blaenau Ffestiniog and Betws-y-Coed; and if he will make a statement; [19518]

(3) what recent correspondence there has been between his Department and the National Trust regarding land to be acquired to advance the A470 Blaenau Ffestiniog to Betws-y-Coed roadworks to completion; and if he will make a statement. [19520]

Mr. Hain: The roadworks referred to are the A470 Dolwyddelan to Pont yr Afanc scheme which form Stage 2 of the Lledr Valley improvement. This scheme, and all others in the forward trunk road programme (with the exception of the A55 Anglesey dualling proposals) is subject to the review announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 3 July, details of which were included in the consultation document 1 published on 31 July.

The consultation period ended on 31 October and the responses are being assessed. The review process is at an early stage and it is not possible to say when we will be able to give any indications as to the size and composition of the forward trunk road programme.

Negotiations with the National Trust are continuing in parallel with the review process. These discussions will not prejudice the outcome of the review and are designed to ensure that valuable time is not lost if the scheme remains in the programme following the review. It would not, of course, be appropriate to reveal details of these negotiations.

Agenda 21

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of Agenda 21 in Wales. [19669]

Mr. Win Griffiths: At the UN "Earth Summit" in Rio de Janeiro in 1992 an Agenda for the 21st Century setting out how countries can work towards sustainable development was adopted by over 150 nations, including the UK.

This Government have already shown that they are fully committed to this principle. We have established a new Cabinet Committee on the Environment which will help us to deal with sustainable development issues in a co-ordinated way and which will aim to set clear goals for sustainable development. A new House of Commons Environmental Audit Committee has been established. We will soon publish a consultation paper on proposals for a revised UK sustainable development strategy and the Welsh Office plans to host a national sustainable development conference to explore in a Welsh context the issues raised in the consultation paper.

Two thirds of the actions in Agenda 21 require the active involvement of local authorities. At the UN Special Session in June my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said that he wanted all local authorities in the UK to adopt Local Agenda 21 strategies by the year 2000. The Welsh Office is involved in various initiatives to encourage local authorities in Wales to make progress on this front. A guidance document for local authorities will be launched early next year. The Welsh Office is one of a number of organisations arranging a Local Agenda 21 seminar for Chief Executives and Leaders of local authorities and other key bodies in Wales.

The Government are committed to ensuring that the Welsh Assembly promotes sustainable development. On 8 December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State confirmed on Second Reading of the Government of Wales Bill our intention to place a duty on the Assembly to have regard to the principle of sustainability.

Welsh Timber

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made towards increasing the use of Welsh timber; and if he will make a statement. [19673]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The source of the timber they use is a matter for the commercial judgment of manufacturers. However, grant has been awarded to Coed Cymru through the Rural Wales Objective 5b Programme 1994–99, to employ a marketing organiser to promote the Welsh hardwood sector.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Subsidised Offal Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the amount by weight of offal disposed of in the BSE subsidised offal scheme in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98, together with the weight of offal disposed during each of the financial years 1991 to 1995–96; [20267]

(2) if he will list by weight the amount of offal disposed of via the BSE subsidised offal scheme in 1996–97 and 1997–98, and the weight of offal disposed of during the financial years 1991–92 and 1995–96. [20272]

Mr. Rooker: Approximately 957,000 tonnes of clean offal (that is excluding Specified Bovine Material and Over Thirty Months Scheme material) was processed under the Rendering Industry Support Scheme 1996 in 1996–97. There is no equivalent figure for clean offal processed under the 1997–98 Scheme since this is based on outputs of meat and bone meal (MBM) and tallow. Some 227,000 tonnes of MBM and tallow has been processed to date under the Rendering Industry Support Scheme 1997.

Approximately 1.1 million tonnes of clean offals were processed by the rendering industry in 1995–96. We do not have figures for the tonnages processed in 1991–92.

Beef Products (Removal Charges)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the level of charges being imposed on family butchers and other small businesses for collection and removal of offal and related products. [20268]

Mr. Rooker: The Government recognise that the meat supply chain, including butchers and other small businesses, has suffered as a result of the BSE crisis. Substantial support has been provided since April 1996 to prevent the disorderly collapse of the chain. This is now being phased out to allow the industry to adjust to the changing economics. However, the Government cannot continue to shield the chain from the post-BSE economics of meat production in the United Kingdom.

Rendering and Slaughtering Industries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of the rendering and slaughtering industries. [20264]

Mr. Rooker: The rendering industry plays a vital part in ensuring that the essential elements of the meat chain continue to function. Support to the rendering industry in 1996–97 allowed them to maintain pre-crisis prices and charges to suppliers of animal waste. The Scheme provides for support to be phased out during 1997–98 to enable the meat chain, including the renderers, gradually to adjust to the changing economics.

In terms of the slaughterers, it is widely accepted that there is substantial over-capacity in the red meat slaughtering sector, particularly in respect of abattoirs slaughtering cattle and sheep. There is intense competition between slaughterhouses, both for throughput and for customers and profit margins are low. The UK needs a modern financially viable slaughterhouse sector and in this context rationalism is highly desirable. However, we believe it is for the industry itself and not Government to address this issue.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the amount of financial assistance claimed by the rendering industry in the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98, listing (a) those organisations or companies which claimed the assistance,

(b) the amounts they received in each of the two years and (c) the identity of the sites, at which the offal was disposed; [20274]

(2) what payments were made to rendering companies in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98 for the rendering of clean animals. [20265]

Mr. Rooker: A figure of £97 million was paid to 22 companies under the Rendering Industry Support Scheme 1996 (TRISS 96). Of the £59 million available under the 1997 Scheme, £46 million has been paid to date to 19 companies.

The companies and the locations of the plants where the clean offals are rendered are:

[1] Supported under TRISS 96 and TRISS 97.
[2] Receiving support only under TRISS 97.

The Government do not disclose information about support paid to individual renderers for reasons of commercial confidentiality (exemption 13 in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information).

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received since the end of the consultation exercise on support for the rendering industry; and if he will make a statement; [20270]

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of arrangements for the payment of offal subsidies paid out during 1996–97 and 1997–98; and if he will make a statement; [20276]

(3) if he will review his policy of phasing out support for disposal of mammalian bone meal and tallow; [20271]

(4) what plans he has to support the rendering industry in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [20269]

Mr. Rooker: The objective of the support to the rendering industry was to avoid the disorderly collapse of the meat chain in the immediate aftermath of the BSE crisis. This was achieved. A wide range of industry bodies and representatives were involved in drawing up the Schemes, which were always intended to cover only the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98, and to provide reduced support in the second year to allow the meat chain to adjust to the post BSE economic and regulatory realities.

Following the election, the Government carefully considered representations made by a wide range of interested industry bodies, from producers to renderers, before confirming the phasing out of support, which began in July. The principal reason for the decision was that the conditions last year which gave rise to the threat of collapse of the meat chain no longer exist. The support has served its purpose and there are no plans to continue the support into 1998–99.

Cattle Tracing

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use he will make of electronic tagging in introducing a scheme to ensure traceability of beef cattle. [20150]

Mr. Rooker: It will not be a requirement of the computerised Cattle Tracing System for cattle to have electronic eartags. However, the Cattle Tracing System will take account of the fact that increasing numbers of cattle are likely to have them in the future, which the Government view as a welcome development.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of button plastic tag secondary eartags in ensuring cattle traceability. [20149]

Mr. Rooker: The plastic button eartag is on the current list of UK approved eartags for use in cattle identification. We are looking at all the approved eartags to see which ones conform to new EU legislation effective from 1 January 1998. A list of approved eartags will be made widely available as soon as possible.

Beef and BSE Compensation

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what levels of subsidy for beef and BSE compensation will be provided to farmers in (a) the current financial year and (b) 1998–99. [20143]

Mr. Rooker: Expenditure on beef subsidies and BSE compensation measures is expected to reach over £1.4 billion in the current financial year. Provision for these items in 1998–99 is currently under discussion.

Lindane

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the appropriateness of the clearance for use afforded to lindane. [20144]

Mr. Rooker: The agricultural uses of lindane were reviewed by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides in 1995. The Committee concluded that approvals should continue.

Lindane is currently the subject of an assessment under the European Community's review programme for agricultural pesticides. The first stage of that process is the production of a summary of scientific data by the rapporteur Member State; in this case Austria.

Organophosphates

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will convene a group of experts to advise Ministers in different Government departments on the control and use of organophosphate sheep dips. [19798]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 December 1997]: Such a group already exists. The independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) advises the agriculture and health Ministers of the United Kingdom on all matters relating to the authorisation of veterinary medicinal products, including sheep dips. Copies of the annual reports of the VPC are deposited in the Library of the House.

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to introduce alternatives to organophosphate sheep dips which (a) do not damage the environment and (b) are safe to use. [19797]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 December 1997]: No veterinary medicine is authorised unless it satisfies stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety in this context includes the safety of the operator and the environment.

A number of non-organophosphorus sheep ectoparasiticides have been authorised, including dips and injectable products. A complete list is published every six months by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and is deposited in the Library of the House.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to reach a decision on the sale of unpasteurised milk for individual consumption; and what account he has taken of agreements relating to consumer choice in respect of unpasteurised milk. [19686]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The period of public consultation ends on 3 February 1998, after which time we shall take careful stock of all the issues and propose how we wish to proceed as soon as possible thereafter.

I agree there is an issue of consumer choice, and we shall take this into account along with the other relevant issues.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what stage he required changes to the registration procedures for the over-30-months scheme relating to notification of the date of birth of cattle rather than the month of birth; how many cattle have gone into the scheme without a date of birth record; and if he will make a statement. [19841]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Compensation under the over-30-months scheme is payable only on animals over thirty months of age on the date of slaughter. Producers are therefore required to complete a declaration for each animal presented on which they must confirm that the animal is over thirty months of age and declare the date of birth or number of teeth. This requirement was introduced in June 1996.

If a producer chooses to enter the date of birth, the year and month of birth are often sufficient to confirm that the animal is over thirty months of age. The date becomes an issue only when the month and year of birth entered on the declaration by the producer makes it unclear whether the animal is over thirty months. On these relatively rare occasions, the date of birth is required to establish whether the animal was over thirty months of age on the date of slaughter and therefore eligible for compensation.

The information requested by the hon. Member about the numbers entering the Scheme without a date of birth record is not known. However, apart from steers, which must be accompanied by a cattle identification document/cattle control document, most animals are likely to have entered the Scheme without a date of birth record.

Grass-fed Cattle

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's definition of grass-fed animals for the purposes of food labelling; in what circumstances animals fed on silage or concentrates are deemed to be grass-fed; and if he will make a statement. [19844]

Mr. John Cunningham [holding answer 9 November 1997]: Under the Beef Labelling Scheme, launched earlier this year, it is for my Department to approve any definition of "grass-fed" submitted by an applicant. However, I would expect any such definition to cover animals reared primarily on grass in the field.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Ban

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in lifting the export ban on British cattle. [19464]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for West Carmarthen and South Pembrokeshire (Mr. Ainger) on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 475.

Cattle Head Deboners

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to compensate those companies specialising in cattle head deboning whose business was adversely affected by the introduction of the Specified Bovine Material orders relating to head meat. [19450]

Mr. Rooker: I sympathise with the deboners that lost business when tighter restrictions on cattle heads were introduced in March 1996 in line with advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee. However, the Government do not compensate for loss of business arising out of measures to protect public health and safety. Deboners are not alone in suffering from the impact of BSE.

HEALTH

Health Promotion

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards achieving the health promotion targets under the GP contract. [18795]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is shown in the table.

Medway NHS Trust

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been given to the Medway NHS Trust from the additional £300 million recently announced. [19171]

Mr. Milburn: We are advised by the West Kent Health authority that the Medway National Health Service Trust has been allocated an additional £643,000 in the current year.

Care Homes (Wiltshire)

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answers of 22 July 1997, Official Report, columns 564–67, what was the average cost to Wiltshire County Council of a community care place in a residential home run by (a) the county council and (b) the private sector in each of the last three years. [19132]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 July 1997, Official Report, column 566. The routine financial statistics provided by the former Wiltshire County Council wrongly included expenditure on independent sector provision along with that on local authority homes. This means that it is not possible to calculate the unit costs requested, as there is no way of separating the reported gross expenditure by sector. Expenditure data for 1996–97 for the new authorities formed out of the former Wiltshire county are not yet available.

Ill-health Retirement

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria for determining applications for ill-health retirement in the National Health Service; what changes have been made to these criteria since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [19288]

Mr. Milburn: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the National Health Service Pensions Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Chris Breed, dated 11 December 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, as it falls within my area of responsibility.

There are statutory regulations governing entitlement to an ill-health pension from the NHS Scheme. They are defined in Regulation E2 of the NHS Pension Scheme Regulations 1995:

> "A member who retires from pensionable employment because of physical or mental infirmity that makes him permanently incapable of efficiently discharging the duties of that employment shall be entitled to a pension under this regulation if he has at least 2 years qualifying service...".

There are, therefore four main criteria for determining applications:

(a) that there must be sufficient service to qualify for a pension;

(b) that the member is retiring;

(c) that the contract of employment is being terminated on the grounds that they are incapable of efficiently discharging their duties of employment through ill-health;

(d) that their condition is permanent.

The judgement about permanence is solely a medical one. In practice this is set against the time between retirement and the normally expected retirement age.

The statutory regulations have not changed since 1992. They changed before then, in 1988 to reduce the qualifying period for pensions from 5 to 2 years.

The criteria have not been changed since 1992. The organisation providing independent advice on the issue of permanence had to be changed on 1 April 1997 because of the withdrawal of the service by the previous organisation.

Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the costs of reorganisation, restructuring and redundancy following the award of the pre-registration nursing and midwifery education contract in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight. [19336]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive South and West Regional Office has estimated that the overall savings offered by the new service delivery configuration outweigh the costs of moving to that configuration. The savings will significantly exceed the estimated transition costs over the life of the new contracts and these savings will be redeployed to provide both further eduction services and increased direct patient care.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what scrutiny his Department undertook of the terms of the contract award for pre-registration nursing and midwifery education in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight by the NHS Executive South and West; [19333]

(2) what assessment he has made of the tender process for the award of the pre-registration nursing and midwifery education contract in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight by the NHS Executive South and West. [19337]

Mr. Milburn: Final contract terms for the pre-registration nursing and midwifery education contract in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight are currently under negotiation between the National Health Service Executive South and West Regional Office and the preferred bidders, the Universities of Southampton and Bournemouth.

The tender process observed all statutory duties, European Council regulations, Departmental and Treasury guidance. Specialist legal advice was obtained at each stage of the process. The tender process was overseen by a project board consisting of the Directors of Nursing, Public Health and Finance of the NHS Executive South and West Regional Office and the Chief Executive of Dorset Health Authority. The NHS Executive South and West Regional Office is a constituent part of the Department of Health.

Job-related Stress (NHS)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to reduce job-related stress on staff working within the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [19245]

Mr. Milburn: We attach great importance to the health and welfare of staff working in the National Health Service. This includes recognising the effect of occupational stress, addressing the causes, and supporting staff accordingly. Through the Health at Work in the NHS project, we have piloted an Organisational Stress management tool which has been disseminated throughout the service.

The NHS Executive is currently developing this work further; is working with the Health and Safety Executive to produce guidance on Stress Management for Employers; and is sponsoring research on the best use of staff Counselling and Employee Assistance Programmes.

Health and Housing

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the Departmental Review into Health Inequalities has established a link between cold, damp housing conditions and ill health; what is the estimated cost to the National Health Service of treating cold-related illness; and what remedial measures he plans for the future. [19700]

Ms Jowell: The conclusions of the Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health will not be published until the summer of 1998, but research shows that the most significant health risks from poor housing are associated with cold and damp, including respiratory problems and circulatory conditions.

Reliable estimates on the cost to the National Health Service of treating cold-related illnesses are not available.

The Government have enacted a range of measures to help pensioners keep warm in winter. Value Added Tax on fuel has been out to 5 per cent. and from April 1998 the gas levy will be reduced to zero. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 25 November a winter fuel payment for all pensioners, divided into a payment of £20 for over five million pensioner households and £50 for the 1.7 million pensioner households on income support. He also announced a cut in VAT to 5 per cent. for the installation of energy efficiency materials carried out under Government-funded grant schemes, allowing an extra 40,000 grants to be paid each year. The Government's new programme of training and jobs for young people will expand the national home energy efficiency scheme.

Contractors and voluntary organisations will be encouraged to take on young people to insulate the homes of those most in need. In addition, the Capital Receipts Initiative will help local authorities to carry out energy efficiency improvements on homes. The Government's Home Energy Efficiency Scheme has so far helped 2.4 million households by paying grants for energy efficiency improvements. Four hundred thousand homes will benefit from the scheme this year.

We will shortly be publishing for consultation a Green Paper on the new public health strategy for England.

Value Added Tax

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs of implementing new VAT procedures by NHS trusts. [19996]

Mr. Milburn: No estimate of extra costs has been made.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the methodology by which he will calculate the progress made in reducing waiting lists against his target over a five year period. [20023]

Mr. Milburn: A Waiting List Action Team has been established, supported by eight regional task forces, to secure progress in this area including, as a first priority, to ensure that no one is waiting for more than 18 months for in patient treatment by 31 March 1998.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the average level of hospital waiting lists in each quarter from 31 March 1992 to 31 March 1997. [20024]

Mr. Milburn: Available information can be found in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England" which has been published since 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

Haemophiliacs

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding compensation for haemophiliacs infected with Hepatitis C; [19852]

(2) when he intends to respond to (a) the Manor House Group and (b) the Haemophilia Society in respect of his recent meeting to discuss compensation for haemophiliacs infected with Hepatitis C. [19853]

Mr. Dobson [holding answer 10 December 1997]: I wrote to the Haemophilia Society on 28 November to assure them that we are giving full and careful consideration to this complex issue. I hope very shortly to be in a position to send them a full reply, which will be copied to the Manor House Group.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safety measures are in place to ensure that haemophiliacs are not infected with (a) Hepatitis C and (b) HIV as a result of blood transfusions. [19854]

Mr. Dobson [holding answer 10 December 1997]: All reasonable steps are taken to ensure the safety of blood and blood products for all patients. These include the careful questioning of donors to exclude those likely to represent a risk of transmitting infection, and the testing of donations for Hepatitis B and C, HIV 1 and 2 and syphilis. Pools of plasma from which blood products are to be made are tested again. Wherever possible, as with blood products used in the treatment of haemophilia, they also undergo additional manufacturing processes to remove or inactivate viruses. All batches of blood products are separately tested for viral markers of infection by the independent National Institute for Biological Standards and Control.

These arrangements fully meet the requirements laid down by the relevant European Union regulatory authority, the European Committee on Proprietary Medicinal Products. In addition, the safety of blood and blood products is kept under regular review by the expert Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Blood and Tissues for Transplantation, which gives advice to Health Ministers.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those PFI services associated with projects with a capital value in excess of £10 million and the duration of each part of the PFI project. [19866]

Mr. Milburn: Four projects, each with a capital value in excess of £10 million, have now reached commercial close and the nature of the services that will be provided by the private sector under each scheme has therefore been decided. The schemes, and the services affected, are:

Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust: Estate maintenance; domestic services; catering; laundry; portering; security; non-emergency patient transport.

Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare NHS Trust: Information Management and Technology (IM and T) systems; grounds and estate maintenance; domestic services; portering; financial services; catering; waste disposal and laundry; car parking; non-emergency patient transport; security; telecommunications; energy and utilities.

Carlisle Hospitals NHS Trust: Catering; laundry; communications/telephonist; sterile supplies; waste disposal; accommodation; energy; portering and mail; estates; car parking; domestic services; and reception. In addition, the possible provision by the private sector of non-emergency transport (patient transport service) is being reviewed by the trust and its private sector partner.

South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust: Catering; cleaning; portering; non-emergency transport; laundry and linen; building services maintenance (new build/refurbishment only); private patients' unit.

The duration of each part of each of these schemes is as follows:

Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust: Contract period of 63 years (including the construction phase of three years) with breakpoints at year 28 and every five years subsequently after. Services provided by the private sector will be benchmarked every five years.

Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare NHS Trust: Contract period of 64 years (including the construction phase of four years) with breakpoints at years 34, 44 and 54. Services provided by the private sector will be market tested in year nine and then every five years with the exception of IM and T Services. The initial contract for these will be for seven years, after which the Trust will be free to procure this service as it wishes.

Carlisle Hospitals NHS Trust: Contract period of 47.5 years, consisting of a construction phase of 2.5 years and an operational phase of 45 years. The Trust has the exclusive right to break the relationship in year 30 of the operational phase. Services provided by the private sector will be market-tested at intervals of five to seven years during the operational phase, depending on the service concerned.

South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust: Contract period of 63 years (including the construction phase of three years) with break points at year 30 and then every five years. Services provided by the private sector will be market-tested after 10 years and subsequently every seven years.

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department's value for money calculations assume that patient related activity in connection with PFI projects with a capital value over £10 million will remain constant over the life of the project. [19863]

Mr. Milburn: No. Value for money (VFM) calculations are based on a number of assumptions including expected levels of patient activity and are carried out for all National Health Service capital projects. These levels are determined by a comprehensive analysis of current activity levels, expected changes in activity levels, patient flows and lengths of stay. Sensitivity analysis around these central assumptions is also undertaken to assess the effect on the VFM calculation of any changes. This includes an analysis of the impact of alternative levels of patient related activity.

Private Finance Initiative projects are expected to have a flexibility of design to allow for different types of care should future healthcare requirements alter. This flexibility of design is one of the factors looked at during the approval process of a PFI project and helps give hospitals an in-built capability for coping with changes to patient activity.

Patient Transport Service

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the amount of officer time spent on negotiating Patient Transport Service contracts in the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service (a) in 1996–97 and (b) in the previous five years; [20110]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of negotiating the Patient Transport Service contracts in the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service. [20111]

Mr. Boateng: None. This is a matter for the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust. I therefore advise my hon. Friend to contact the Chairman of the trust.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many ambulance staff have been recruited from the Patient Transport Service to the Emergency and Paramedic Service over the past five years (a) in the Mersey region and (b) nationally; [20108]

(2) what proportion of staff currently working in the Patient Transport Service section of the ambulance service are the former emergency and paramedic staff (a) in the Mersey region and (b) nationally. [20109]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not held centrally. For details of Mersey Regional Ambulance National Health Service Trust, I suggest my hon. Friend contacts the Chairman of the trust for further information.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 21 July from the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam concerning the Commission on Long-term Care. [20277]

Mr. Boateng: I wrote to the hon. Member on 30 July 1997.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of post-graduate training in the treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis. [18755]

Mr. Boateng: The medical Royal Colleges and their Faculties are responsible for the content and standard of postgraduate, or specialist, medical training. The treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis is likely to form part of specialist training programmes in several different medical specialities and also of vocational training for general practice.

St. Michael's Hospital, Hayle

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the grant of £2.5 million by the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority to St. Michael's Hospital, Hayle, in 1995 was approved by his Department's Regional Office, and on what terms; and if he will make a statement. [20112]

Mr. Milburn: In 1994 Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly Health Authority made a Section 64 grant of £2.5 million to the Congregation of the Daughters of the Cross of Liege in order to ensure the long-term availability of operating capacity in the county.

This grant did not require the formal approval of the then South and West Regional Health Authority, although officers from the regional health authority discussed the grant with officers of Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly Health Authority and were content with it. The health authority's external auditors, the Audit Commission, were also content with the grant.

Lakeland Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led him to conclude that Councillor Mrs. Mary Styth was better qualified to be Chairman of Lakeland Healthcare NHS Trust Board than Doctor Bryan Lindley; and what representations he received on this subject. [20151]

Mr. Milburn: All National Health Service appointments are made on merit, and in accordance with guidance from the Commissioner for Public Appointments and the Government's criteria on the qualities required for chairmen and non-executives. All appointees are advised that there can be no presumption of re-appointment at the end of any term of appointment served. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received any representations about his decision on the Chairmanship of Lakeland Healthcare NHS Trust.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of all those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [19983]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested by my hon. Friend is collected by the Department but will take a little time to assemble. I will write to him as soon as it is available.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the basis of the calculation to establish the requirement for £300 million additional expenditure on the NHS this winter. [19011]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

A sum of £300 million has been made available for patient care this winter as a result of reordering spending priorities; £270 million was found from cuts in other spending programmes. A reduction in provision for the Ministry of Defence of £168 million related to overspending in 1996–97 and £102 million of provision no longer needed by the public sector nuclear industry as a result of their improved performance. The remaining £30 million will be from efficiency savings within the NHS.

The money will specifically help hospitals cope with emergency admissions, reduce delays in discharging patients and strengthen primary and community services to reduce the need for people to be admitted to hospital in the first place.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 12 December 1997

PRIME MINISTER

Expos

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about departmental responsibility for co-ordinating and promoting bids to host expos within the United Kingdom. [19155]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1997]: A town or city wishing to bid for an Expo would need to obtain the support of the relevant sponsoring Department, and, depending on the nature of the Expo proposed, that of other Whitehall Departments, in order to obtain Government endorsement for the project. Once obtained, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office would be responsible for lodging the formal application with the International Bureau of Expositions, the governing body for Expos. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office would provide tactical advice and assistance with lobbying.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Royal Naval College

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he plans to meet the Chairman and trustees of the Greenwich Foundation for the Royal Naval College; and if he will make a statement. [19024]

Mr. Chris Smith: I met the Chairman and the Director of the Greenwich Foundation for the Royal Naval College when I visited the College on Friday 28 November. The Greenwich Foundation is working closely with Government and Greenwich Hospital to conclude arrangements that will allow it to take responsibility for the site as Defence use ceases.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders aged 10 to 19 years to whom one caution has already been administered have received (a) a second and (b) more than two cautions in respect of further offences in each year since 1994. [19815]

Mr. Michael: Data routinely available centrally do not include details of repeat cautions.

For a sample of offenders cautioned for standard list offences in ten police forces during one week in November 1991, a record was submitted centrally on their first subsequent caution over the next two years.

From this sample, it is estimated that 20,800 offenders aged 10 to 19, who were administered a first caution for an indictable offence in 1991, received a subsequent caution for a standard list offence in the next two years. An estimate relating to those cautioned for summary offences is not available.

It should be noted that concern about repeat cautioning led to revised guidance being issued in March 1994 (Home Office Circular 18/1994) to discourage the use of repeat cautions. In a sample of offenders cautioned for standard list offences in all but two police forces in November 1994, the proportion of those aged 10 to 19 who had one previous caution was 11 per cent. The proportion with more than one caution was 6 per cent. In a similar sample collected in 1991, the respective proportions were 16 per cent. and 10 per cent.

Offences included in the "standard list" are given in appendices 4 and 5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1996" (Cm. 3764). These include all indictable and some of the more serious summary offences.

Donhead St. Andrew Rectory

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the media representatives who were invited by Sussex Police to be present at the raid on the rectory at Donhead St. Andrew on 21 November; and if he will make a statement. [20538]

Mr. Michael: I am told by the forces concerned that neither the Wiltshire Constabulary, which carried out the search at Donhead St. Andrews, nor the Sussex Police, invited any media representatives to attend.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Sussex Police requested Wiltshire Constabulary to raid the rectory at Donhead St. Andrew on 21 November; and if he will make a statement. [20537]

Mr. Michael: I am told by the forces concerned that this operation was part of an inquiry involving a number of forces in which the Wiltshire Constabulary was requested to participate by the Sussex Police, but the decision to conduct the search at the rectory rested with the Wiltshire Constabulary.

Firearms (Amendment) Act

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding unpaid claims there were for compensation under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 on 30 November. [20480]

Mr. Michael: At the end of November, there were 23,243 claims under options A and B awaiting processing, and an additional 6,479 claims awaiting payment under option C, consisting of option C only claims and mixed claims on which an option A or B payment had been made.

Prisons (Health Care)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the joint Prison Service/Department of Health working group set up in response to the 1996 Report "Patient or Prisoner" to complete its work; and if he will publish its conclusions. [20387]

Ms Quin: The joint Prison Service/Department of Health Working Group is expected to put forward options and recommendations by May 1998 for consideration by Ministers. The Working Group's conclusions will be published in due course.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of those serving on the joint Prison Service/Department of Health working group set up in response to the 1996 Report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, Patient or Prisoner. [20386]

Ms Quin: The membership of the joint Prison Service/Department of Health working group is as follows:

Prison Service Department of Health

Dr. Graham Winyard, Medical Director, NHS—joint Group Chairman

Mr. Martin Brown, Ms Andrea Humphrey, mental health policy

Mr. Mike Farrar, medical services policy

Dr. Alison Evans, Director of Public Health, Wakefield Health Authority

Professor John Ashton, Regional Director of Public Health, Northwest Regional Office of the NHS

Dr. Neil Squires (as for Professor Ashton)

Dr. Gillian Fairfield, Health Services Directorate, NHS Executive

Mr. Malcolm Rae, Nursing Officer, Department of Health.

Her Majesty's Prison Service

Dr. Mike Longfield, Director of Health Care, Her Majesty's Prison Service—joint Group Chairman

Dr. Mary Piper, Acting Head, Health Policy, Standards and Audit Group, Directorate of Health Care (DHC)

Mr. Savas Hadjipavlou, Business Manager, DHC

Mrs. Anna Howard, Contracts Manager, DHC

Mrs. Fenella Tayler, policy on delivery of health care, DHC—Group Secretary

Mrs. Yvonne Willmott, Nursing Advise, DHC

Mr. Colin Edwards, Area Nursing Adviser, Directorate of Operations South, Prison Service

Dr. Vicy Foot, Health Care Adviser, Directorate of Operations North, Prison Service

Dr. Jim Mullen, Governor of Her Majesty's Prison Long Lartin, Evesham

Mr. Peter Earnshaw, Governor of Her Majesty's Prison Manchester

Dr. Roger Ralli, Principal Medical Officer, Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution, Glen Parva, Leicester

Mr Kieron Taylor, Head of Health Care, Her Majesty's Prison Elmley, Sheerness

Dr. John Reed, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Prisons (as observer)

Dr. Liz Ryman, Home Office, Comprehensive Spending Review, (as observer).

Manslaughter and Reckless Driving

Mr Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of prosecutions on the charge of manslaughter have resulted in a conviction in each of the last three years; [19248]

(2) what percentage of prosecutions on the charge of causing death by reckless driving have resulted in a conviction in each of the last three years. [19328]

Mr. Michael: Data are not available on the basis of prosecutions. However, the numbers of defendants convicted of these offences as a percentage of defendants tried at the Crown Court for those offences plus those proceeded against in magistrates' courts for those offences whose cases were discontinued, withdrawn or otherwise abandoned in each of the last three years are as follows:

Per cent.

Offence	1994	1995	1996
Causing death by reckless driving	87	85	89
Manslaughter[1]	91	85	85

[1] Includes offences under sections 5, 9 and 10 of the Common Law and Offences against the Person Act 1861 and section 2 of the Homicide Act 1957.

The difference between numbers of defendants prosecuted and those tried or proceeded against by type of offence is that defendants may be prosecuted for a more serious offence but convicted of a lesser offence, and the data on court proceedings collected by the Home Office record the offence for which (a) cases against defendants are discontinued or (b) defendants are either acquitted or found guilty.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teacher Training

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision has been made in the current year to train serving teachers in information and communication technology. [19106]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under the Grants for Education Support and Training programme, £296.8 million has been made available in 1997–98 to support training for serving teachers in all National Curriculum subjects. A subject by subject breakdown is not yet available for this year, but information collected for 1996–97 suggests that approximately 5 per cent. of the funding is spent on IT courses.

In addition, £1.2 million has been provided to fund this year's Multimedia Portable Computers for Teachers pilot, which is aimed at improving serving teachers' competence and confidence in the use of Information and Communications Technology in the classroom.

From early 1999 the first tranche of funds from the People's Lottery will become available to train the UK teaching force in the use of information and communication technologies. This initiative will meet one of the key recommendations of the Stevenson Committee report "Information and Communications Technology in UK Schools" and will be the first attempt to train all teachers in the use of IT.

Special Advisers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19319]

Dr. Howells: On the question of Special Advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the answers given on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 615–17, and on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 472–73.

The Department has six Task Forces which currently have a total of 93 members; no appointments have yet been made to the Skills Task Force. No salary or benefits are paid to members of these bodies. The Department is not responsible for any review bodies.

After-school Clubs

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many after-school clubs there were on (a) 1 May and (b) 27 November. [20051]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department makes funds available for after-school clubs in England under the Out of School Childcare Initiative (OSCI). The initiative is delivered locally by Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs). The Department records the number of places provided through OSCI in out of school clubs but not the number of clubs available throughout the country. The initiative has already created some 78,000 places and offers parents, especially women, the opportunity to participate more fully in the labour market by increasing the supply of good quality, affordable out of school childcare.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the names of all those people who he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed, and whether they receive remuneration. [19976]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is given in the table. My hon. Friend will wish to note that this information will be in the Department's Annual Report when it is published next year, and is also accessible through the Public Appointment Unit's Internet Website.

SCOTLAND

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums each Scottish local authority (i) has budgeted to spend in 1997–98 and (ii) has spent in each of the five previous years in (a) grants to voluntary organisations and (b) purchasing services from voluntary organisations in respect of (1) youth work, sport, adult education and community education, (2) social work, (3) Citizens Advice Bureaux and other advice giving services and (4) others. [19761]

Mr. Galbraith: Information is not held centrally in the form requested at present, although the collection of statistics on local authority expenditure on the voluntary sector is being reviewed.

The funding of local voluntary organisations is a matter for local authorities. The Scottish Office has, however, issued guidance to local authorities requesting them to produce policy statements on working with and supporting the voluntary sector in their area. Scottish Office funding of £240,000 over three years has been granted to the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations to provide information and support to voluntary bodies building partnerships at local level. As a result, 22 new partnerships agreements are in place between local authorities and their local voluntary sector.

The Scottish Office has joined COSLA's Task Group on the voluntary sector to take forward good practice guidance on positive partnerships and funding.

WALES

Child Abuse

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of the North Wales child abuse inquiry. [20253]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The cost to the Welsh Office of running the Tribunal is not expected to exceed £10 million.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has current dealings with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers which are not millennium compliant; and on what date his Department will cease to deal with (i) non-governmental organisations and (ii) suppliers which are not millennium compliant. [20532]

Mr. Ron Davies: The degree of the year 2000 date change problem for my Department depends on a number of factors including the nature and relative importance of non-governmental organisations and suppliers to the business of the Welsh Office. My Department is following the guidance issued by the central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) on the action to be taken to deal with the problem. The Welsh Office will assess the nature of its contractual relationships with non-governmental organisations and suppliers to establish the impact of non-compliance.

All non-governmental organisations and suppliers will need to show that their relevant systems are millennium compliant wherever these would have a significant impact on the business of the Department. If they cannot do so by 31 March 1998 we will review the contractual arrangements.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the forecast level of spending by local authorities for 1998–99; and what is the percentage change in real terms compared to 1997–98. [20549]

Mr. Ron Davies: The provisional capping plans that I announced on 10 December will increase Welsh local authorities spending power by over 4.5 per cent. My capping plans are not spending targets, however, and I cannot predict local authorities spending decisions for 1998–99. They have until March 1998 to set budgets.

Rail Links

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Rail Franchise holders on rail links with (a) Cardiff and (b) Swansea; and if he will make a statement. [20407]

Mr. Ron Davies: The train operating companies are represented on the Welsh Transport Advisory Group which my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) has recently established. In addition, he has already met the Franchising Director to discuss the scope for improved rail services between North and South Wales, and plans to have separate discussions with the main operators shortly.

Road Links

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve road communications between Deeside and (a) Cardiff and (b) Swansea; and if he will make a statement. [20406]

Mr. Ron Davies: The extent to which improvements are needed to the road network between north and south Wales was one of the main issues raised for consideration in the recent consultation exercise on the review of the Welsh trunk road programme. The review process is still at an early stage and it is not possible to say when we will be able to give any indications as to the size and composition of the future trunk road programme.

A number of organisations and individuals submitted representations in support of improved links between north and south Wales during the review consultation period; and we will consider these very carefully before making any final decisions on the strategy to be adopted for the trunk road network.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday 22 December

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the President of the Council what estimate she has made of the costs which will be incurred as a result of the decision that the House should sit on a single day in the week beginning Monday 22 December. [20519]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: It is not possible to provide a realistic estimate of the travel cost of one day's travel to and from Westminster.

Stationery

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what representations she has received in respect of the changes to the supply of stationery. [20888]

Mrs. Roe: One, from the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Olner), which has been drawn to the attention of the Serjeant at Arms.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Council how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members her Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Privy Council Office employs no task force members or review body members. I have one Special Adviser, Mr. Ian McKenzie. Additionally, I have appointed Mr. Keith Hellawell as the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator (from 5 Janaury 1998) and Mr. Michael Trace as Deputy UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator on special adviser terms. As regards costs, I refer the hon. Member to the Answers given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to the hon. Members for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) and for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 472–73.

DEFENCE

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to publish the strategic defence review. [20483]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 499–500.

Western European Union

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet the Greek Defence Minister to discuss the forthcoming Greek presidency of the Western European Union. [20080]

Mr. George Robertson: I held a meeting with the Greek Defence Minister during the Western European Union Ministerial meeting at Erfurt on 18 November. We discussed a number of issues of common interest, including the forthcoming Greek Presidency of the Western European Union.

Royal Navy Vessels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what in the life expectancy of Type 23 frigates and Type 42 destroyers; and when the (a) first and (b) last of each class entered service with the Royal Navy. [20073]

Dr. Reid: The life expectancy of the Type 23 Frigates and Type 42 Destroyers is expected to be in the order of 25 years, although this will be kept under review. The first Type 23 Frigate, HMS Norfolk, entered service in 1989. HMS Portland, the final ship of the last batch, which is currently under construction at Yarrow Shipbuilders, is due to enter service in 2001. The first type 42 Destroyer to enter service was HMS Birmingham in 1976 and the last HMS Edinburgh in 1985.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the LPH HMS Ocean and the LPDs HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark have the capability to operate (a) Sea Harriers and (b) RAF Harrier GR7s. [20086]

Dr. Reid: Neither the Helicopter Carrier, HMS Ocean, nor the Amphibious Assault ships, HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark, will have the capability to operate Sea Harriers or RAF Harrier GR7S. HMS Ocean will be able to transport up to 20 of these aircraft but not to act as their operational base.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the advantages of replacing the use of frigates as West Indies guard ships or anti-drugs patrols with a smaller class of vessel. [20074]

Dr. Reid: The Strategic Defence Review is examining the whole range of Defence capabilities and activities, including the role of the West Indies' Guard Ship. Once all the work on the Review has been considered by Ministers, we will publish a White Paper setting out our overall conclusions.

Sea Harrier Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Sea Harriers were delivered to the Royal Navy; and what is the life expectancy of a single aircraft of the class. [20077]

Dr. Reid: The Sea Harrier entered service in 1979. Since its entry to service the Sea Harrier has undergone a mid-life update to give it an increased capability. The currently planned out of service date for the Sea Harrier is 2012 although the aircraft will be phased out over a 3-year period, ending in 2015, during which time the aircraft will retain an operational role.

Uncommanded Flying Manoeuvres

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents of uncommanded flying manoeuvres have been reported by RAF pilots in (a) fixed wing aircraft and (b) helicopters in each of the past five years. [19840]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The table gives the number of uncommanded movements on flying controls for RAF fixed wing aircraft and helicopters in the past five years.

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Fixed Wing	95	83	42	39	61
Helicopters	51	43	40	35	30

Uncommanded movements cover movements of flying controls including primary surfaces, trimmers, flaps, airbrakes and spoilers, and any induced by malfunctions of autopilots. They also include any found on pre-flight checks.

TREASURY

Scottish Parliament

Dr. Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the cost of the proposed Scottish Parliament will be met exclusively from the Scottish block grant; and if he will make a statement on the availability of extra funds for this purpose from the Treasury. [18222]

Mr. Darling: The costs of the proposed Scottish Parliament will be met exclusively from the Scottish block grant.

Orion Trust

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the Paymaster General's wife or children have any interest in any offshore trusts apart from the Orion Trust; [20661]

(2) When he was informed about the transfer of 2.95 million TransTec shares into the Orion Trust; [20664]

(3) if he will publish the trust deed of the Orion Trust; [20665]

(4) who informed the Orion Trust that 2.95 million TransTec shares should have been legally settled in the trust; [20663]

(5) who the non-resident settlor was who transferred 2.95 million TransTec shares into the Orion Trust in 1997; [20662]

(6) if he will publish the letter of wishes from the settlor to the trustees of the Orion Trust (a) on the setting up of the trust and (b) relating to the Deed of Addition. [20660]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 December 1997, Official Report, columns 575–76.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures his Department is taking to ensure that organisations wishing to contribute to employee childcare facilities are given clear instructions on how to implement section 155A of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. [19926]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Guidance on when Section 155A applies to childcare facilities is given in the Inland Revenue information leaflet IR115, Tax and Childcare, which is available from Tax Inquiry Centres or Tax Offices. Organisations may also consult their Tax Office.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures his Department is taking to ensure that the public are accurately informed of the issues relating to EMU. [19928]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 9 December 1997]: In July, the Treasury published two booklets, "EMU—Practical Information for Business", and "The Pros and Cons of EMU", of which about 60,000 and 21,000 copies have been distributed respectively. In October, the Treasury published "UK Membership of the Single Currency: An Assessment of the Five Economic Tests", about 6,000 copies of which have been distributed.

Separately, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has set up a Business Advisory Group on the strategic and practical implications of EMU, and a Standing Committee on preparations for EMU. A summary of the findings of the Business Advisory Group will be published in early 1998 and will include recommendations on the information required by business about EMU. The Government have also announced plans for a series of regional conferences to be held early in the New Year to ensure that all regions and sectors of the economy are aware of the need to prepare.

Copies of a folder titled "Business Preparations for the Euro", containing all the information published, including a note on Government activities, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Long-term Investment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that reforms of capital gains tax encourage long-term investment. [19927]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 December 1997]: In his Pre-Budget Report of 25 November, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made it clear that he remains attracted to a system of capital gains tax that encourages long-term investment. Work to examine the scope for such a system is continuing.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is responsible for ensuring that the contracts under which his special advisers work are complied with. [18862]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The lines of responsibility are set down in their contracts, a model copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps his special advisers are required to take to obtain authorisation before talking to members of the Press; [18864]

(2) with whom his special advisers' contracts of employment have been made. [18854]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 2 December 1997]: The terms under which special advisers work are set out in the schedule to their contract, a model copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. These build upon rules in force under previous Administrations.

Market Sensitive Information

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to establish the source of disclosure of market sensitive information in the last week of September. [18863]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 2 December 1997]: Market sensitive information was not disclosed.

Cyclically Adjusted Budget Deficits

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update table B8, of the "Pre-Budget Report November 1997", to allow for the revenues which would accrue to the Exchequer if the measures included in the Treasury's Report "A Modern System for Corporation Tax Payments" are implemented. [19958]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The net revenue effects of the measures proposed in "A modern system for corporation tax payments" would have negligible impact on the estimates in Table B9 which gives government expenditure and receipts up to 1998–99.

Tax Avoidance Schemes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Government intend to take against tax avoidance schemes; and if he will make a statement. [19955]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The Government are determined to stem tax leakage by detecting, deterring and defeating tax avoidance. The last Budget included a package of anti-avoidance measures, and more are likely to be announced in the next Budget. Since the summer, the Inland Revenue have been carrying out a wide-ranging review of avoidance. Both the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise are also looking at the possibility of introducing a General Anti-Avoidance Rule.

Credit Unions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to allow those without a residential qualification to join credit unions. [19858]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 11 December 1997]: The existing legislation already allows a number of ways for those without a residential qualification to join credit unions.

Fiscal Stability

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the role of the Treasury Committee in respect of monitoring the Government's adherence to a Code of Fiscal Stability; and if he will make a statement. [19964]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 11 December 1997]: The Chancellor's proposal for a Code for Fiscal Stability will commit the Government to a set of principles of fiscal policy management, transparent fiscal reporting and best-practice accounting methods. This open approach will allow the Treasury Committee to play an important role in the external scrutiny of the Government's fiscal policy.

Lord Sainsbury

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met Lord Sainsbury in an official capacity; and what subjects were discussed. [19535]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 8 December 1997]: I have met Lord Sainsbury on occasions such as seminars at 11 Downing Street which I have attended in my capacity as Chancellor.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Greece and Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had and with whom on the recommendation made in the Madrid Summit in July 1997, in respect of relationships between Greece and Turkey; and what initiatives have been taken under this agreement. [20081]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has on a number of occasions discussed this subject with ministerial colleagues, including the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministers. Diplomatic contacts to build on the agreement made in Madrid in July 1997 will continue during our EU Presidency.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British High Commissioner for Cyprus or his officials last visited the Greek Cypriot community living in the Karpas area of Cyprus; what reports he has received in respect of the living conditions; and if he will make a statement. [20082]

Mr. Doug Henderson: A number of the British High Commission last visited the Greek Cypriot community in the Karpas on 4 November as part of a regular series of visits to that area. The High Commission reports no significant changes in living conditions since the previous visit in May.

European Parliament

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received relating to the misdirection of funds for the construction of the European Parliament buildings in the Espace Leopold; and if he will request an investigation by the Court of Auditors. [20258]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are aware that allegations have been made of impropriety relating to the construction of the new European Parliament building in Brussels. We understand that the Belgium judicial authorities are conducting an inquiry. Decisions on appropriate follow-up action will be taken when the facts of the case are clear.

European Union

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement of the Minister of State of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 567, where, when and between whom the exchanges in private relating to the agreement between Spain and the Dutch presidency took place. [20580]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is not a matter on which we can give precise answers, since by definition, no representative of the Government was present

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement of the Minister of State of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 567, when the attempt to clarify the mix-up over the Spanish amendment to the Treaty of Amsterdam was made. [20579]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We first contacted the Presidency about this matter on 20 June.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement of the Minister of State of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 567, when the bilateral understanding between the Dutch presidency and the Spanish government was reached. [20581]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave him on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 122–23.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has current dealings with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers which are not millennium compliant; and on what date his Department will cease to deal with (i) non-governmental organisations and (ii) suppliers which are not millennium compliant. [20527]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department deals with many non-governmental organisations and suppliers. Where we identify that such organisations have a millennium problem, which could have a negative impact on this Department, we take appropriate action. Depending on the scale of the problem, and the nature of the organisation, this may result in this Department ceasing to deal with the organisation at an appropriate time, which we anticipate would be no later than 31 December 1999.

Middle East Peace Process

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he expects to achieve during the United Kingdom Presidency of the EU on the implementation of Security Council Resolution 425 of 19 March 1978. [20546]

Mr. Fatchett: During our Presidency we will be working to re-inject momentum into the Middle East peace process on all its tracks. We will continue to stress to parties in the region our support for the full implementation of United Nations Security Council Resolution 425 and withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Zambia

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the consequences of the recent attempted coup in Zambia. [20594]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome the prompt restoration of civilian government. We hope the State of Emergency will soon be lifted. We have expressed concern to the Zambian authorities at the numbers in detention and at reports of torture, most recently when I met the Zambian High Commissioner on 10 November. We welcome the Zambian Permanent Human Rights Commission's statement condemning torture and calling for the officers concerned to be arrested, as well as President Chiluba's support for their stance. We are monitoring developments closely and I will visit Zambia from 7 to 9 January.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many clerical officers and clerk/typists are employed in each of the offices of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and what is the breakdown by gender in each case and in total. [19574]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that the information is not held in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons applied for posts of clerk/typist and clerical officer with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last three years and the current year to the latest available date; and in each year how many (a) applicants and (b) appointees were (i) male, (ii) female, (iii) Protestant, (iv) Roman Catholic and (v) others. [19576]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the Housing Executive has not recruited staff to the Clerical officer or Clerk/typist posts over the past three years, other than through temporary contracts arranged through Job Centres. The Executive is currently in the process of recruiting staff to these posts and hopes to have completed the exercise by January 1998. The impact of the recruitment exercise on the composition of the Executive's work force as a whole, will be reflected in the annual monitoring return to the Fair Employment Commission (FEC).

District Cancer Centres

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to her answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 128, what estimate has been made of the number of staff required to support the new consultancy in non-surgical oncology; and what plans are in place to recruit and train them. [19751]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 9 December 1997]: Assessment of the need for suitably trained staff, to support additional consultants in clinical oncology, will be carried out by the relevant HSS Trusts as this service develops. Recruitment and training will be taken forward in the light of purchasers' requirements and the resources available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards introducing a best value regime for district councils in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [20613]

Marjorie Mowlam: Following our announcement on 20 June of the decision to extend the existing Compulsory Competitive Tendering timetable until 1 November 1998, good progress has been made in developing a suitable Best Value regime for District Councils in Northern Ireland. In developing our plans we have been able to draw on the experience of other parts of the country but it has also been necessary to tailor our proposals to local circumstances.

The Government wish actively to involve local government and to draw on their experience in developing a suitable Best Value regime for District Councils in Northern Ireland. In order to facilitate this process, we are today publishing a Consultation Paper, setting out our proposals and inviting comments form interested parties. A copy of the Consultation Paper has been placed in the Library.

Archives

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how expenditure by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on the purchase of archives of historical/research importance will be funded. [20739]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Department of the Environment has recently concluded that the Public Records Act (NI) 1923 does not empower the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland to purchase archives. Parliamentary approval for such purchases in the current financial year will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the Environmental and Other Services Vote (Department of the Environment Vote 4) Pending that approval, expenditure up to an estimated £120,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Civil Contingencies Fund to ensure that Northern Ireland's archival heritage will be saved for posterity.

I am also examining the possibility of seeking Parliament's approval for new legislation which will specifically authorise such expenditure.

Electoral Officer's Report

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the report of the Chief Electoral Officer in Northern Ireland for 1996–97. [20740]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Chief Electoral Officer's annual report was laid before parliament on Tuesday 9 December, and copies are available in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Feed

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent to which meat and bonemeal is fed to livestock in other European Union countries; and if he will make a statement. [20249]

Mr. Rooker: We are not in a position to make such

Under EU Directive 94/381, farmers in other Member States are permitted to feed meat and bone meal (MBM), including mammalian MBM, to non-ruminant livestock. The UK has had far more cases of BSE than other Member States, and we therefore have measures which go considerably further than those taken elsewhere.

IACS and BSPS Payments

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the IACS and BSPS payments to be made to farmers. [20535]

Mr. Rooker: All main payments under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in England, except those subject to query, are expected to be made by the EU deadline of 31 December 1997. BSPS advance payments are under way with some £46.5 million distributed to date. BSPS balance payments will be made by the statutory deadline of 30 June 1998.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has current dealings with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers which are not millennium compliant; and on what date his Department will cease to deal with (i) non-governmental organisations and (ii) suppliers which are not millennium compliant. [20529]

Mr. Morley: The position in the Department is that all dependencies on non-governmental organisations and/or suppliers who may not be millennium compliant are being examined, and associated risks and contingency requirements identified (these will be different from case to case). Assurances regarding millennium compliance are being sought and appropriate contingency action (which could, for example, entail switching to another supplier and product) will be initiated as necessary.

Mink

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many inspectors' visits to check that the conditions of the Mink Keeping Order 1992 and the Mink Keeping Regulations 1975 (as amended) were being adhered to were carried out in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997; [20638]

(2) how many inspectors were employed to ensure the implementation of the Mink Keeping Order in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997. [20637]

Mr. Morley: Inspections of mink farms are carried out by advisers from the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA), an Executive Agency of MAFF, as part of their statutory duties as the Department's wildlife advisers. FRCA are resourced to carry out all necessary visits to mink farms to ensure that the security arrangements in place meet the requirements laid down in the Mink Keeping Regulations 1975. Until recently, only one site visit was normally made each year at the time of the issue of the licence. However, to ensure that the necessary security standards are maintained throughout the year, an additional unannounced inspection will now be made to each farm during the year. As before, inspections will also be carried out following any reports

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the Mink Keeping Order licences next come up for renewal for each of the farms currently licensed; and for what period of time licences are issued; [20642]

(2) how many mink farms were issued licences under the Mink Keeping Order in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997; [20636]

(3) if he will list the names and addresses of the farms currently licensed under the Mink Keeping Order; [20643]

(4) how many licences were granted for the transportation of mink in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997. [20645]

Mr. Morley: The number of mink farms issued licences over the last five years are as follows:

Period/Year ending	Number of mink farms issued licences
31 March 1993	19
31 March 1994	13
31 March 1995	13
31 March 1996	14
31 March 1997	13

Where a mink farmer holds a licence to keep mink, a separate licence is not required for the specific action of transporting live mink.

The mink farms currently licensed are located in the following counties:

County	Number of licensed mink farms
Cornwall	1
Dorset	1
Hampshire	1
Isle of Wight	1
Lancashire	6
Northumberland	1
South Yorkshire	1
Staffordshire	1
West Yorkshire	3
Total	16

The Department's policy is not to disclose the exact location of fur farms but to give only the county in which a licence is applicable. This is to protect mink fur farmers from the attentions of individuals or organisations who might seek to disrupt by unlawful means the activity of licensed fur farming.

Licences are valid for twelve months and the number expiring in each month is as follows:

Month	Number of licences expiring
December 1997	6
Janaury 1998	—
February 1998	1
March 1998	1
April 1998	3
May 1998	1
June 1998	1
July 1998	—
September 1998	1
October 1998	—
November 1998	1
December 1998	1

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate his Department has made of the numbers of mink that have escaped into the wild from mink farms in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997; [20641]

(2) how many mink farms had a licence revoked or suspended in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995, (d) 1996 and (e) 1997; [20640]

(3) how many prosecutions his Department has initiated for keeping mink without a licence under the Mink Keeping Order since 1993; [20646]

(4) how many mink farms have been allowed to operate without a licence under the Mink Keeping Order; [20644]

(5) what penalties exist for mink farms found to have breached a condition or conditions of the Mink Keeping Order or the Mink Keeping Regulations. [20639]

Mr. Morley: I am not aware of any unlicensed mink farms being allowed to operate. All mink farm licensees are sent reminder letters before their licence expires and the Department will chase licensees who do not respond. Where an existing licence holder ceases to keep mink, the Department asks for information on the arrangements for the disposal of the mink. Where mink have been sold to other farms, the Department will check that the new owner is licensed to keep mink. Any reports of unlicensed farms are referred to the Investigation Branch of the Department's Legal Division for consideration. Since 1993, one prosecution has been undertaken for keeping mink on unlicensed premises. No licences have been revoked or suspended during that period.

Licensed mink fur farmers are required to report any escapes to the Department; the numbers of mink reported to the Department as having escaped from fur farms are detailed. All were the result of reported vandalism to licensed mink farms:

Period	Number of mink reported to have escaped
Year ending 31 March 1994	nil
Year ending 31 March 1995	nil
Year ending 31 March 1996	3,005
Year ending 31 March 1997	nil
Eight months to end November 1997	300

Under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932, anyone failing to comply with the conditions of a licence may be subject to a fine not exceeding level 1 on the standard scale, currently £200 and to a further penalty of £2 for every day on which the offence continues after

Beef Labelling

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will introduce his proposed changes to beef labelling; and what factors underlie the delay in their introduction. [20489]

Mr. Rooker: The Beef Labelling Scheme, which implements EC Regulation 820/97, was introduced in the United Kingdom on 9 October with applications invited from 1 November. The Regulation was due to come into full force from 1 January 1998, but the European Commission has recently decided to postpone entry into force until 31 March 1998. The reason for this postponement was delay in implementing the Regulation in other member states.

Bees (Varroa)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on public health from the importation of honey from countries where bees are treated with anti-varroa products not approved in the United Kingdom. [20576]

Mr. Rooker: The Veterinary Medicines Directorate tested samples of honey for flumethrin as part of its non-statutory residues surveillance programme in 1996. Approximately 70 per cent. of the samples collected at random from retail outlets were imported. None of the samples was positive. Results for this year are not yet available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Facers and Food what representations he has received from beekeepers with regard to the control of varroa mite by products approved in other EU countries but not approved in the United Kingdom; what response he has given; what is his assessment of the impact on United Kingdom beekeepers of the resistance of bees to the only United Kingdom approved product; and if he will take steps to approve the use of those other products in the United Kingdom. [20577]

Mr. Rooker: I have received a number of letters from hon. Members and Secretaries of beekeeping associations on this subject, and they will all receive full responses to the points they have made about the import and administration of unauthorised products.

We are not aware of any incidence of varroa mite resistance in the UK.

The question of any applications for authorisation of new veterinary medicines to control varroa mites is one for the pharmaceutical industry. No veterinary medicines is authorised unless it satisfies the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Button Plastic Tags

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to permit button plastic tags as a secondary tag as from 1 January 1998. [20547]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wealden (Sir Geoffrey

Beef Imports

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will prevent the importation of all meat from countries where BSE is present and where mammalian meat and bone meal is included in animal feed. [20574]

Mr. Rooker: No. There is no reasonable basis on which I could take such action.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to ensure (a) that all beef entering the United Kingdom for human consumption is less than 30 months old and (b) that over 30 month old beef imported into the United Kingdom to be processed for pet food does not enter the human food chain. [20490]

Mr. Rooker: The Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996 prohibit the sale for human consumption of bovine meat from animals over 30 months old. Responsibility for enforcement falls to Local Authorities.

It is not an offence to import meat from animals more than 30 months old.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the import of beef from cattle aged over 30 months from countries where BSE is present. [20573]

Mr. Rooker: Action to prohibit the sale of human consumption of meat derived from bovine animals born, reared and slaughtered in any country was taken by the previous Government on 28 March 1996 in the Beef (Emergency Control) Order 1996. This prohibited the sale for human consumption of meat derived from bovine animals slaughtered on or after 29 March 1996 which "showed signs of more than one pair of permanent incisors". (This test is used to identify animals aged over 30 months). The prohibition was subsequently modified to exclude beef from certain countries where BSE is not known to occur, and is now contained in the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations.

Poultrymeat

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons poultrymeat is permitted to be imported from countries where BSE has been reported and where mammalian meat and bone meal is permitted in poultry feed. [20575]

Mr. Rooker: Because it is perfectly safe. The prohibitions on the use of meat and bone meal in poultry feed are to avoid cross-contamination with feed for ruminants and not because of concerns in relation to the safety of the poultrymeat.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Sales

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board arms sales in each of the last three years; and what was the total value of claims relating to arms sales in each of those years. [12725]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD does not use the term "arms" to identify business. Records are maintained on a buyer basis and any business with a Defence Ministry is described as "defence related". This can cover a wide range of equipment and services.

From the information currently available the claims figures on defence related business are as follows:

	Total value/ Percentage
Financial year 1994–95
Total value of claims paid on Defence related business:	£133.2 million
Value of claims paid on Defence related business as a percentage of total claims paid:	32 per cent.
Financial year 1995–96
Total value of claims paid on Defence related business:	£107.3 million
Value of claims paid on Defence related business as a percentage of total claims paid:	36 per cent.
Financial year 1996–97[1]
Total value of claims paid on Defence related business:	£49.7 million
Value of claims paid on Defence related business as a percentage of total claims paid:	21 per cent.

[1] Figures for 1996–97 are currently being audited.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current level of British investment in Yemen. [14974]

Mrs. Roche: At the end of 1995, the latest year for which figures are available, the net book value of direct investment by UK firms in Yemen was £15 million. This represents the cumulative value of investment after allowing for depreciation. During 1995, the flow of direct investment by UK firms in Yemen was less than their disinvestment, resulting in net direct investment of minus £36 million.

Biotechnology

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government will take to ensure that the public acceptance of biotechnology features in the discussions of the European Commission relating to its ethical implications. [15339]

Mr. Battle: The debate which has surrounded the European Commission's proposal for a Directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions has highlighted a number of ethical issues which surrounded this technology. Therefore, I announced on 24 November that my Department would be sponsoring a consultation initiative to seek public views on biological research.

My ultimate goal is to engage members of the public in debate to enable us to assess the issues that are of concern to a lay audience. However, I feel that an important pre-cursor to this is to involve interested parties

I shall be hosting an event in the New Year to discuss with groups active in the biosciences and science communication how we can best develop the public activity, which is planned for next summer.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council's progress in addressing the shortage of biochemical engineers. [19238]

Mr. Battle: Last year, the Office of Science and Technology, the Research Councils and The Royal Society commissioned a survey of postgraduate career paths to contribute to the forward planning of training needs. This will be published in the near future, and the sponsors will be considering its results. The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) is also undertaking its own research programme on the needs of particular industrial sectors. In all subject areas, the supply of first degree graduates is a factor.

The BBSRC supports postgraduate and postdoctoral training to meet the needs of its research, industrial and educational user communities for highly trained scientists and engineers. The Council has fixed the current level of its overall postgraduate provision at 2,000 studentships which it considers to be in line with those communities' needs. The BBSRC's scientific committees, which comprise experts from both industry and academia, advise on the needs for trained personnel in specific sectors of science and engineering, and allocate research studentships accordingly on an annual basis. The BBSRC also makes awards under the CASE and Industrial CASE schemes which link industry and academia in training and ensure that training is directly relevant to the needs of user industry. Further opportunities for training in biochemical engineering are available through the Council's participation in, and promotion of, the Teaching Company Scheme, Integrated Graduate Development Scheme and joint Industrial Fellowships scheme with EPSRC and the Royal Society, all of which are market driven by the needs of the user community.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the members of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council who are members of the Council's (a) Engineering and Biological Systems Committee and (b) Strategy Board, giving their engineering or biological science background. [19239]

Mr. Battle: No members of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) are also members of the Engineering and Biological Systems Committee. There are no Council members on any of the BBSRC's science Committees and Directorates.

Three members of the Council are members of the Strategy Board. Professor Sir Brian Follett, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Warwick, has led research teams and taught at the Universities of Bristol, Leeds, Wales and Washington State and published over 250 papers on biological clocks and reproductive physiology. Mr. Guy Walker has been employed in the food industry since 1961, most recently as National Manager for Unilever in the UK. He is also President of the Food and Drink Federation. The BBSRC's Chief Executive, Professor Ray Baker, is a Council member and industry. Prior to joining BBSRC he was Executive Director of Medicinal Chemistry at the Neurosciences Centre of Merck Sharp and Dohme at Harlow, Essex.

Indonesia (Military Equipment)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for licences for the export of military equipment to Indonesia have been (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) revoked since 1 May. [19206]

Mrs. Roche: With regard to the numbers of applications refused or licences granted for the export to Indonesia of goods controlled under Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 124–26.

Between 2 May and 13 November no such licences were revoked.

However, this information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 256–58.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members her Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19313]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department employs three special advisers. Two are paid and one is unpaid. The level of salary is a private matter for the individuals concerned but I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 472–73. The previous Administration employed one special adviser in this Department before the election.

Since the election, the following bodies have been established to advise Ministers: The President of the Board of Trade's Advisory Group on Competitiveness, the Export Forum, the External Group on Competitiveness in Europe and the Interdepartmental Task Force on Competitiveness in Europe. A total of forty-one representatives from outside of Government have been appointed to these bodies none of whom receive payment other than expenses in some cases. I shall be announcing the membership of five Competitiveness Working Parties shortly. Again the members will be unpaid other than expenses in some cases.

The Government have established the independent Low Pay Commission with nine members from outside Government. None is employed or receives payment other than expenses. I have also appointed the Chairman of Action 2000, my Department's new initiative to tackle the century date change problem. Mr. Cruickshank's appointment will involve [illegible]

In addition, the Department is continually looking for ways to improve the effectiveness of its activities. This process is informed through an on-going dialogue with business and others on a wide range of issues. From time to time the Department will initiate a formal review of policy or consult interested parties on a specific policy proposal. These are undertaken by Ministers and officials: where others outside Government are involved none are employed by the Department or receive payment other than expenses.

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her letter of 3 September, how many applications for export licences her Department has (a) granted and (b) refused under Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order in each month of 1997. [19283]

Mrs. Roche: In due course, statistics of such export licences issued and refused from 1 January up to and including 1 May will be placed in the Library of the House. In addition, the Government will report annually on the state of strategic export controls and their application since 2 May.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will provide details of how many United Kingdom exporters have been visited by her Department's inspectors in relation to the use of Open General Export Licences; and if she will place details of these inspections in the Library. [20032]

Mrs. Roche: Two hundred and eighty one UK exporters have been visited by Export Control Organisation Compliance Offers in relation to the use of Open General Export Licences in the period between 1 April 1995 and 12 November 1997. These statistics were only consistently recorded separately after 1 April 1995.

Disclosure by the Government of the outcome of these visits could reasonably be expected to harm the competitive position of the companies concerned. Therefore this information comes within the category of information "third party's commercial confidences" which is exempt from the commitments to provide information in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Indonesia Air Show

Mr. Todd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support the United Kingdom Government are giving to United Kingdom companies planning to attend the Indonesia Air Show being held in Jakarta in June 1998. [19946]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department has offered support under the Trade Fair Support Scheme for the Society of British Aerospace Companies to organise a group of UK companies to exhibit at the show. Eligible companies will [illegible]

Employment Pacts

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 15, to what extent section 2.1 of the Information Report of the Economic and Social Committee on territorial employment pacts (Reg/121, CES 656/97) will apply to the United Kingdom-nominated schemes; and if she will make a statement. [20536]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government proposed the ten UK pilot projects for Territorial Employment Pacts on the basis of their likely local and regional impact on economic development and job creation. The Economic and Social Committee's report provides interesting background on the potential of Pacts throughout the EU, which local partnerships may wish to take into account as they develop their activities.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she plans to adopt the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment in its current form; and if she will make a statement. [15180]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The Government support the general aims of the proposed MAI. Many issues remain to be resolved. We are working hard to achieve a successful outcome to the negotiations by April 1998.

Late Payments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how her proposals for dealing with problems arising from late payment will protect small firms from immediate cash flow problems. [19864]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 11 December 1997]: The Government are determined to ensure that small firms benefit from the increased competitiveness that a healthy cash flow can bring. That is why we are committed to changing the payment culture in the UK by bringing forward a comprehensive range of new proposals to tackle the late payment of commercial debt including legislation to give business a right to claim interest. The legislation, introduced on 10 December, will provide suppliers with a statutory right to claim interst on commercial debt.

The Government also recognise the importance of effective credit management in reducing the incidence of late payment and are working with all the main small firms organisations and representatives from the credit management, factoring and trade credit banking and insurance sectors to encourage business support organisations and others to assist small firms with their credit management procedures and to promote a better payment culture.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her estimate of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) it agencies and (c) its (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if she will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15211]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Disaggregated information in the form requested is not available for the Department and the non-departmental public bodies and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

I have asked Agency Chief Executives to reply to the hon. Member as they have their own budgetary responsibility for travel and subsistence costs.

Letter from John Holden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 12 December 1997:

I have been asked to respond to your question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding estimates of expenditure on overseas travel for Companies House. The information you seek is as follows:

Year	£
1991–92	26,195
1992–93	17,640
1993–94	20,949
1994–95	12,049
1995–96	11,984
1996–97	11,217
May to September 1997	4,024

Information on earlier years and a more detailed analysis can only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Letter from Paul Hartnack to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 12 December 1997:

I am replying for the Patent Office to your Question to the President of the Board of Trade about overseas travel.

The total expenditure on overseas travel, including air fares and other associated expenditure is:

1992–93: £164,087

1993–94: £172,921

1994–95: £184,754

1995–96: £225,682

1996–97: £233,887

1 May to 30 September 1997: £107,966

Further disaggregation of the above and expenditure for 1980/81, 1987/88, 1990/91 and 1991/92 are not available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 12 December 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about expenditure on overseas travel. I regret that the disaggregated information on the basis you request is not available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 12 December 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about The Insolvency Service's air fares and other overseas travel expenditure since 1980–81.

Disaggregated information in the form requested is not available

Letter from Roger Louth to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 12 December 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about overseas travel and provide a breakdown to show 1) air fares and 2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive, who is currently away from the office. The information for the Radiocommunications Agency, which is only available in an aggregated form, for the periods quoted is as follows:

1990–91: £243,100

1991–92: £399,185

1992–93: £425,000 (Note 1)

1993–94: £434,503

1994–95: £538,202

1995–96: £659,974

1996–97: £715,215

1997–98: (May to September): £287,121

Note 1 This figure is an estimate only as the information for that year is not readily available.

The Radiocommunications Agency was set up with effect from 2 April 1990. Expenditure on overseas travel and subsistence before that date was the responsibility of the DTI and is not available.

Letter from Ian Jones to Mr. Malcolm Bruce dated 12 December 1997:

I have been asked by the President of the Board of Trade to reply, in respect of the Employment Tribunals Service (ETS), to your question about expenditure on overseas travel.

The ETS was established as an executive agency on 1 April 1997. Prior to that date its expenditure was met by the Department of Trade and Industry and, before July 1995, by the Employment Department. No expenditure on overseas travel was incurred between 1 May 1997 and 30 September 1997.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her estimate of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15210]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Disaggregated information is the form requested in respect of non-departmental public bodies, and for the financial year 1980–81 in respect of the Department and it agencies, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Social Chapter

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the impact of the European social chapter on employment in the United Kingdom. [14335]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 13 November 1997]: The Social Chapter is a good opportunity to implement decent minimum standards of fair treatment at work to which all employees should be entitled [illegible] impact on employment in the United Kingdom. We will use our influence to ensure that any new legislation promotes flexibility and employability and contributes to competitiveness, without placing excessive burdens on businesses.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

[illegible] Initiative

he has made of the effectiveness of the rough sleepers initiative in the Victoria area. [19503]

Mr. Raynsford: The most recent head counts by voluntary sector organisations show that the number of people sleeping rough in central London on any one night is around 280. In the Victoria area, the number of people sleeping rough in the May 1997 street count was 58.

Independent research into earlier phases of the RSI (1990–93 and 1993–96) has shown that the Initiative has been successful in helping many thousands of people to start a new life away from the streets. Victoria is one of five central London areas which attract large numbers of rough sleepers. It is not possible to disaggregate research data on the effectiveness of the Initiative in the Victoria area from that for central London as a whole. We expect to let a research contract to evaluate the effectiveness of the third phase of the Initiative (1996–99) early next year.

The Social Exclusion Unit, announced by the Prime Minister on 8 December will have tackling issues surrounding street living including rough sleeping and the causes of rough sleeping as one of its priorities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the total non-domestic rates collected by each local authority in the current financial year. [20128]

Ms Armstrong: Information on the amounts of non-domestic rates collected by local authorities in the financial year 1997–98 is not yet available. I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the amounts which local authorities calculated as their provisional contribution to the non-domestic rates pool for 1997–98.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his forecast of the level of spending by English local authorities in 1998–99; and what the percentage change in real terms is compared to 1997–98. [20550]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has not made any forecast of the level of spending by English local authorities in 1998–99. The level will depend on the spending decisions of individual local authorities.

Local Authority Transport

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the capital settlement for local authority transport. [20552]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We aim to announce the settlement before Parliament rises for the Christmas Recess.

Gilbert's Animal By-Products

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) for how long the Environment Agency has been investigating waste [illegible]

(2) what steps the Environment Agency has taken to establish whether the condensate produced by Gilbert's Animal By-Products as a by-product of its recycling activities is classified as a waste. [19793]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 10 December 1997]: Whether or not a substance is waste must be determined on the facts of the case and ultimately the interpretation of the law is a matter for the Courts. However, the Environment Agency's responsibilities for the management and enforcement of the waste management licensing system under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 may require it to take a view on whether a particular substance is waste.

I understand that when the Environment Agency was formed on 1 April 1996 it took over an investigation initiated by the former waste regulation authority, Staffordshire County Council, into the spreading on agricultural land of condensate from the rendering plant operated by John Pointon and Sons, formerly Gilbert's Animal By-products Ltd.

The Environment Agency has continued this investigation with the aim of establishing the facts of the case and reaching a view on whether or not the condensate is waste. In so doing, I understand that the Environment Agency has investigated instances in which the condensate has been spread on agricultural land, has obtained analyses of the condensate, has investigated the methods by which the condensate is produced and following internal legal advice has sought an opinion from Counsel.

A decision on whether to initiate a prosecution will be taken by the Environment Agency on conclusion of its investigations. I understand the Agency hopes to be able to take its decision shortly.

Members' Offices

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the amount of national non-domestic rates not collected as a result of local authorities providing offices to hon. Members free of charge. [20263]

Ms Amstrong [holding answer 11 December 1997]: No. Local authority property is liable for rates. The use of that property by hon. Members does not affect that liability. Each billing authority has a statutory duty to collect the rates due on properties in its area—including those on its own properties. It is for the auditors to check whether an authority has fulfilled its statutory responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the revenues lost by local authorities as a result of concessions made to hon. Members whose constituency offices are provided rent free by local authorities. [20266]

Ms Amstrong [holding answer 11 December 1997]: No.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the [illegible]

(2) what data his Department collates on councils making available local offices free of business rates to Members of Parliament; if he will estimate the cost of such arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [20385]

Ms Armstrong: The terms on which local authorities make local offices available to hon. Members is a matter for them. Local authority property is liable for rates. The use of that property by hon. Members does not affect that liability. Each billing authority has a statutory duty to collect the rates due on properties in its area—including those on its own properties. It is for the auditors to check whether an authority has fulfilled its statutory responsibilities in this regard.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the response to the consultation on regional development agencies. [20545]

Mr. Caborn: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 106.

Business Rates

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the exemption from business rates under the Local Government Act 1988 enjoyed by bed-and-breakfast accommodation providers with up to six beds. [20578]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no plans to change the exemption from business rates for anyone who offers bed-and-breakfast accommodation in their home to six or fewer people. These small scale providers offer welcome extra bed spaces in the peak summer months and much needed accommodation in the more remote areas which would not support larger guest houses or hotels.

Council Tax

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a table showing the Band D council tax increase for each billing local authority in England, (a) in cash terms and (b) in percentage terms, based on the assumption that all councils spend at the provisional capping limit. [20539]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the information requested.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department has current dealings with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has current dealings with many non-governmental organisations and suppliers which are not known to be millennium compliant. However, contractual arrangements stipulate Millennium compliance where this is deemed essential to the continuity of the business function or operation. The Department and its Executive Agencies are actively seeking Millennium compliance statements from suppliers where business continuity is an issue.

There are no central plans at the present time to cease dealings with organisations or suppliers that are not millennium compliant—each case is treated on its own merits. For example the Planning Inspectorate no longer purchase goods where assurances on Millennium compliance are not given.

Carbon Emissions

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the amount of extra energy which pensioners will be able to purchase (a) this winter and (b) next winter on receipt of the extra (i) £20 and (ii) £50 allocated in the pre-budget statement; and what estimate he has made of the impact on carbon emissions. [18545]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

It is not practicable to provide an estimate as it is unclear that all money will be spent on additional heating; in practice many pensioners will use this money to reduce existing fuel bills.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pensions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost to the Exchequer of raising the state pension in line with earnings in the current year over the pension payable in 1996–97; and what would be the net additional cost if the link between pensions and earnings had not been ended in 1980. [17364]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 November 1997]: The additional net cost to the Exchequer of raising State Pensions in line with earnings from April 1997 is estimated to be £530 million 1997–98.[1]

If the link between pensions and earnings had continued since 1979 to date the additional net cost to the Department in 1997–98 is estimated to be £11.4 billion[2].

Notes:

[1] Figure is rounded to £10 million.

[2] Figure is rounded to nearest £100 million.

1. These estimates are in respect of contributory Retirement Pension and linked benefits. The gross costs were estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Net costs were calculated by using income related benefit offset ratios.

May 1996 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry: both uprated to 1997–98 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1997 Departmental Report.

Pensions Act 19995 (Consultation)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the (a) title, (b) date, (c) consultation period and (d) number of responses of each consultation regarding subordinate legislation under the Pensions Act 1995; and if she will make a statement. [14268]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The information has been placed in the Library.

There has been wide consultation on all of the secondary legislation made under powers in the Pensions Act 1995. All of the proposals have been discussed extensively with the pensions interests and others at every stage of their development. This consultation produced a large number of responses, both in writing and during discussions. Information on the precise number of responses is not available.

In addition, as part of the Pensions Review, we are seeking ways in which we can further support and strengthen the existing framework of occupational pensions and ways to improve the regulation of pensions.

National Insurance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will alter the method of calculation of National Insurance contributions to ensure that differences in the pay-period of two identically paid individuals do not lead to different levels of contribution being payable. [20391]

Mr. Denham: The arrangements for the assessment of National Insurance contributions help people who work for only part of the year or who have irregular earnings to build up entitlement to contributory pensions and benefits. As far as is possible they prevent significant differences arising between the contributions paid by people depending on the period over which their employer chooses to pay them.

As my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said in his pre-Budget speech on 25 November, the Government are looking at the scope for bringing the National Insurance structure for the low paid more closely into line with income tax. This work will include consideration of a number of aspects of the National Insurance contribution system.

Sensory Impairments

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research her Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to examine the degree to which sensory impairments are a contributing factor in the low take-up of income-related benefit amongst pensioners. [20602]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department commissioned a survey of the take-up of benefits which ... [illegible] ... recipients of data from the ...

We have now commissioned research to identify the most important barriers to pensioners not claiming the Income Support to which they are entitled.

We are determined to get help to the million pensioners who are not taking up their entitlement to Income Support, and will be running a number of pilot schemes from April next year to find the best way to help them to claim their entitlement.

Mortgage Interest Support

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the sample base used to calculate the rate of mortgage interest support payable by her Department to ensure that it is properly representative of the different types of lending institutions active in the UK mortgage market. [20390]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 856.

Lone Parents

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 186–201, what she estimates to be the total saving in 1998–99 from expenditure on lone parent benefits by not increasing in line with the annual rise in prices (a) child benefit for the eldest and only child of a lone parent, (b) council tax benefit family premium, lone parent rate, (c) housing benefit family premium, lone parent rate and (d) income support family premium, lone parent rate. [20635]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Benefit	Savings £ million
Child benefit	20
Council tax benefit	1
Housing benefit	3
Income support	20
Total	40

1. Savings below £10 million rounded to the nearest £1 million.
2. Savings above £10 million rounded to the nearest £5 million.
3. Sums may not add due to rounding.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if her Department has current dealings with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) suppliers which are not millennium compliant; and on what date her Department will cease to deal with (i) non-governmental organisations and (ii) suppliers which are not millennium compliant. [20522]

Mr. Field: Yes. Examples are banks, building societies and many other suppliers of goods and services which are not yet fully millennium compliant. We have identified the organisations who provide data for the Department ... [illegible]

The Department also makes use of a range of standard software packages for internal use. We are in discussion with our suppliers to ensure that these are, or will become, Year 2000 compliant where necessary.

The Department's Year 2000 Project is working closely with all its external organisations and suppliers. However, if we become aware that an organisation or supplier will not become Year 2000 compliant to our timetable, in accordance with Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) guidance, we will review our contractual relationship with them, and consider alternative sources of supply.

HEALTH

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people receiving renal dialysis on the NHS were aged over (a) 60, (b) 70, (c) 80 and (d) 90 years in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the equivalent figures in 1992. [15971]

Mr. Boateng: Figures in the form requested for 1992 are not available. In 1993 a survey of all providers of renal treatment was carried out by the Wessex Institute of Public Health. The results of this National Renal Review were published in 1996. A follow up survey was conducted last year which has collected data for services in 1995. The results of this survey are due to be published shortly. The following figures for the numbers of people receiving renal dialysis aged over 60 in 1993 and 1995 in England have been taken from these surveys. The 1995 figures are provisional:

	Aged 60 and over	70 and over	80 and over	90 and over
1993	4,189	1,968	231	12
1995	5,074	2,534	388	8

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the memorandum he sent to the Prime Minister on 14 October setting out his assessment of the proposed EU directive on tobacco sponsorship. [16748]

Ms Jowell: No. The memorandum of 14 October is exempt from publication under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Pathology Services (Kent)

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what factors led to the commissioning of the 1995 report Review of Pathology Services at Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust; [17796]

(2) what steps were taken to bring the findings of the 1995 report Review of Pathology Services at Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust to (a) public notice and (b) the notice of clinicians who procured the services referred to in the report. [17797]

Mr. Boateng: We understand from the Kent and Canterbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust that the report was commissioned by the Chief Executive to enable the trust to develop a formal strategy in relation to Pathology services. The overall aim and objectives of the report was to ensure that any future development achieved the following standards:

A service which is clinically effective, producing work of a high quality that is subject to regular, rigorous and transparent audit.

A service that is efficient and cost effective.

A service that is progressive, and focused on future requirements rather than past attainments.

A service that is properly trained and fully equipped.

A service that is responsive to the needs of its customers, notably referring consultants and other hospital doctors, general practitioners and patients.

A service that has a flexible outlook in work practice and is multi-skilled.

A service which is staffed at appropriate levels.

A service that is integrated, both internally and with other departments throughout the trust, with all aspects of teaching, training, research and development.

It was an internal document and was circulated to all Clinical Directors for dissemination in each Clinical Directorate and was also circulated to all Consultant and Senior Scientific staff within the Pathology Directorate. However, the October 1997 report of the Review of Cervical Screening Services at Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust noted that "the 1995 MPA Consultants Report, as part of the three East Kent Trusts' Pathology Review, raised a number of concerns about the cytology department and recommended its integration with the William Harvey Hospital site and relocation there. This report does not seem to have been widely discussed within the trust and in any case was not supported by the chief executives group."

The 1997 report recommended that

"the trust board should review the current arrangements for the overall management of pathology services still under its control and ensure there are clear roles, responsibilities and reporting lines for all staff involved in the running of the laboratories."

The South Thames Regional Office is asking the trust and health authority to follow through on this recommendation in light of the wider recommendations made in that report.

Breast Cancer Treatment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on shortfalls within the NHS of specialists involved in breast cancer treatment; and what measures he proposes to address such shortfalls. [18509]

Mr. Boateng: The Specialty Workforce Advisory Group (SWAG) advises the National Health Service Executive and the Welsh Office on the number of higher specialist trainees needed, to ensure an adequate supply of properly trained doctors in each specialty. It carries out annual reviews of each specialty's need for consultants. SWAG has identified the cancer specialties, including those which are involved with the treatment of breast cancer, as having significant shortages.

For 1996–97 and 1997–98, SWAG recommended increases in the number of higher specialist trainees, in the cancer specialties. It has recommended that these be treated as a priority.

School Nurses

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many school nurses have been employed by each health authority in England in each of the last five years. [18712]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not available for 1995 and 1996. Information for 1992 to 1994 will be placed in the Library.

The information placed in the Library is taken from the Department of Health's annual non-medical work force census. School nurses are not separately identifiable from other community nursing staff after the 1994 non-medical work force census because of the introduction of a new, simpler set of occupation codes used to classify non-medical staff.

Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria were used in the selection of the preferred tenderers for the pre-registration nursing and midwifery education in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight by the NHS Executive South and West. [19338]

Mr. Milburn: The criteria used for the pre-registration nursing and midwifery education contract in Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire and the Isle of Wight were drawn up by a Steering Group composed of representatives from the three education consortia (health authorities and National Health Service trusts) in the area. The broad criteria categories against which bids were judged were:

- overall educational institution
- facilities and service delivery resources
- quality of the staff and faculty
- arrangements for clinical placements
- quality of course provision
- development of students
- overall quality management arrangements
- financial factors.

In assessing the bids the first seven categories were given equal weighting scores totalling 63 per cent., while financial factors were given a weighting of 37 per cent.

NHS Contracts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend the tendering rules for NHS contracts to allow alternative contract arrangement to be considered. [19334]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service bodies currently have a range of options for the tendering of contracts but any arrangements must comply with their own Standing Financial Instructions and the relevant domestic and European procurement legislation.

Phantom Limb Pain

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into phantom limb pain. [19692]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland ha funded two studies into phantom limb pain. Both were undertaken at Glasgow Caledonian University and are entitled "Improving care provision for amputees with phantom limb pain" and "Chronic phantom limb pain: relationship to psychological adjustment, patient characteristics and care provision".

The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The Council is not currently undertaking any research specifically investigating phantom limb pain; however it provides support for areas which may be indirectly relevant to phantom limb pain including general pain research and basis neurobiology which will underpin and inform future work in this area.

The Department of Health's Policy Research Programme and the National Health Service Research and Development Programme are not currently funding any work into phantom limb pain.

Patient Pack Initiative

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement the Patient Pack Initiative; and if he will make a statement. [19804]

Ms Jowell: Implementing the patient pack initiative, as presently structured, would be complex and has significant financial implications for the National Health Service. We have set out these concerns to the professional and industry groups concerned and are considering whether it will be necessary to implement the European Council Labelling and Leaflet Directive by other means.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the financial implications of implementing the Patient Pack Initiative. [19806]

Ms Jowell: The Department has produced illustrative estimates of the net costs for the Family Health Services and the Prescription Pricing Authority that would have arisen between 1997–98 and 2001–02 if the proposals inherited from the previous administration for introducing patient pack dispensing had been implemented from November 1997. These estimates indicated net costs, at 1997–98 prices, of £4 million in 1997–98, £16–19 million in 1998–99, £24–26 million in 1999–00, £17–18 million in 2000–01 and £13–14 million in 2001–02.

Medicines Labelling and Leaflet Directive

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the EU medicines labelling and leaflet directive. [19805]

Ms. Jowell: The European Union Directive 92/27/EEC on the labelling of medicines for human use and on package inserts was implemented into United Kingdom legislation by means of :

The Medicines (Labelling) Amendment Regulation SI 1992 No. 3273.

The Medicines (Leaflets) Amendment Regulations SI 1992 No. 3274.

The Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations SI 1994 No. 3274.

By 31 December 1998 all medicines on the UK market will have labelling and patient information leaflets approved meeting the requirements of the European Directive. The Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulation 1994 require any person who supplies a medicinal product to ensure that it is accompanied by the relevant statutory information.

Smoking

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died from smoking-related illnesses during (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [20389]

Mr. Boateng: The Health Education Authority estimate that in the United Kingdom in 1995 at least 120,000 people died as a result of their smoking. No estimates are available for 1996.

Dianette

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the safety of the acne/contraceptive drug Dianette. [20341]

Mr. Boateng: Dianette is a medicine authorised for use in the treatment of severe acne and moderately severe hirsutism in women only. It is considered to have an acceptable level of safety in relation to its benefits. A rigorous evaluation of quality, safety and efficacy of Dianette by the Licensing Authority and its expert advisory body, the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) was carried out before a marketing authorisation was granted in 1987.

As for all medicines, Dianette has side-effects, and the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and CSM continue to monitor its safety. If new relevant evidence comes to light this is reviewed in order to ensure the risk of possible side-effects is outweighed by the benefits. Information on how to use Dianette, including its side effects and precautions in use, is available to health care professionals and to patients through the manufacturer's product information authorised by the MCA and in the British National Formulary, copies of which are available in the Library.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 302

SESSION 1997–98

1st December—12th December 1997

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
